FIXING GUARANTEED PRICES FOR WHEAT.

A proclamation by the President of the United States of America.

Whereas under and by virtue of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved by the President on the 10th day of August, 1917, it is provided among other things as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment; and differences in price for the several standard grades in the principal primary markets of the United States adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent at the principal interior primary markets as the basis. Thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guaranty within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty."

Now therefore I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers conferred upon me by said act of Congress, and especially by section 14 thereof, do hereby find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guarantee provided for in said section; and, in order to make effective the guarantee by Congress for the crop of 1919 and to assure such producers a reasonable profit, I do hereby determine and fix, and give public notice of reasonable guaranteed prices for No. 1 northern spring wheat and its equivalent at the respective principal primary markets as follows, to wit:

New York, N. Y., $2.39½ per bushel.
Philadelphia, Pa., $2.39 per bushel.
Baltimore, Md., $2.38¾ per bushel.
Newport News, Va., $2.38¾ per bushel.
Duluth, Minn., $2.22½ per bushel.
Minneapolis, Minn., $2.21½ per bushel.
Chicago, Ill., $2.26 per bushel.
St. Louis, Mo., $2.24 per bushel.
Kansas City, Mo., $2.18 per bushel.
Omaha, Nebr., $2.18 per bushel.
New Orleans, La., $2.28 per bushel.
Galveston, Tex., $2.28 per bushel.
Tacoma, Wash., $2.20 per bushel.
Seattle, Wash., $2.20 per bushel.
Portland, Oreg., $2.20 per bushel.
Astoria, Oreg., $2.20 per bushel.
San Francisco, Cal., $2.20 per bushel.
Los Angeles, Cal., $2.20 per bushel.
Salt Lake City, Utah, $2 per bushel.
Great Falls, Mont., $2 per bushel.
Pocatello, Idaho, $2 per bushel.
Spokane, Wash., $2 per bushel;

and that the guaranteed price for the other grades established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916, based on said price for No. 1 northern spring wheat at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, will assure the producers of wheat produced within the United States a reasonable profit, the guaranteed prices in the principal primary markets above mentioned being fixed by adopting No. 1 northern spring wheat or its equivalents at the principal interior markets as the basis.

For the purposes of such guaranty only, I hereby fix the guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets above mentioned for the following grades of wheat, to wit: No. 1 northern spring, No. 1 hard winter, No. 1 red winter, No. 1 Durum, No. 1 hard white. The guaranteed price at the respective principal primary markets aforesaid of all other grades of wheat established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916, shall be based on the above guaranteed prices and bear just relation thereto.

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919, and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920, to such agent or employee of the United States, or other person as may be hereafter designated, at any one of the above-mentioned cities, which are hereby declared to be the principal primary markets of the United States, and provided that such producer complies with all regulations which may be hereafter promulgated in regard to said guaranty by the President of the United States.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia, this 2d day of September, in the year of Our Lord 1918, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

WOODROW WILSON.

[SEAL.]

By the President:

ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

VALIDATION OF WAR CONTRACTS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a conference report, and move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator to what subject the report relates?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. To the validation of war contracts.

Mr. GORE. Does the Senator think it will require very long discussion?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think so.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, although I am not sure whether it is the unfinished business, for that matter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator does not need to do that.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report presented by the Senator from Oregon will not displace the unfinished business, unless the Senate adjourns before its consideration is concluded.

Mr. GORE. I withdraw the request; I did not understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into, in good faith during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, by any officer or agent acting under his authority, direction, or instruction, or that of the President, with any person, firm, or corporation for the acquisition of lands, or the use thereof, or for damages resulting from notice by the Government of its intention to acquire or use said lands, or for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition or control of equipment, materials or supplies, or for services, or for facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, when such agreement has been performed in whole or in part, or expenditures have been made or obligations incurred upon the faith of the same by any such person, firm, or corporation prior to November 12, 1918, and such agreement has not been executed in the manner prescribed by law: Provided, That in no case shall any award either by the Secretary of War or the Court of Claims include prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States and a reasonable remuneration for expenditures and obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order: Provided further, That this act shall not authorize payment to be made of any claim not presented before June 30, 1919: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall report to Congress at the beginning of its next session following June 30, 1919, a detailed statement showing the nature, terms, and conditions of every such agreement and the payment or adjustment thereof: And provided further, That no settlement of any claim arising under any such agreement shall bar the United States Government through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement nor the right of recovery of any money paid by the Government to any party under any settlement entered into or payment made under the provisions of this act, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall exist against the executors, administrators, heirs, successors, and assigns of any party or parties: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any officer or agent of the United States from criminal prosecution under the provisions of any statute of the United States for any fraud or criminal conduct: And provided further, That this act shall in no way relieve or excuse any officer or his agent from such criminal prosecution because of any irregularity or illegality in the manner of the execution of such agreement: And provided further, That in all proceedings hereunder witnesses may be compelled to attend, appear, and testify, and produce books, papers and letters, or other documents; and the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving the same shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in the trial of any criminal proceeding.

"SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction on petition of any individual, firm, company or corporation referred to in section 1 hereof to find and award fair and just compensation in the cases specified in said section in the event that such individual, firm, company or corporation shall not be willing to accept the adjustment, payment or compensation offered by the Secretary of War as hereinbefore provided, or in the event that the Secretary of War shall fail or refuse to offer a satisfactory adjustment, payment or compensation as provided for in said section.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War, through such agency as he may designate or establish, is empowered, upon such terms as he or it may determine to be in the interest of the United States, to make equitable and fair adjustments and agreements, upon the termination or in settlement or readjustment of agreements or arrangements entered into with any foreign government or governments or nationals thereof prior to November 12, 1918, for the furnishing to the American Expeditionary Forces or otherwise for war purposes of supplies, materials, facilities, services or the use of property, or for the furnishing of any thereof by the United States to any foreign government or governments, whether or not such agreements or arrangements have been entered into in accordance with applicable statutory provisions; and the other provisions of this act shall not be applicable to such adjustments.

"SEC. 4. That whenever, under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War shall make an award to any prime contractor with respect to any portion of his contract which he shall have sublet to any other person, firm, or corporation who has in good faith made expenditures, incurred obligations, rendered service, or furnished material, equipment, or supplies to such prime contractor, with the knowledge and approval of any agent of the Secretary of War duly authorized thereunto, before payment of said award the Secretary of War shall require such prime contractor to present satisfactory evidence of having paid said subcontractor or of the consent of said subcontractor to look for his compensation to said prime contractor only; and in the case of the failure of said prime contractor to present such evidence or such consent, the Secretary of War shall pay directly to said subcontractor the amount found to be due under said award; and in case of the insolvency of any prime contractor the subcontractor of said prime contractor shall have a lien upon the funds arising from said award prior and superior to the lien of any general creditor of said prime contractor.

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to adjust, liquidate, and pay such net losses as have been suffered by any person, firm, or corporation by reason of producing or preparing to produce either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in compliance with the request or demand of the Department of the Interior, the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Shipping Board, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation to supply the urgent needs of the Nation in the prosecution of the war; said minerals being enumerated in the act of Congress approved October 5, 1918, entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply.'

"The said Secretary shall make such adjustments and payments in each case as he shall determine to be just and equitable; that the decision of said Secretary shall be conclusive and final, subject to the limitation hereinafter provided; that all payments and expenses incurred by said Secretary, including personal services, traveling and subsistence expenses, supplies, postage, printing, and all other expenses incident to the proper prosecution of this work, both in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem essential and proper, shall be paid from the funds appropriated by the said act of October 5, 1918, and that said funds and appropriations shall continue to be available for said purpose until such time as the said Secretary shall have fully exercised the authority herein granted and performed and completed the duties hereby provided and imposed: Provided, however, That the payments and disbursements made under the provisions of this section for and in connection with the payments and settlements of the claims herein described and the said expenses of administration shall in no event exceed the sum of $8,500,000: And provided further, That said Secretary shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the Department of the Interior within three months from and after the approval of this act: And provided further, That no claim shall be allowed or paid by said Secretary unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the said Secretary that the expenditures so made or obligations so incurred by the claimant were made in good faith for or upon property which contained either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in sufficient quantities to be of commercial importance: And provided further, That no claims shall be paid unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said Secretary that moneys were invested or obligations were incurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, and prior to November 12, 1918, in a legitimate attempt to produce either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten for the needs of the Nation for the prosecution of the war, and that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of said claims, and that no investment for merely speculative purposes shall be recognized in any manner by said Secretary: And provided further, That the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement nor the right to recover any money paid by the Government to any party under and by virtue of the provisions of this section, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend to the executors, administrators, heirs, and assigns of any party.

"That a report of all operations under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year.

"That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States: Provided further, That in determining the net losses of any claimant the Secretary of the Interior shall, among other things, take into consideration and charge to the claimant the then market value of any ores or minerals on hand belonging to the claimant, and also the salvage or usable value of any machinery or other appliances which may be claimed was purchased to equip said mine for the purpose of complying with the request or demand of the agencies of the Government above mentioned in the manner aforesaid."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the conference report, because it does not include matter that was passed by the House and which, substantially in the same form, was passed by the Senate. The matter to which I refer was left out of the conference report. I call the attention of the Chair first to Rule XXVII, which provides:

> Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses.

I call the attention of the Chair to the wording of the rule, which says that the conferees shall not "strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses."

I read from page 3 of the bill as passed by the House:

> And provided further, That the names of such contractors and the amounts of such partial or final settlements shall be filed with the Clerk of the House, for the information of Congress, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or in the Official Bulletin or as a public document 10 days before confirmation and payment is authorized upon such contracts.

On page 14 of the bill which passed the Senate on that subject is found the following:

> And provided further, That the names of such contractors and the amounts of such partial or final settlements shall be filed with the Clerk of the House, for the information of Congress, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that up to that point both bills are the same—> or as a public document within 10 days after such confirmation.

Mr. President, the gist of my contention is that matter has been left out which was agreed upon by both Houses, and, under the terms of the rule, that makes the report subject to a point of order. I refer to the provision that the names of the contractors and the amounts of such partial or final settlements should be filed with the Clerk of the House for the information of Congress and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is true that in the Senate a slight change was made in the remainder of that clause; that is, reference to the Official Bulletin was left out, and instead of the publication being required before confirmation it was required under the Senate bill to be made 10 days after confirmation; in other words, there is a difference as to time and as to publication in the Official Bulletin; but it was agreed by both Houses that there should be a publication of these data. This provision ought not to have been left out of the conference report, in my judgment, and I make the point of order that the conference report should be recommitted under the terms of the Rule XXVII, found on page 35 of the rules.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield first to one and then to the other of the Senators. I yield first to the Senator from Utah and then to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted to ask the Senator if the time fixed was the same in the House bill as in the Senate bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. It was 10 days before confirmation in the House and 10 days after such confirmation in the Senate. In other words, there was just a difference in time of applying that matter which had been agreed upon by both Houses.

Mr. SMOOT. Then what is the Senator complaining of in substance?

Mr. McKELLAR. The substance is identical. The question of time is immaterial, as it seemed to me at the time and as I believe now.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the mode of publication is identical.

Mr. McKELLAR. As to the mode of publication, the only difference is that it was left out of the Official Bulletin, and the Official Bulletin may or may not be in existence at the time the publication is made. I do not think that is material. I do not think either one of the two changes—the Official Bulletin or the time of publication—is material, but that the essential matter was the publication of this information, and it was agreed upon by both Houses.

Mr. SMOOT. And left out in the conference report?

Mr. McKELLAR. That was left out entirely. The Senator from Utah is a parliamentarian, and I should like to ask his opinion about the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair rule first, and then any Senator can take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair, or the Senator from Utah can express his opinion on the ruling of the Chair.

The Chair has heretofore gone to great lengths in sustaining the rule of the Senate with reference to the insertion of new matter and the omission of matter agreed to by the two Houses. In an early opinion after this rule was adopted, the point of order was sustained where there was a section in the original bill of the House and a section in the original bill of the Senate which were identically the same. That ruling went further than the precedents of the House of Representatives have been, from the days of Speaker Colfax down. Those rulings are uniformly to the effect that where the House passes a bill and the Senate strikes out all after the enacting clause and passes another bill, when it goes to conference the matter is practically in the hands of the conferees to report such a bill, germane to the subject of the conference, as the conferees may think proper, and then it is for the two Houses to say whether or not they will adopt the conference report. As heretofore stated, however, the Chair, being extremely desirous of sustaining this rule of the Senate, did sustain a point of order under circumstances of a bill enacted by the House, all after the enacting clause stricken out, and a new bill inserted in the Senate, where in both bills there was a section identical in language.

Now, let us see where we are.

This is a proviso contained in each bill. It is not identical in the two bills at all, beyond the fact that each required the names of the contractors and the amounts of partial or final settlements to be filed with the House for the information of Congress. There it ends, so far as the terms are identical in the two bills. After that, in the House bill it is to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or in the Official Bulletin or as a public document 10 days before confirmation and payment is authorized upon such contract. The Chair is inclined to think that the important thing in the bill was the requirement that it be printed somewhere 10 days before confirmation and payment. In the Senate bill it is to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or as a public document within 10 days after such confirmation.

The Chair thinks there was just about 20 days in controversy before the conferees, and that they had a right to strike the proviso out. The Chair overrules the point of order. If Senators desire either provision retained, they can vote to reject the conference report for that reason.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon knows the situation out in our western country with reference to the production of spruce. I have not had time and opportunity to examine this conference report. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not, under the terms of the conference report which is now presented, the contractors with the Spruce Production Co. would have relief under it on their contracts?

The Senator will remember that the language of the Senate bill was "any agency of the Government," and so forth. I have not heard whether or not that language is retained in the conference report.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will call the Senator's attention to the language of the first section:

> That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into in good faith during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, by any officer or agent acting under his authority, direction, or instruction, or that of the President.

I will say to the Senator that this question was in my mind at the time. It seems to me that the Spruce Production Corporation is an agency of the Government acting under the authority of the President. If it is not, this bill will not cover it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is an agency; but would it be considered an agent? The Senate bill contained the word "agency" as well as "agent." Now that language is apparently stricken out.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. After getting into conference we had a good deal of controversy and a good deal of trouble, as the Senator knows, to reach any agreement at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I know that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The matter has been back and forth between the two Houses for a week or more; and in order to reach any agreement at all we practically took the House bill as a basis for reaching an agreement. If that language has been left out, it has been left out because it was not in the House bill. I will say to the Senator, however, that we did insert language in conference in order to meet the situation which the Senator suggests, not only where these contracts were made by any officer or agent acting under the Secretary of War, but where they were made by anyone acting under the authority or direction of the President. I thought that was broad enough to cover it. It may not be. I am perfectly frank to say so.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. KNOX. The point that is made by the Senator from Washington, it seems to me, is rather a technical one. I recall very distinctly that the sole and only purpose for which this corporation was formed was to act as an agent or an agency for the Government, and I have not the slightest doubt myself that the language which has just been read by the Senator from Oregon covers the situation completely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am very glad, indeed, to have the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania with reference to the matter. I am inclined to think that it covers it, too, but I should like to be sure of it if it is at all possible, because, as the Senator knows, this Spruce Production Corporation was organized for the sole purpose of aiding the War Department and the Government in securing timber and materials for airplane work, and the contracts that these people made with the Spruce Production Corporation were, in fact, made for the Government, for the War Department.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will permit me just a moment. If the Senator will compare this section 1 with the section as originally passed by the House, he will find that we extended it further than contracts, express or implied, made by the Secretary of War and his agents. We extended it by the addition of giving the same right to contracts made by agents of those acting for or under the direction of the President. I think it is broad enough.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think this Spruce Production Corporation was acting more directly under the Secretary of War than under the President. I think it was headed by some of the War Department officers. At any rate, these people who furnished materials and made their contracts made them with officers of the Army, and they seemed to think that they were dealing directly with the War Department. I think this corporation was more nearly an agent of the War Department than of the President; but it certainly was an agent of one or the other, it seems to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, were they getting out materials for aircraft production?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; for the manufacture of airplanes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should think they were operating under the Signal Corps branch of the Army, and they were either acting under orders of the Secretary of War or under orders of the President. The President had authority there, in connection, I think, with the material for production of airplanes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They made their contracts with the Spruce Production Corporation. The Spruce Production Corporation, I have no doubt, was acting under the Signal Corps. I think its officers were largely officers of the Signal Corps, and so it seems to me that it is covered by this language, but I wanted to have the RECORD show the opinion of the Senators in charge of the matter.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the amendment, but to protest against the ruling of the former occupant of the chair. I will say, as the Senator who proposed the amendment to the rules, that it was the intention of the amendment to prohibit conferees from doing what, according to the statement of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], was done in this case. I did not appeal from the decision of the Chair because I know the importance of this legislation and how anxious the chairman is to get the matter disposed of to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to enter my protest, so that the RECORD will not show that the ruling was agreed to by common consent. I do not expect to take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair. The reason why paragraph 2 of Rule XXVII was amended was because conferees included new legislation of the most vital character, legislation that was not acted upon by either House, and the practice grew to such proportions that the Senate decided that the only way to protect themselves was to amend the rules; and the rule, as above stated, was amended. If that action of the Senate can be set aside by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting entirely new legislation, as will be the case if the ruling just made is allowed to stand, if this ruling is a correct interpretation of the rule, we will have to amend the rules again.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as the matter left out is concerned, in the Senator's judgment, does not this ruling abrogate the rule itself to that extent?

Mr. SMOOT. That is my opinion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, has the title been amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I gave notice of some brief remarks this afternoon on the subject of the league of nations.

Which shall it be, Mr. President—war, and continued preparations for war, or a league of nations? Those are the alternatives.

Heretofore the world, through all the centuries down to the present time, has been afflicted and inflicted with the curse of war. The larger part of governmental appropriations, here and elsewhere, has been for the burdens of war. Through all the centuries this has continued. Every generation has sent its men to the slaughter. One eloquent critic of this proposed league of nations has read into the RECORD recently a list of 50 wars that have devastated the Old World during the last century. America has not been free from the curse. Besides our own Revolutionary War, our Civil War, and our Indian wars, we have had the War with Mexico, the War with Spain, the War with Germany and Austria-Hungary, and we have felt, even though using every effort to keep out of war, its awful effects. Our experiences in the war from which we are just now emerging have convinced us that we are a part of the world; that whenever the world is convulsed with war we are going to suffer from it, and probably participate in it. We, too, therefore, find ourselves face to face with the question, Shall it be war, and preparations for war, or shall it be a league of nations?

Senators who criticize the league of nations seem to ignore the alternative. Let us face it. What if we have no league of nations?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I must, I regret to say, decline to yield on account of lack of time.

What if the peace to be signed becomes like other peaces that have been signed—merely a truce while nations make ready for another war? That inevitably means a resumption of war preparations on an increased scale.

Before this war the United States and the four great nations associated with the United States in forming this league of peace were expending about $600,000,000 a year in military preparations and about $600,000,000 a year in naval preparations. It is easy to see, if the league of nations fails and international chaos follows, that the world will sag back into the despair and desperation of a constant prospect of war. Every nation will become an armed camp, and military preparations and naval preparations will go on upon an unheard-of scale. The burdens of the people in that case will be enormously increased over what they have been in the past. There may not be a war for years; but the preparations for war will threaten bankruptcy, and they will certainly bend the backs of the taxpayers as they never have been bent before.

I am speaking now only of preparations for war, Mr. President; but what of actual war?

First, we have the cost in money, the least important and the least terrible penalty we pay for war. The war just concluded is estimated to have cost the seven nations which bore its burden something like one hundred and forty thousand million dollars. The taxpayers of those nations will stagger under that burden for generations yet unborn if no relief is afforded in the cost of war preparations. The late war cost 6,000,000 lives and millions more of cripples. It has destroyed hundreds of towns. It has widowed millions of wives. It has brought in its train the inevitable consequences of war—pestilence and famine. One of the war diseases alone has cost this country over 300,000 lives of the civilian population. It has let loose and inflamed the passions and lusts of men and crushed and humiliated millions of women. Massacre, torture, and assassinations have accompanied it. Law and order have been overthrown. Bolshevism and anarchy have been propagated. The confidence of men in government has been shaken. It will never be restored until governments devise some way to end war.

Mr. President, I have observed that so far in this discussion most of the opponents of the league of nations are those who would oppose any league of nations. They enormously magnify the possible evils and dangers of a league and convey the impression that the United States is giving up everything and gaining nothing by this great compact of honor and justice and peace between the nations of the earth.

Two of my eloquent colleagues attacked it as a form of internationalism. They object to internationalism. They are too late. Internationalism has come, and we must choose what form the internationalism shall take. We must choose between the internationalism of justice and honor and peace and mutual support between the civilized nations of the earth and the internationalism of the socialist, the anarchist, the Bolshevist.

Humanity will not long tolerate a condition of recurring war over questions between governments that can be settled by peaceful methods along the lines of justice and reason. The mass of men will not allow themselves to be forever led to the slaughter uselessly and unnecessarily. The taxpayers will not submit indefinitely to spoliation by enormous taxes to make unending preparation for unceasing wars.

Senators who oppose the league of nations have apparently ignored the enormous evil from which the world suffers. They have apparently ignored the rising tide of protest not only among the people of the United States but among the people of the whole civilized world against war. If we fail to adopt an internationalism of governments that will unite to end the wars we shall be face to face with the internationalism of the individual socialist. We can not ignore the fact that the Russian millions are now thoroughly committed to the communistic government. We can not deny the fact that France and Italy, the one a republic and the other a limited monarchy, are largely under the control of socialistic ideas and socialistic leaders. No other leader could get control in the state of public opinion. We can not ignore the fact that Germany is being rapidly and radically reorganized into a socialistic nation of 75,000,000 souls.

We are impressed by the growth of socialism in Great Britain and the acceptation of socialistic ideas by British leaders.

War and preparation for war, the burdens of war, the horrors of war are largely responsible for this development in every nation of Europe. It spreads over national boundaries as easily as trade and commerce and much more irresistibly. If war and the preparation for war are to continue the chief business and the chief expense of National Government we may yet expect a development of socialism and Bolshevism in the United States. Nor will it be confined to orations on soap boxes in the public streets of our great cities, but it will appear here in Congress, in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, just as it has appeared in the parliaments of the Old World. It will affect legislation in this country as it has in other countries. It will seize political power in this country as it has in other countries.

I therefore repeat, we must choose between the internationalism of the league of nations bound together in a society for mutual protection, with honor and justice and liberty and self-government as the standard, and the internationalism of the Socialist.

But, Mr. President, let me discuss briefly the purpose of the league. I admit that we have not fully analyzed it in the short time we have had to make the acquaintance of the constitution as proposed. It is at the present time only a proposition, being a unanimous committee report to the congress of nations.

The purpose of the league of nations set forth in the articles is to maintain international peace. To this end its members agree that they will in no case resort to war with each other until they have submitted to arbitration the dispute between them, or submitted to an inquiry by the executive council, and not even then will any member resort to war until the arbitration has concluded or the inquiry of the executive council has been finished, and not even then until three months thereafter. There is thus provided by this ingenious machinery, whenever a dispute arises between any of the nations in the league, a cooling-off time of from nine months to one year, a time sufficient in all human probability to end the danger of war between the contestants.

The nations further agree, moreover, that they will not even then, after the lapse of three months, resort to war against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council if it is unanimous. There we have another block to war. There is an almost insuperable obstacle in the way of war, a solemn covenant between the nations which have entered into the league.

These agreements render war between members of the league as nearly impossible as human ingenuity can devise. To my mind it is unthinkable that any nation admitted to the league will violate this solemn covenant. I think we have passed the age when a national covenant will be considered as a scrap of paper.

If, however, any member of the league should violate this covenant and should resort to war against any other member, without arbitration or in accordance with the council, that act shall be considered an act of war against all the members of the league. Thereupon all the powers of the league are employed to bring it within control.

All trade relations are to be dissolved between every member of the league and the outlaw nation. All intercourse between the faithless nation and the other nations is to be cut off. It becomes subjected to the most intense form of economic, commercial, and financial pressure, which is to be followed by military and naval combination against the offending nation. Such penalties are certainly large enough to deter any nation even if the moral obligation of its covenant were not sufficient.

Moreover, Mr. President, the members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the political independence and territorial integrity of each member. That is a guaranty against war as strong as it can be made. Any member of the league knows that if it undertakes a war of conquest it has the whole league to deal with and not merely the nation against which it may direct itself. Had Germany known even that Great Britain was coming into the late war Germany would not have started this great war, and certainly if Germany had known when she proceeded to back up Austria in her demand against Serbia that all the other nations were coming in which finally did come in against her, Germany would certainly not have started the war, and everybody knows it.

Another very important covenant which is signed by all the nations who will become members of the league is the promise to reduce national armament to the lowest point consistent with national safety, and to make no concealment from each other of their armament-making resources and industries. This agreement also includes the promise to prevent as far as possible the manufacture of munitions and implements of war by private enterprise.

Here the makers of the league of nations have put their fingers on the remedy for the evil—the reduction of armament and the regulation or the elimination of the private manufacture for profit of armament to be sold to nations not able to make their own.

In order that this reduction of armament and the limitation of manufacture of munitions by private companies may be fairly and justly and intelligently carried out, the executive council of nine nations considers the question and submits it for the adoption of each country. Mark that! It has been charged here that the league of nations proposes to dictate to every country what sized armament it shall have, but the fact is that the league of nations, through its executive council of nine members, five of whom are the nations associated in this war, considers, discusses, and recommends to the nations who are members of the league what reduction of armament shall be made. That limitation does not go into effect until it is adopted by the Governments of those countries.

I want to make that clear, because it has been stated here upon the floor of the Senate several times that if we went into this compact we submitted ourselves to the dictation of foreigners as to what sized armaments we were to have. The truth is it would be a matter of mutual agreement between the nations through the agency of the league what limitation of armament each member nation shall submit to.

Undoubtedly, Mr. President, if this solemn covenant can be carried out in good faith for this reduction of armament, this control of the private manufacture of armament by the league, it will have an enormous effect not only in reducing the dangers of war but in reducing also the burdens of government to every country in the world. It will save to the United States hundreds of millions of dollars a year, probably thousands of millions of dollars within our lifetime.

Now, Mr. President, I want to consider some of the details of the proposed constitution. The most striking fact about this league constitution, and one which should appeal particularly to the United States, is the very ingenious, highly effective device under which its control and direction are largely intrusted to the executive council, an executive council of nine nations, five of them permanent, four of them to be elected by the body of the membership. The five permanent members of this executive council, five out of the nine, are the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. The other four will be elected from time to time as the 30 or 40 nations in the league may decide. This executive council not only has all the powers that the league has but it has a number of distinct and separate powers which are vested in it permanently.

The five permanent members whom I have named will naturally and inevitably largely shape and control the policy of the league, but the other nations, the smaller nations of the world, the nations that have been neutral in this war, will be interested in the election of the four other members who will support and to some extent influence possibly from time to time the action of the five permanent members. We do not know yet which those nations will be, but the chances are that they will change from time to time by some system of rotation. However, the five permanent members of the league, of which we are one, will be the backbone of the executive council, just as the executive council is the backbone of the league.

The executive council is to be the active governing body of the league. It must meet at least once a year and may meet much oftener. It may deal with any matter within the sphere of the league or affecting the peace of the world. Many of its powers are specified and are separate from and independent of the body of the league membership. One of these is its supervision over the limitation of armament of nations. It does not arbitrarily fix this limit, but it considers the question and proposes the limit to the various nations for their adoption. When thus adopted the limit shall not be changed without the consent of the executive council. It is also charged with the duty of advising the nations how the evil of private manufacture of arms and munitions can be limited and overcome. It is vested also with authority to advise as to the means by which the league shall help and protect any of its members when threatened with war. It also has power to make special inquiry into a dispute between members when submitted and to make recommendation of settlement within six months. It also has power to propose steps to enforce any award made by a court of arbitration to which nations may have submitted their case. It also has power to establish a court of international justice to hear cases voluntarily submitted to it by the nations. It has the power to fix the military and naval forces which each nation shall contribute in case it becomes necessary for the league to resort to force to protect a covenant of the league if broken by members. It has power to fix the conditions upon which disputes may be inquired into when they arise between a member of the league and an outside nation or between two nations not members of the league, and upon holding the inquiry to recommend such action as may be deemed best to the nations concerned. It has power, if nations outside of the league refuse to accept this inquiry, to take such action and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and end the dispute.

From the specification of these powers it will be seen that the executive council of nine nations constitutes a powerful executive, legislative, and judicial body to speak for the league and to act for the league. In those cases, however, where disputes are inquired into between members of the league the decision must be by unanimous vote to be effective, and if the decision is not unanimous it is advisory only.

To my mind the executive council is an ingenuous, just, and effective method of placing in the control of the five great nations which have successfully fought this war the permanent direction of the league, modified, however, by such influence and support as the four nations which will be chosen from time to time as the other members of the executive council may exert.

Mr. President, let me now consider some of the opposition that we have heard upon the floor of the Senate to the league of nations. When I hear Senators describe the danger which they see in entering the league, when I hear one Senator condemn one article and another a different article, and another propose a change here and another a change there, I begin to wonder whether all this great labor of the leading nations of the world, represented by their ablest men, having all possible counsel, has really created a thing which is so weak and miserable, so dangerous and so fatal to the welfare of the members that are going into it. One would think that this league, with the loftiest purposes, designed by the ablest men, inspired by the most noble spirit, was nothing but a fabric of faults, a creation of mistakes. I am reminded of the experience of the man, a perfectly healthy man, who had been reading a lot of patent-medicine advertisements and consulting several quack doctors. After he had read of all the symptoms told of in the advertisements and listened to the recital of the symptoms of disease which the quack doctor had fastened upon him, he concluded that he had every known disease in the world except housemaid's knee. So when I hear these gentlemen ready to prescribe for the league of nations, one on one thing and one on another, one tearing this out and another tearing that out, it seems to me that in considering this noble creation of these great men, representing the leading countries of the world, the political critics view the league to be in position of a man who has been listening to quack doctors and reading patent-medicine advertisements of ills that are only imaginary.

Suppose we should take these suggestions and cut the league constitution to suit each critic. The constitution of the league would be very much in the position of the boy's trousers that we have heard of in the old story. A pretty good pair of trousers had been purchased for him and brought home. He had them on. It was thought they were a little too long. So he asked his mother if she would cut them off for him a little. She said she was too busy. Then he applied to his aunt, and she was too busy. Then he applied to his sister, and she was too busy. Finally the boy went to bed, tired of trying to get the little change that seemed to be necessary. After he had gone to bed, however, during the night one member of the family after another began to have conscientious scruples. So the mother got up, and she cut something off from the bottom of the trousers. A little later the sister came to the conclusion that she should comply and make the change in the trousers, and she cut off a little. After a while the aunt got the same idea, and before morning she cut off a little from the lad's trousers. When he finally got up in the morning he had not much but a pair of bathing trunks to put on. So if the Senators attempt to take this great document, the product of these great men, representing these great nations, and proceed here to engraft each his own ideas upon it and to make these emendations of it, it will be wrecked. We must give some credit to the nations and the men who have been laboring to bring this great work to fruition.

Mr. President, we have been told in a single speech on the floor of the Senate that the control of the league would be in the hands of European monarchs and Asiatic despots; that it might be controlled by the British Empire, or, if the British Empire should lose control, the Germanic nations might get control, or that, if they did not get control, the Bolsheviki might get control. In fact, in that single speech every possible method of control was suggested except the very obvious one that the league and the executive council of the league are going to be in control of the great democracies of the world, five of them being named as permanent members of the executive council and controlling it.

I say "democracies." France is as much a democracy as is the United States. They are both republics. Great Britain is as much a democracy as is the United States, and her Government responds to the will of the people more readily, possibly, even than does our own. Italy, a constitutional monarchy in name, is in fact a democracy. Japan, while at the head of her government she has the Mikado, is rapidly being transformed, as we all know, into a government in which the will of the people is carried out. The Japanese love and revere their Mikado, but they compel him to change his ministry as rapidly as they change their public opinion.

Why, Mr. President, how absurd to say that the kings and monarchs of Asia and Europe will control the league! We all know that the King of England and the King of Italy have no more political power than the painted kings in a deck of cards. The President of the United States has a hundred times more power than has any king in the world. I saw in the newspapers sometime ago an account of a conversation between the President of the United States and the King of Spain. It was reported that the President of the United States inquired of the King of Spain why he did not do something with relation to the affairs of Spain that was thought desirable, and the King of Spain replied, "Oh, Mr. President, you forget I am not a president; I am only a king."

The league ruled by the monarchs and despots of the world! It is ridiculous nonsense; it is preposterous. The despots of the world have gone, and gone forever. The world is democratic, and it is ruled by the democratic nations of the world.

Mr. President, I have already indicated that the affairs of the league are to be administered by the executive council of nine nations; that of these nine nations five are permanent members, and no one of them is controlled by a monarch or a despot. What of any four nations that might be elected to fill out the four other places on the executive council? Can you conceive of any monarch or despot represented on the league of nations in the executive council? Would it be so if it were Norway or Sweden or Denmark or Holland or Switzerland or Belgium or Spain or Portugal or Poland or Jugo-Slavia, or any of the 20 republics of the Western Hemisphere? Why, Mr. President, this league of nations can not by any possible conception of the imagination be considered as passing into the control of monarchs and despots.

We have been told also that when a nation enters this league it yields to the arbitrament of the league its national life. What nonsense when, under one of the covenants of the league, all the nations that join in it solemnly pledge themselves to preserve and protect the political independence of each member, including its territorial integrity.

Then, we have been told that we would be compelled to contribute to a force that might be used by the league against us, whereas the only provision for contributing a force is in case one of the nations becomes an outlaw, and then the other nations contribute to bring it within control of civilization again. There is no standing army; there is no league navy; each nation maintains its nationality. That bugaboo that Senators attacked before the constitution was made public has disappeared forever. Senators have attacked something that did not exist, and they still continue conjuring up the scarecrow.

Then, we have been told that if we joined the league we would place ourselves at the mercy of Mexico, which might despoil our citizens, commit outrages on our borders, and enjoy the benefits of the guaranty of the league as to its political independence and territorial integrity. Yet the fact is that under the terms of the league Mexico is ineligible to admission to membership in the league. Mexico can not perform, and does not perform, her international obligations, and no such nation can gain admission.

We have been told that if we enter this league we will abandon the Monroe doctrine; that is, we will abandon our right to attack any nation which may seek to gain a foothold on the Western Hemisphere. The Monroe doctrine was enunciated when each nation had to look out for itself, and we took that step to look out for ourselves; but the purpose of the league of nations includes the very purpose of the Monroe doctrine; that is, to prevent aggression of nations upon each other, whether upon the continent where they exist or upon any other continent. Anything that has the character of an attack upon any American Republic or even an unfriendly act against the United States would call for action by the league. Instead of being compelled to defend the Western Hemisphere alone, we would, if necessary, have the sympathy and help of every member of the league.

We have been told that this is one of those entangling alliances against which Washington warned us. I deny it. There is just as much difference between an entangling alliance and the league of nations as there is between a horse-chestnut and a chestnut horse. When Washington gave his warning the world was full of entangling alliances; nations were endeavoring to secure power by alliances with other nations. Why? To fight wars. They were not doing it to maintain peace; they were doing it to fight wars. That age has passed away; the league of nations is to wipe out all entangling alliances and bring about an honorable union among the nations of the world to end war and preserve peace. When Washington sat down by the light of candles and with his quill pen laboriously wrote out that warning to the American people he saw the world as it was then. If Washington were here to-day, he would see the world as it is now; and in the blaze of electric lights he would punch a button, summon a stenographer, and dictate to the people of the United States an urgent recommendation that they join this league for the purpose of maintaining with other honorable nations of the world perpetual peace on earth.

This reverence for things said a hundred or more years ago under old circumstances is no mark of respect for those who stated them; it presumes that they would not advance. Washington was not that kind of a man. China to-day, living in the past, worshipping the dead things that dead men have said centuries ago, shows the folly of carrying to an extreme that unprogressive doctrine.

We have been told here in the Senate that if we entered this league of nations Japan would compel the United States to arbitrate the immigration question, and, if she succeeded, compel this country to admit her nationals. What nonsense! There are two answers to this proposition. The first is that if Japan could compel arbitration by the executive council, she nevertheless could not hope to win a verdict favorable to her contention. She is the only nation of her race represented among the eight Caucasian members of the executive council. She could not hope to get the vote of Great Britain, who sits on the executive council with her, when Great Britain is so tremendously interested in the immigration question as affecting Canada and her other dominions, Australia being even a stronger illustration.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I asked not to be interrupted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will permit me, a little later on I shall not object to being interrupted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wished to ask the Senator a question bearing directly on the point he is discussing. The Senator has interrupted nearly every other speaker on the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Make it short, and I will yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. It will be quite short. As I understand the Senator, the reason the proposal to admit Japanese into this country would not succeed is because Japan could not get a sufficient number of votes in the league——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am stating a number of reasons.

Mr. KELLOGG. And not because it is not one of the questions which can be submitted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is one of the questions which can not be submitted. I am coming to that, if the Senator will wait.

Mr. KELLOGG. I merely wish to ask the Senator whether, under sections 12, 15, and 16, there are any limitations upon the questions which must be submitted either to the arbitral tribunal or to the executive council?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is not a question of putting limitations in the document. If we attempt to put limitations in the document, it would be made as long as the moral law. There are no powers conferred on the league of nations except those that are required under the terms of the document itself. It relates only to international questions and international disputes, and not to domestic questions. It has not any more to do with the immigration question than it has with the question of marriage and divorce in the United States. There is not any doubt about that; it is thoroughly agreed among all of those who have discussed this matter in Paris that such is the fact.

I know that Japan endeavored in the council at Paris to secure a declaration of equality of races and against any discrimination against races; but Japan failed. All that Japan gets out if this league of nations is the highly honorable and much-prized membership in the executive council and the same protection other members get. All the efforts she made to establish the recognition of race equality were vigorously rejected and by a unanimous vote.

But even if Japan had succeeded, even if Japan might bring this matter under the terms of the league, yet nevertheless there is another insuperable barrier against Japan. Supposing the impossible were possible, and that Great Britain would permit Japan to bring that matter into negotiation and force Japanese into the United States and into Canada and into Australia—an impossible supposition, but suppose she should—yet Japan is bound by a treaty with the United States against that very thing. Japan is bound by a solemn treaty with the United States that is still in force, and that will be placed on file with the league, to recognize our exclusion laws. I will say for Japan that with the most scrupulous care she has constantly lived up to the contract. The bugaboo of Japanese immigration is one of those false fronts that are brought in here to array prejudice against the league of nations.

We have been told that if we should agree to the league proposal for the limitation of armaments we would interfere with the power of Congress and impair the sovereignty of the country. Nothing is more ridiculous. A hundred years ago the United States and Great Britain entered into a contract, which was ratified by the Senate of the United States, limiting naval armaments on the Great Lakes between Canada and the United States. Did that limit the sovereignty of the United States? Why, we have almost forgotten that it existed; but the United States and Canada have scrupulously lived up to that contract. In principle there is no difference between such an agreement between the United States and Great Britain and the proposed agreement of armament limitation between the United States and all of the nations in the league. The only difference is this, and it is in favor of the league: In the league case, while the executive council can propose the limitations to each nation, provided it does it by a unanimous vote, it does not go into effect until adopted by each government. In the United States it would not go into effect until the Congress of the United States declared it adopted. Anyone who examines this document carefully will see the utter folly of the claim that the league can dictate to the United States what its armament shall be.

Shall we not concede anything to good faith? Shall we not consider that these nations whose representatives have sat down at the peace table to draw this great document of mutual concessions and mutual defense, based on honor and on justice, have a good purpose, and that they are not trying to draw each other into a dark alley for the purpose of assassination? Must we forever be suspicious of the motives and the purposes of those who have gone into this league?

We have been told that we would destroy our Americanism and our nationalism if we entered this league; and the eloquent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in a brilliant peroration here the other day, brought before our eyes the personality of Theodore Roosevelt as the very embodiment of Americanism, which we should cherish and which we should live up to. Has the Senator forgotten that Theodore Roosevelt himself ardently advocated a reduction of armaments by agreement between the nations? Has he forgotten that Theodore Roosevelt advocated a league of nations? Has he forgotten that Theodore Roosevelt even went so far as to declare that force should be placed behind a league of nations to maintain the peace of the world? Who can doubt that if Theodore Roosevelt were President of the United States to-day he would be bending every energy, as Woodrow Wilson is bending every energy, to establish a league of nations to preserve the peace of the world?

Theodore Roosevelt, the embodiment of Americanism and nationalism. Then why charge that Woodrow Wilson is trying to destroy nationalism and Americanism? He is advocating the same thing that was advocated by Theodore Roosevelt, only he has succeeded in organizing the world to bring it into effect.

Mr. President, we have been told by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], in a very forceful speech, that it would have been a disaster to the world in times past if a combination of nations had existed to guarantee their independence and their territorial integrity. He says he is thinking of the time when Charles and Philip of Spain held the world in their grasp and of the days when Napoleon swept over Europe with his conquering hosts, and he says that if a league of nations had been devised in those days and had gone into effect to maintain the political independence and territorial integrity of those conquerors and those kingdoms it would have choked liberty to death.

Mr. President, that is the trouble with Senators who oppose the league of nations. They are thinking of the days that are gone, and gone forever. The conquering empires of the world have been wiped out. The fall of Russia and Germany and Austria-Hungary removed from the world the last representatives of the conquering spirit and of autocratic power. The world is now democratic. Senators should cease to turn their eyes to the past and turn them to the present and see what we have before us. The world of democracy has come into its own. Yes; that is the mistake; too many are turning their eyes to the past and forgetting that we have come into a new world.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. If what the Senator from Nebraska has said is true, if the spirit of aggression and injustice is a thing of the past, what need have we of a league of nations?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have the same need that we have in a civilized community to hold in check those who will only remain in check under organization. We have here a great civilized city, but it would not do to permit law and order to remain to chance. We organize the city to maintain law and order, and we are going to organize these democracies of the world to preserve law and order in the world; and we can do it now for the first time in the history of the world. We need take in no despots. We need take into consideration no conquering empires. That day has gone, and we have come out into a new world; and Senators should realize it. Let them grasp the fact that the spirit of the age is to end conquest; that the spirit of the age is that the people shall rule; that the spirit of the age is that governments shall be content to serve their own people and not despoil others. Let them see the new world as it is, and the new spirit which inspires it. Let them appreciate the fact that humanity is not willing to sacrifice itself further; that men and women demand of their governments that as the fruit of this terrible war an agreement shall be entered into for the preservation of world peace in the future.

If the Senator will turn his face from the past and toward the future, he will behold a new heaven and a new earth—not a millennium, perhaps, but a world in which the affairs of nations are to be administered in justice and reason and humanity; a world in which the chief affair of government shall be peace and development and progress; a world in which man shall attain his highest destiny and greatest happiness. This was impossible in the days of tyrants and autocrats and conquerors, but it is possible in the new age of liberty, statesmanship, and philanthropy.

PRICE GUARANTIES TO PRODUCERS OF WHEAT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by inserting after the word "price," on line 13, page 3, following the committee amendment at that point, the following:

> Such as the usual market conditions, under the unrestricted operation of the law of supply and demand, would warrant, without regard to the enactment and enforcement of this law.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it is said that law is the perfection of human reason; and jurists and lawyers and courts, from the time when the race began to have its conduct outlined or restricted or controlled by law, have all agreed that when the reason for the law ceases the law itself should cease.

I have heard a spacious argument here to-day about why the United States Government should pay the guaranteed price on wheat—a price guaranteed when war was raging and when there was necessity, perhaps, for a guarantee being made. The claim is made that the Government is in honor bound to pay the $2.26 not only for all the wheat that was planted last year, without regard to whether it was planted before or after the armistice was signed, but for all the wheat that is yet to be planted. The Government is in honor bound, it is said, to pay that. Why?

The reason for the law was that we needed to encourage the production of wheat because the war was on. It was permitted, under those conditions, that all the people in these United States who are bound to eat bread in order to live should be charged a higher price for the necessities of life than usually was warranted. Why? Because the war was on; because wheat must be produced; because growers must be encouraged. But it was said by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] that nobody expected, at the time the guarantee was made, that the war would cease on November 11. The war has ceased since November 11, and not all of the fall crop was even planted at that time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. What I said was that when the guarantee was made by the President on the 2d of September nobody expected that the war would end so soon, and this guarantee was made by the President pursuant to act of Congress.

Mr. KIRBY. There is no disposition on my part to haggle about the understanding or misunderstanding of an expression. The Senator says that when the guarantee was made by the President the war was on, and nobody knew when it was going to close. That may be conceded to be true; but the war is not on now. It has not been on since November 11 of last year, and at that time one-half of the fall crop even of wheat had not been planted.

Now, why should the laborer and clerk and professional and business man, and all who toil in these United States, be required to pay for bread at the rate of $2.26 a bushel for wheat that is not yet planted? Where is there any reason for the Government saying that we will pay for all the spring wheat that can be planted, and give you $2.26 a bushel? Everybody, wheat growers and all, recognize what? They recognize that without this guaranty or without this law to authorize the manipulation and the restriction of sale and to limit the imports the usual price of wheat would be about $1 a bushel. Then why should the United States of America be expected to pay the wheat grower $1.26 a bushel clear profit on a necessity of life that all must use, when the war is over, when the grower knew it was over before three-quarters of the crop was planted, and all of his crops will be harvested under after-war conditions?

We were going to allow him this price for wheat because we needed the wheat and because the conditions were difficult under which wheat was to be planted and produced, but those conditions have passed away. Why is the United States in honor bound to pay for wheat that has not yet been planted, to men who have never even planted wheat before, $2.26 a bushel, at the expense of all of the consumers in the United States? Under the changed conditions each man must minimize his own damages. Do you suppose that one bushel less of wheat was planted last fall than would have been planted if no guaranty had been made? Do you suppose that one bushel less of wheat would be produced now if it was known this guaranty would not be performed? No; not one bushel less of spring wheat would be planted.

Now, we hear talk about the United States being in honor bound to pay it. Why? The Government owes some duties to the people of the United States, and we owe some duty to the Government of the United States, we who are Senators here looking after the public welfare and the Government interest. Why should we tax four-fifths or seven-eighths or six-tenths, anyhow, of the people of the United States, $1.26 a bushel for wheat and breadstuff more than it is conceded it is worth in order that the farmer who produced the wheat may be paid a bonus of $1.26 a bushel?

Now, the purpose of this amendment is stated right there. It is still proposed that we shall pay $2.26 a bushel for wheat that is not yet planted, because we wanted to encourage wheat growers before the war ended, because we wanted to relieve conditions during the war, when the war has been over since last November. Now, I say we ought to so amend this measure as that the consumers will not be mulcted in this extortionate cost for breadstuffs, and that the Government itself shall stand between the consumer and the farmer, who is expecting $1.26 a bushel more than the wheat is worth because the Government, forsooth, in times of stress found it necessary to say that it would pay $2.26 a bushel. The purpose of the amendment is that the Government shall permit the wheat and breadstuff to be sold in these United States according to the unrestricted operation of the law of supply and demand as though this law had not been passed. Then if wheat goes, as it ordinarily would, to $1 a bushel, the people who buy wheat, the people who consume bread, will have the benefit of that, as they ought to have when the war is over and under conditions as they now exist. There is no reason why the farmer should have more consideration, because he plants three-quarters of his crop of wheat under afterwar conditions and it is all harvested under afterwar conditions. I do not believe that the Government should be authorized by this bill to manipulate and control the market by restrictions here and regulations there and tariffs and taxes and embargoes yonder. I do not believe it should be allowed to do that in order that it may make itself whole for $1.26 bonus that it is going to give back to the farmer. If there must be $1.26 bonus paid back to the farmer for this wheat that he has not yet planted, and none of it has been grown or harvested, then let it be a straight proposition to be paid out of the Treasury. Let the people pay their taxes into the Treasury.

Let the farmer come down next fall and say, "Here, I produced so much wheat. My wheat has gone to $1 a bushel. All the people of the United States got the benefit of it, and without regard to whether I lost any money or not you promised before the war was over that you would pay me $2.26 a bushel. I want the other $1.26 out of the Public Treasury." That is what it amounts to, neither more nor less. I say when you put it down on that proposition, where it ought to be, the people of the United States are not going to take kindly to that sort of practice.

But the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] said, "Think how much money our farmers lost two years ago or a year and a half ago when wheat was selling at $3.05 and $3.21 to $3.50. Your farmers did not lose any money that year. No, the Government of the United States found it necessary to pass a law curbing the rapacity of dealers in wheat and foodstuffs in order that they might not rob all the people. That is what was done. It did not cost you $2.26. You got a fair profit and more than that on all the wheat that was produced.

The war is supposed to be over. If we are going to pay until September, 1920, a war-time price for wheat and bread, the country is indeed in a bad condition.

Let us contrast with this the condition of the farmer in the cotton States. The year before we went into the war the wheat price went soaring and all the wheat farmers got about 80 cents to $1 a bushel more than they had been getting for their wheat. The cotton farmer in the South, where the cotton cost him about 18 cents a pound that year to raise, got 5 cents a pound for cotton. Why? Because the Government would not take any steps to stabilize the price of his cotton. Although he produced it and carried it at a loss, he did not complain about it. Now, what has been the condition since that time? The wheat farmer was guaranteed $2.26 a bushel for his wheat and he got his money.

At the same time all the statisticians agree when wheat sells at $2.26 a bushel cotton ought reasonably and normally to sell at 35 cents a pound. Cotton went to 35 cents a pound under those conditions, and then what happened? The War Industries Board concluded it was necessary to make some sort of a regulation in order to restrict the export of cotton, and the cotton price started down. They talked about regulating the price. It went farther and farther down. It broke the market again. After that they said there is no necessity for regulating the price of cotton; and it has gone farther and farther down, until from 35 cents a pound, where it was on a level with wheat at $2.26 a bushel, it has gone down to 21 and 22 cents a pound, and you can not now sell any of it. Why? Because of the restrictions and embargoes on cotton in this country. The French have such a condition and system about the sale of cotton that you can not ship a bale of cotton to France or land it there at all unless you sell it through the French commission and it is carried by the French Government.

That is the condition about the cotton crop, and you have not heard those people say a great deal about it yet. They have been injured. They have been suffering greatly because of war conditions. Shall they have the further exaction placed upon them of growing cotton hereafter when they must pay $2.26 a bushel for wheat and breadstuffs and when their market is restricted and practically destroyed by present war conditions that have not passed so far as they are concerned?

That is a matter which ought to be considered here, it seems to me, and on that account I have this to say: If this bill must be passed, if the Government of the United States must step up to the wheat farmer who produces all his crops now under after-war conditions, who has not planted three-quarters of his crop yet, or had not at the time the armistice was signed, let us make it a pure matter of bonus, let us say it shall not affect the usual market conditions, and that the wheat price shall seek the usual level, that it shall follow the unrestricted application of the law of supply and demand, and let the bonus be paid out of the Treasury, where all the people pay their taxes, and if the farmer can come down and say, "I produced so much crop here last year, I have been damaged so much because it cost me more than a dollar and a quarter a bushel to raise it," let him be remunerated or let the whole amount be paid if necessary, but let it be paid as a bonus; let it not be levied upon the man who must eat bread in order to live.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Has the Senator read the proclamation of the President of the United States with regard to this guaranty?

Mr. KIRBY. It does not make any difference about the proclamation of the President. It was made under conditions that are not applicable now.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator deny that the President of the United States has declared that the price for the crop of 1919 shall have a certain price fixed for it?

Mr. KIRBY. I do not deny that at all, but what I am stating is that there is no reason to perform any guaranty that must be carried out under changed conditions. Why should you have given the wheat farmer $2.26 a bushel for wheat if it only cost him 98 cents a bushel to raise it when the war is over? If his wheat was half of it planted after the war was over and harvested under after-war conditions, there is no reason on God Almighty's earth why it should be done.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will yield further, I will say for one, as one Member of this body and as a member of the Committee on Agriculture who has given it some attention, that I would rather see the whole bill defeated than to have the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas adopted.

Mr. KIRBY. Why? Would not the wheat man get his $2.26 a bushel?

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator must admit that the amendment simply means repudiation. Does he not admit that?

Mr. KIRBY. It does not; but there ought to be a repudiation, if you would call it so. Why should you pay for wheat $2.26 a bushel when it can be raised for 80 cents a bushel after the war is over?

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator permit me to answer that?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Why should the Senator from Arkansas vote to take more than $1 a bushel from the farmer at the beginning of the war, I ask the Senator?

Mr. KIRBY. I say that the farmer or the man who manipulated the market in wheat was robbing the people of the United States of America when he charged $18 a barrel here for flour because he could get it, not because the wheat cost that much, but because the conditions warranted him taking the public by the throat and holding it up and getting the money. I do not know that the wheat farmer did it, but it was done.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that the farmers were absolutely unable to say anything about the price of wheat, does he not?

Mr. KIRBY. He sells his wheat upon the market, like everybody else sells his product; and it is supposed to be ruled by market conditions, by the fair operation of the law of supply and demand. That is the condition we have here. This amendment I propose will not affect the farmer getting his $2.26 a bushel, but there will be paid by the Government out of the taxes as a bonus $1.26 a bushel on a promise made a few days before the war closed, and three-quarters of the wheat which will be paid for was raised after the armistice was signed, and half of it is not yet planted. This only provides that the Government shall not enter into manipulation of the market; that the Government shall not make restrictions and place embargoes on the sale of wheat, to the injury of all of the people who consume bread, in order that it can pay the farmers, without loss to itself, an arbitrary price of $2.26 per bushel, which is entirely out of harmony with the actual facts and conditions under which the wheat was produced.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, instead of adopting the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas the idea would be to defeat the bill. There is no use to go ahead here and say be it enacted that one thing shall occur and put on a proviso and say it shall not occur. I think it would be very unfortunate to adopt an amendment of that sort.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I dislike very much to delay the proceedings of the Senate again upon this particular question. I had not intended to say a single word, but the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, for whom, as he knows, I have the highest regard, I think is eminently unfair. During the war Mr. Hoover, who then represented the administration, appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and stated certain things, and the facts are these: He stated, among other things, that there was a world shortage of wheat. We all know that at that time we were engaged in a most terrible war. He called attention to the fact that it was of the highest importance that we should increase or stimulate production to the utmost possibility, and, as he told us, according to his judgment and the judgment of the administration the minimum price should be fixed upon wheat in order to insure the producers that they would be compensated for any extra expenses which might be involved.

The Committee on Agriculture accepted the statement of Mr. Hoover, although from the beginning there was a most serious opposition to it. I think I state a fact when I say that not a single member of the Committee on Agriculture was in favor of price fixing. At that time, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has stated this afternoon, the price of wheat in certain markets in the grain districts was $3.42.

I want to say to my good friend from Arkansas that the farmers had absolutely nothing to do with that market price. The farmer could not if he wanted to have fixed the price on any of his products. He has never been able to do so; and, with the treatment that men who have been elected to serve in legislative bodies give him, it is quite certain that he never will have anything to say as to the price of his products.

I say to the Senator from Arkansas and to the Senate that by that very legislation which this body and the other House passed, and which became a law, the farmer was deprived of more than $1 a bushel. That applies to the spring-wheat crop of 1917 and all the crop of 1918.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. Does not the Senator think that it would be better for the Government to pay the farmer $1 a bushel than to guarantee him $2.26 a bushel on wheat that he has not planted yet, when half the men who will plant this spring never planted wheat before?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that all those questions have been seriously considered. The committee heard representatives from nearly every board of trade and chamber of commerce in the United States on that very question. While the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] called attention to certain things, there is one thing which I believe he overlooked, and that is the danger of fraud being perpetrated upon the Government of the United States and upon the people of the United States if we again throw open these exchanges when the Government is responsible for this fixed price of wheat. That is one of the main reasons, I want to say to the Senator from Arkansas, why the committee thought that it was best to let the Government handle the entire crop, to buy and to sell it.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, the Senator has no greater objection to the exchanges than I have. I think they ought to be abolished. I am not talking about the exchanges.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say to the Senator that the Government of the United States would have to guard every elevator and every warehouse in the country if his proposition should prevail. It would cost this country hundreds of millions of dollars to do what the Senator is attempting to do if these grain exchanges are thrown open again. Suppose the Senator from Arkansas intends to pay the producer the guaranteed price, how is he going to do it under his amendment?

It was proposed to the committee that the market price should be paid to the farmer and a certificate given him for the balance. Let me remind the Senate that the great danger is not that the farmer is going to perpetrate a fraud, but when all this grain is placed in the warehouses and in the thousands of elevators all over the country—human nature is human nature—let us suppose that some of these elevators have 50,000 bushels of wheat on hand and they report and show certificates for double or three times that amount, how is the Government to keep a record of what these elevators, warehouses, and mills have on hand unless they superintend the entire business? Let us assume—and it is a very reasonable assumption, because selfishness and greed have not yet been eliminated from the human nature—if these elevators and storehouses should have a loss by fire and could show that they have issued certificates for thousands of bushels of grain, for which they have never paid a cent, the Government would have to pay this fictitious loss. The Government would have to pay it, and the loss to the Government, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, would be so much greater than the loss which the Government will sustain in making this guarantee good, and doing it openly.

If you want to repudiate this obligation, have courage enough to say that you do not want to pass this bill. If you believe in repudiation and dishonor, for God's sake have the courage of your convictions and say that you want to repudiate this law and repudiate this proclamation which the Chief Executive of this Nation has promulgated under authority of law.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Senator from North Dakota suppose that the President would make a regulation now providing for the payment of $2.26 a bushel for wheat that is not yet planted? If not, why not? Because the war is over now. Why should the regulation, which was made immediately before the war ended, apply to a crop that has not yet been planted?

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator has asked me if the President of the United States would make a regulation affecting the price of spring wheat. I will say to the Senator that I believe the President would, for I assume the President is an honest man; and there would be just as much dishonor in the repudiation of the spring wheat crop as there would be in the repudiation of the winter wheat crop.

I want to call the Senator's attention to the proclamation of the President. I am afraid that the Senator has not had time to read the proclamation of the President of the United States; or, if he has read it, he may have forgotten it, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests. May I ask that the Secretary read the President's proclamation, which I send to the desk?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PRESIDENT EXPLAINS PLANS TO INSURE FAIR WHEAT PRICE FOR CROPS GROWN IN 1919—BASIS OF GOVERNMENT GUARANTY—COMMISSION TO BE APPOINTED NEXT SPRING TO REPORT ON ALL FACTORS NOW OR THAT MAY THEN EXIST TO GUIDE HIM IN DECISIONS.

MEMORANDUM.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1918.

In issuing to-day the Government's guaranty of the same price for the 1919 wheat crop that was guaranteed for the 1918 crops I wish it to be understood that in the spring of 1919 I will appoint a disinterested commission, who will secure for me the facts by that time disclosed as to the increased cost of farm labor and supplies, using the three-year prewar average prices of wheat, of labor, and of supply costs as a basis, and that from this information I shall determine whether there should be an increase in price above the present level, and, if so, what advance, in order to maintain for the farmer a good return. Should it then appear that an increase is deserved over the present guaranty, however, it will be applied only to those who have by next harvest already marketed their 1918 wheat.

It is the desire and intention of all departments of the administration to give to the wheat grower a fair and stimulative return in order that the present acreage in wheat may be maintained.

I find a great conflict of opinion among various sections of the country as to the price that should be named as a minimum guaranty. It must be obvious to all, however, that the factors which will make for increased or decreased cost of production of next year's harvest can not be determined until the near approach to the harvest.

In giving a guaranteed price for wheat one year in advance (the only industry guaranteed by the Government) there is involved a considerable national risk. If there should be peace or increased shipping available before the middle of 1920, Europe will naturally supply itself from the large stores of much cheaper wheat now in the Southern Hemisphere; and therefore the Government is undertaking a risk which might in such an event result in a national loss of as much as $500,000,000 through an unsalable surplus; or, in any event, in maintaining a high level of price to our own people for a long period subsequent to freedom in the world's markets.

Despite this, the desirability of assuring a supply to the world of prime breadstuffs by insuring the farmer against the fluctuations in prices that would result from the uncertainties of the present situation and from the speculation those uncertainties entail seems to me to make the continuation of the guaranty for another year desirable. On the other hand, it is clear that before increasing this liability by large sums with the risks set forth above, and before increasing the burden of the consumer, the matter should be subjected to searching inquiry at the appropriate time—the time when the pertinent facts will be known.

I feel confident that with this preliminary fixed guaranty, and with the assurance that justice will in any event be done to the grower, he will continue the fine patriotic effort by which he has served the country hitherto; that the Government will have acted prudently; and that the consumer will be satisfied that his interests are not unduly sacrificed, but just and exhaustive consideration given to every element of the matter at the proper time.

WOODROW WILSON.

PROCLAMATION GUARANTEEING PRICE FOR THE WHEAT CROP GROWN IN 1919 IS ISSUED BY PRESIDENT WILSON.

[By the President of the United States of America.]

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas under and by virtue of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved by the President on the 10th day of August, 1917, it is provided, among other things, as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment; and differences in price for the several standard grades in the principal primary markets of the United States adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent at the principal interior primary markets as the basis. Thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guarantee within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty."

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers conferred upon me by said act of Congress, and especially by section 14 thereof, do hereby find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guarantee provided for in said section, and in order to make effective the guaranty by Congress for the crop of 1919 and to assure such producers a reasonable profit I do hereby determine and fix and give public notice of reasonable guaranteed prices for No. 1 northern spring wheat and its equivalents at the respective principal primary markets as follows, to wit:

New York, N. Y., $2.39½ per bushel.
Philadelphia, Pa., $2.39 per bushel.
Baltimore, Md., $2.38⅞ per bushel.
Newport News, Va., $2.38⅞ per bushel.
Duluth, Minn., $2.22½ per bushel.
Minneapolis, Minn., $2.21½ per bushel.
Chicago, Ill., $2.26 per bushel.
St. Louis, Mo., $2.24 per bushel.
Kansas City, Mo., $2.18 per bushel.
Omaha, Nebr., $2.18 per bushel.
New Orleans, La., $2.28 per bushel.
Galveston, Tex., $2.28 per bushel.
Tacoma, Wash., $2.20 per bushel.
Seattle, Wash., $2.20 per bushel.
Portland, Oreg., $2.20 per bushel.
Astoria, Oreg., $2.20 per bushel.
San Francisco, Cal., $2.20 per bushel.
Los Angeles, Cal., $2.20 per bushel.
Salt Lake City, Utah, $2 per bushel.
Great Falls, Mont., $2 per bushel.
Pocatello, Idaho, $2 per bushel.
Spokane, Wash., $2 per bushel.

And that the guaranteed price for the other grades established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1918, based on said price for No. 1 northern spring wheat at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, will assure the producers of wheat produced within the United States a reasonable profit; the guaranteed prices in the principal primary markets above mentioned being fixed by adopting No. 1 northern spring wheat or its equivalents at the principal interior markets as the basis.

For the purposes of such guaranty only I hereby fix the guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets above mentioned for the following grades of wheat, to wit, No 1 northern spring, No. 1 hard winter, No. 1 red winter, No. 1 Durum, No. 1 hard white. The guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets aforesaid of all other grades of wheat established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916, shall be based on the above-guaranteed prices and bear just relation thereto.

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919 and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920, to such agent or employee of the United States, or other person, as may be hereafter designated, at any one of the above-mentioned cities, which are hereby declared to be the principal primary markets of the United States, and provided that such producer complies with all regulations which may be hereafter promulgated in regard to said guaranty by the President of the United States.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this 2d day of September, in the year of our Lord 1918, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

During the reading of the proclamation,

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota how much more of this proclamation is to be read, and would not the Senator be willing to have it printed in the RECORD? We have had our day, and out of four legislative days of the session remaining one day has been taken on this bill. I am sure the Senator from North Dakota sympathizes with me in my urgent desire to secure the passage of the measure. If it is not passed at an early date, I shall feel obliged to ask that it be laid aside temporarily and let some other legislation have the right of way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading is all over except the reading of the name, which will be read.

The SECRETARY (reading):

Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. GORE. I shall not filibuster against the pronunciation of that name.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I fully realize what the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has stated, but I desired this proclamation read for the benefit of the Members of the Senate to show that there is a binding contract between the Government of the United States and the farmers of the United States. I shall take only a very few moments longer, and I invite the attention of the Senator from Arkansas.

Let me say to the Senator from Arkansas that at the time the Government of the United States fixed the price of wheat the Government of Italy—and Italy produces a great deal of wheat, for it produced in 1918, 176,000,000 bushels—made the price of $3.60 for 1918 for hard wheat and $3.18 for soft wheat. It made a price of wheat for 1919 of $4.44 for hard wheat and $3.96 for soft wheat. France, which produces a great deal of wheat, made the price for 1918, $3.96, and reduced it only to $3.84 for 1919. Great Britain was the only European country which made a low price for wheat, but Great Britain guaranteed the price up to and including the year 1922, I will say to the Senator, of $1.64 per bushel.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota should state that that is a minimum price and not the absolute price.

Mr. GRONNA. That is a minimum price. I thank the Senator.

Holland guaranteed the price of wheat to her farmers for 1918 of $2.76 and for 1919 of $3.30 per bushel. Switzerland guaranteed a price for wheat to her farmers of $3.36 for the 1918 crop and $3.18 for the 1919 crop. Norway guaranteed for the 1918 crop $4.38 and for the 1919 crop $4.09. Of course Norway does not produce a great deal of wheat, although she produces a considerable quantity.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me to finish this list, then I will yield.

Mr. KIRBY. Right on that point, has the Senator any information that those Governments expect to allow these guaranties to stand now, inasmuch as the war is over?

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from North Dakota has the information that these countries are going to live up to their contracts. I will say that this information has been furnished me by the food department, and the communication bears the stamp of that department.

Mr. President, Brazil established a guaranteed price for wheat of $2.16. It is shown that the only government in Europe which made a lower price than that fixed by the United States was the Government of Great Britain; and I repeat, that every one of those governments is living up to the contract it made.

If we have only a normal crop in the United States, I believe—and I have so stated many a time on this floor—that this Government will not lose a dollar on the 1919 crop; it will lose no more on the 1919 crop than it did on the 1918 crop; and the Senator from Arkansas knows, if he has made an investigation, that the Government made a profit on the wheat crop of 1918, instead of sustaining a loss. Does the Senator know that?

Mr. President, if we are going to begin repudiation, let us not begin on the farmer alone, but let us repudiate all contracts. There are in the United States to-day, to my knowledge, thousands and thousands of contracts which have not even been entered into formally and in connection with which no written agreement can be found. Do you want to repudiate those contracts? I, for one, do not. I am willing to pay my share of the taxes to see that this great country of ours sustains its honor and pays its honest debts. I care not whether it affects the people of the North, or the West, or the South, or the East, we can not afford to begin repudiation; we can not afford to cast a stigma upon the honor of this country, which so unselfishly sent thousands and millions of its noble young sons across the sea to fight for our flag and for the cause of civilization, as has been so loudly proclaimed on this floor. We can not have it said, now that these boys have been successful in their efforts and are triumphantly returning home, that we should begin a policy of repudiation.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that the amendment which I propose does not affect the price of $2.26 to the wheat raiser.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that, although I know he is one of the ablest lawyers on the floor of the Senate, I differ with him. It would affect the price, and I would rather see the bill defeated, I will say to the Senator, than to see his amendment accepted.

Mr. President, I had intended to explain this bill at some length, but inasmuch as the chairman of the committee is anxious to secure a vote on it, I shall not further delay the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's closing observation, and I am sure the Senate will appreciate my desire to secure a vote. When we met this morning there were only four legislative days remaining, and an enormous amount of legislation remained to be passed, including billions of dollars to be enacted in the form of appropriation bills, much of it controverted legislation that ought to be discussed. This measure is not controverted; there will not be five votes cast against it. This proposed legislation is to fulfill a contract, and it ought to have been passed in 20 minutes. I shall feel obliged to lay it aside temporarily unless at least the friends of the bill forbear to discuss it. I move to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. KIRBY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, in section 2, page 2, line 14, before the word "use," to strike out "create and"; and on the same line, after the word "any," to insert "existing," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That in carrying out the provisions of this act the President is authorized to make such regulations and issue such orders as may be necessary, to enter into any voluntary arrangements or agreements, to use any existing agency or agencies, to accept the services of any person without compensation, to cooperate with any agency or person, to utilize any department or agency of the Government, including the Food Administration Grain Corporation, and to coordinate their activities so as to avoid any preventable loss or duplication of effort or funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 11, after the word "necessary," to insert "to carry out the purposes of this act and to enable the people of the United States to purchase wheat products at a reasonable price," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That whenever the President shall find it essential, in order to carry out the guaranties aforesaid or to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, he is authorized to buy, or contract for the purchase of, wheat of said crops of 1918 and 1919 at the places designated for the delivery of the same by the President's proclamations or such other places as he may designate, for cash at the said guaranteed prices, and he is authorized thereafter to buy or contract for the purchase of, for cash, or sell, consign, or contract for the sale of, for cash or on credit, wheat of the said crops of 1918 and 1919 and flour produced therefrom at the said guaranteed prices or at such other prices and on such terms or conditions as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to enable the people of the United States to purchase wheat products at a reasonable price.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee the purpose of the provision which follows the amendment just agreed to, and which I will read to him. I refer to the provision on page 3, lines 20 to 25, defining the powers of the President conferred by this bill. It says:

Including the protection or indemnification—

The words "or indemnification" are offered as an amendment by the committee—of millers, wholesalers, jobbers, bakers, and retail merchants who purchase in carload lots against actual loss by them on account of abnormal fluctuations in the price of wheat and wheat flour of said crops.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If I may complete my question before the Senator answers it, I do not see any connection between the function outlined in that provision and the guaranteeing of the price of wheat as heretofore fixed by the President. It is entirely a different subject, entering into a field that was scarcely covered by the vast powers and extraordinary functions conferred upon the administration during the war before the armistice was signed. Under this provision the President would have the power, and it would be his duty to exercise the power when it is conferred under the responsibilities of his position, to protect and indemnify millers, wholesalers, jobbers, bakers, and retail merchants against loss in their business transactions. What is the purpose of that provision?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the object of that provision is to meet this situation: The crop of 1918 is still being marketed; it is being marketed on the basis of $2.26 per bushel. Millers have a great deal of that wheat now on hand, and bakers are estimated to have on hand $50,000,000 worth of flour, manufactured from this wheat. The millers have been obliged to buy this wheat at the market price of $2.26.

Bakers have been obliged to buy their flour on the basis of $2.26 per bushel for wheat. Now, it may come to pass, when the new crop comes in, that while paying the farmer $2.26, the guaranteed price, as a matter of course, the President may decide to permit the people to purchase flour on the basis of $1.50 wheat, by way of illustration—whatever may be the market price prevailing in the world. The millers will, of course, have on hand a good deal of wheat which they had to buy at $2.26. The bakers will have on hand flour which they had to buy on the basis of wheat at $2.26. It was felt to be a mere matter of justice that when wheat and flour come down by the action of the Government the millers and bakers ought not to be obliged to take the loss where they had to buy it under Government control.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator says "by the action of the Government"; but the bill does not say that.

Mr. GORE. The Senator understands that all wheat is now being marketed under Government control on the basis of $2.26 a bushel.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that; but the Senator says that the purpose of this provision is to protect them from loss suffered by the action of the Government.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The bill contains no such limitation at all, nor any limitation. It says:

Against actual loss by them on account of abnormal fluctuations in the price of wheat and wheat flour of said crops—

Any loss.

Mr. GORE. There ought not to be, and probably would not be, any abnormal fluctuation. I take it there will be very little.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why would there not be? There have been abnormal fluctuations, every year that I have ever paid any attention to the price of wheat, in the price of wheat and in the price of almost every other product.

Mr. GORE. There has been no fluctuation at all under Government control.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; but you say that you are going to protect them against fluctuations below the Government price.

Mr. GORE. No; the Senator did not understand me. The Government will have to pay the farmers $2.26 per bushel for wheat marketed in June and July. Millers will have on hand wheat harvested in 1918 which they had to buy at $2.26. Now, suppose the Government decides that while it must pay the farmers $2.26 for wheat marketed in June and July of this year, yet the people shall be allowed to buy flour manufactured from such wheat on the basis, say, of $1.50 per bushel for wheat. That would leave millers and bakers with wheat and flour on hand which the Government compelled them to buy on the basis of $2.26; and unless they were indemnified against loss they would, of course, have to sell it in competition with the flour manufactured from wheat sold arbitrarily at $1.50, the Government taking the loss resulting from the difference. Now, the millers ought not to be obliged to take that loss. The Government ought to take that loss.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Suppose that the Government pursues the course which the Senator from Minnesota a short time ago suggested was the wise and proper course—namely, while guaranteeing the price of wheat at $2.26, to let the law of supply and demand take its course, and as a result the market price of wheat was, say, $1.50 a bushel, the Government being compelled to pay the difference between $1.50 a bushel and $2.26. Under those circumstances, as I understand the Senator, a number of millers and bakers who now have a considerable supply of flour on hand would lose money.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. That is to say, they would have on hand a product that cost them more than the product would cost in the market after the Government allowed the law of supply and demand to take its course.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I can not see, with the understanding I now have of this bill, under what principle of morals the Government of the United States ought to indemnify the millers and the bakers and those who have that flour on hand.

Mr. GORE. Why, Mr. President, this is the reason: This country had to be fed. Wheat had to be converted into flour. The millers had to do that. They had to buy it at $2.26 a bushel. They had no choice. Now, it seems to me that it would be an act of the worst imaginable bad faith for the Government to reduce the price of wheat and oblige its citizens who had purchased at a price fixed by the Government to take the loss as compared with that artificially high price when the Government permitted the price to go down.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the Government does not lower the price. It merely permits the law of supply and demand to take its course. If the law of supply and demand brought wheat to $1.50 per bushel, those who had loaded up—if I may be permitted a vulgarism—with wheat at a higher price would have to take the loss, just the same as there are hundreds of retail merchants in the United States to-day who were compelled to buy, in order to meet the demands of their local trade and their customers, millions and hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of goods at high prices, war prices, goods produced under the war-price standard. Now, with the termination of the war prices have gone down, and their competitors who do not have a large amount of goods on hand may go into the markets and buy the same character of goods and the same quality of goods at a price perhaps 50 per cent less. Does the Senator think the Government ought to come in and indemnify those men because of the losses which they have sustained?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Government ought to indemnify every citizen of the United States against any loss that the Government compels him to take. I lay down that principle as universal. Let me cite, now, a concrete case, a hypothetical case, that may happen.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. We will say that on July 1 a miller had 100,000 bushels of wheat on hand, that he bought in the regular course of his trade. He bought it on the basis of $2.26 a bushel, because he could not buy it at any other price without violating the law and subjecting himself to prosecution. On the 1st day of July the Government reduces the price of wheat to $1.50 per bushel. Shall the miller take the loss of $75,000 on account of the action of his Government? My understanding is that governments are instituted to protect men against injury and injustice, and not to perpetrate those acts upon them. I think it would be the grossest act of injustice to compel a man to sell an article for less than he paid for it when the Government fixed the price at which he could buy it, and when the purchase, manufacture, and sale was indispensable to the existence of the country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator how far this reimbursement is carried. Is it carried from the miller to the retailer, to the grocer, and to the baker?

Mr. GORE. I think so, where they have purchased in carload lots; yes, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GORE. I yield; yes, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. It takes, as I recollect, about 10,000,000 bushels of wheat to keep the mills supplied constantly. Now, if they are compelled to buy at $2.26, and by reason of the Government taking off the inhibition about a free market the price goes down to $1.50, the result will be that the millers are not going to keep up the supply of the country. They will not buy the wheat.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that instead of complaining about the Government you ought to praise the Government, because the Senator from Minnesota said, when he was occupying the floor a little while ago, that if the Government had not fixed the price at $2.26 wheat would have gone to $4 or $5 a bushel; so that if these bakers and millers had bought the flour or the wheat at $5 a bushel, as was suggested, the indemnification would be very much more than now, when they bought it at $2.26.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator knows, if he knows anything about the matter, that where there is a free market the miller who buys a million bushels of wheat in order to manufacture it into flour sells a million bushels of wheat on the same day, or sells the flour on the same day that he buys the wheat.

Mr. GORE. And is allowed to hedge against it. He hedges against the loss.

Mr. KELLOGG. Absolutely; although he is prohibited from doing so under this law.

Mr. GORE. If the market had been left open, they would have hedged and protected themselves against loss. They were denied that privilege. The markets were closed. Shall the Government oblige innocent men to take these enormous losses?

I simply wish to add one thing to what I have said to illustrate my general position: I was not in favor of the Government getting into this situation at all. We find ourselves, I will say particularly to the Senator from Washington, pretty much in the situation of a man surrounded by a circle of fire, with inflammable material increasing the nearer it approaches to him. In that situation I would advise the man to get out, and to take the thinnest place in the flame, if he could determine which it was; but he ought to get out from the fire before it gets worse.

That is the situation in which the Government is in this matter. It has created an artificial situation. When we change the artificial situation we have got to get out, and we have got to take our losses as we go.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 3, line 21.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there has been no vote upon this amendment for indemnification.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that the only reason that was inserted in addition to "protection" was because that word was supposed to relate to anticipated losses, while "indemnification" applies to cases where they had already purchased it and had it on hand when the change in the situation came. I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I just want to call attention to the proposition that the provision which has just been discussed by its terms requires the Government to protect every dealer in wheat from any loss—the most unprecedented thing that has ever been suggested in any legislation in the history of Congress.

While I am commenting upon this bill, I should like to ask another question of the Senator from Oklahoma as to the purpose of section 4 of the bill, which gives the President complete control over all grain exchanges and all dealers in grain, and authorizes him to issue licenses to regulate their practices and transactions and operations. The Senator certainly does not contend that that vast authority is necessary in order to enable the Government to fulfill the obligation which it has assumed—that it should pay $2.26 a bushel for the 1919 crop of wheat. Why do you continue to keep this great branch of the industry of the country under Government control?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, that is a continuation of existing law. A section is contained in the food-control act vesting that authority. I do not know that it is very material now, because if the Government purchases grain and licenses those who handle it from the beginning to the end of its processes, there will be very little opportunity for dealing in it on the boards of trade.

I took up this question rather biased in favor of the Government taking its hands off the situation, as far as practicable, at once, and establishing a free and open market and permitting the trade to handle the situation; but the more I investigated it the more strongly I was driven to the conclusion that it was not practicable, and I conferred with a good many members of the trade. I may say that I conferred with representatives of the Chicago Board of Trade. I think they finally reached the conclusion that the situation was so artificial, not only in this country but in other countries, that the trade would not be equal to handling this crop.

I do not think that is really very material. We have a provision farther on, as the Senator will observe, making it the duty of the President to establish a free and open market as soon as practicable. That was as far as we felt justified in going.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GORE. I yield; yes.

Mr. NELSON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma this idea: That if you do not include boards of trade and grain exchanges the speculation that prevailed before the Government entered into this wheat guaranty would prevail, just as last year in the case of the previous crop, if the boards of exchange and grain exchanges had been open and there had been no guaranty wheat would have been from $3 to $4 a bushel. Now, if the Government guarantees the price of it, we do not want these grain exchanges to step in and interfere with the operations of the Government. If you throw the door open to the grain exchanges, they will hamper the Government in its operations in carrying out this guaranty.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, that might or might not happen; of course, I can not tell; but other countries have fixed a price on wheat. They will undoubtedly attempt to manage the sale of wheat this year so as to minimize their losses. Therefore there will not be a world market in wheat. It will not be flowing in an open market, here or elsewhere, and it was feared that an attempt to permit the trade to handle it would result in a sagging of the market here which would increase the Government's losses.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. CALDER. Has the Senator inquired carefully into the suggestion of the New York Produce Exchange as to the best method of handling this question?

Mr. GORE. I will say that I have considered a like proposition which was submitted by other exchanges. I ought in candor to add that I was predisposed to favor those propositions which looked to the early establishment of a free and open market; but I was finally driven, and reluctantly driven, to the conclusion that the conditions are so artificial, and there are so many arbitrary forces in the situation, that it can not be done; and I think a large percentage of the trade reached the same conclusion. I was convinced, and many of them after hearing the arguments told me that they were convinced, that responsibility would be fixed upon the trade for occurrences for which they were not responsible, and which they did not have the power to avert; and I think many of them are satisfied to have this artificial situation continued for a year.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, a further inquiry, if the Senator please. I entered the Chamber just a moment ago and heard the Senator speaking on the subject, but failed to get the full gist of his statement. Is there a provision in this bill by which the people who buy flour, and who consume the bread made from flour, can get it any cheaper?

Mr. GORE. There is a provision in the bill which permits the President to see to it that the consumers of the United States are able to purchase bread at a reasonable price. I assume that that will be construed to mean upon the basis of the world price, so far as the world price can be arrived at. Of course, there really will not be a world market nor a world price, but a reasonable price can be arrived at by considering the price of the wheat which is flowing freely in the world markets and the prevailing prices on corn, rye, and barley in the United States. There is a pretty well-defined ratio between those grains.

Mr. CALDER. So the Government purchases the wheat and then takes the loss in the sale of the wheat to the miller?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; that can be done under this bill. I assume it will be done.

Mr. CALDER. All the time having in mind the world market price of wheat?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALDER. The commissioner in charge of the wheat problem will have to meet the world price to sell it?

Mr. GORE. As far as that can be arrived at.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. The amendment I proposed would have done what the Senator from New York asked about. There is nothing in the bill now which requires that it shall be done. Is it any less desirable that the Government shall manipulate the market to make $1 wheat sell for $2.26 to the consumer than that the exchange shall do it?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I may say that apart from that consideration, a very practical consideration which enters into my mind is substantially that the proposition was submitted to the House, and it was defeated by an overwhelming majority. It is my understanding that an effort will be made by the managers of this bill in the House to concur in the amendment without referring the bill to conference. I think that is extremely desirable. A good many things will have to subordinate themselves to the desire to pass this legislation before final adjournment. The Senator realizes, of course, that in the closing days of a Congress we sometimes do things that we would not do if we had more time.

Mr. PENROSE. I would like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I notice all through the bill that certain extraordinary autocratic powers are imposed on the President, and that he is directed to investigate the operations of numbers of transactions and perform certain duties. It seems to me we all know that that is a delusion and a deception. Does the Senator believe that the President will ever know a thing about the duties and responsibilities imposed on him specifically under the bill?

Mr. GORE. I think not.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator does not think he will ever know anything about it?

Mr. GORE. No; I do not.

Mr. PENROSE. In other words, he will delegate these vast powers to some petty autocrat sitting in a department.

Mr. GORE. If the Senator pleases to use that term.

Mr. PENROSE. That is really the outcome as I take it.

Mr. GORE. The duties will be devolved upon subalterns.

Mr. PENROSE. Then it seems to me the bill ought to be amended throughout, and instead of giving the public the thought that the President is going to perform these extraordinary duties, just come out and say that a clerk in a bureau may be directed by the President to carry them out, and let us know where we are. I can live under a benevolent despotism, Mr. President, where I know the despot and can get to see him, but I sympathize with the opposition of the people in Europe to an autocracy. I have had two years' experience of petty bureaucratic autocrats invested with delegated authority, delegated originally by Congress to the President.

Mr. GORE. There is a weird sort of charm about some kinds of ignorance. It sometimes is bliss.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that; but there is no weird charm but a brutal reality when citizens come to Washington and are insulted and turned aside with scorn by these petty bureaucratic autocrats invested with these extraordinary powers by delegation from the President, who will never know anything about how these duties are discharged except in the most casual, superficial, supervisory way.

Mr. GORE. Would the Senator deny those who are vested with "a little brief authority" their inalienable right to "cut fantastic tricks before high heaven"?

Mr. PENROSE. No; I would not. During the war, when citizens of Pennsylvania and from other parts of the country would come in to see me with the air black with profanity at the way they were treated by some petty autocrat or the utter inability they discovered to get any information even as to their status, I was willing to put up with it, although I thought the whole system wrong, even under war conditions. But now, when we are out of war, I think at least we should return to constitutional methods.

Mr. GORE. Did the Senator hear the speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] this afternoon?

Mr. PENROSE. It is impossible for me to hear all the speeches in the Senate.

Mr. GORE. The Senator does not know then that democracy and good will are now universally prevalent and that everybody is going to promise to be good.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no doubt that is true, particularly in relation to Ireland, but I unfortunately missed that part of the Senator's speech. I will read it carefully. But what consolation is it to the unfortunate citizen who gets into the clutches of these bureaucrats and whose property is threatened with ruin to be assured that humanity will rule abroad, and that an international conscience perchance prompts the petty autocrat of the moment? There is no consolation in it that I can see.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senator and myself are not in so wide a diversion on that point. I thought the Constitution was the bulwark of personal rights and property rights in war as well as in peace.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought so once, but no longer.

Mr. GORE. I thought breaches made in the Constitution in times of war would afterwards be cited by Bolshevists as precedents to follow in times of peace. Of course the Senator realizes my situation. I look upon the bill now pending as I would look upon a major operation if I had to undergo one. I would not like it and I would not proceed to the table under the knife with any special pleasure, but under an overpowering and inevitable necessity I would go. We are in a predicament, as the Senator knows, and have got to get out of it one way or another.

Mr. PENROSE. I think we are in a predicament on account of the economic follies which attended the prosecution of the war in America, and I suppose I will have to vote for the bill.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that I will use my influence with the administration to have the acts of these autocrats to which he alludes referred to the league of nations.

Mr. PENROSE. That is very kind in the Senator. Will he go to Paris to carry out that program?

Mr. GORE. I do not control the issuance of passports.

Mr. PENROSE. I was only going to suggest in great sincerity that all through the bill the language be amended so as to read that whenever the President shall delegate the power to a clerk or other qualified citizen of the United States he shall then go on and be permitted to discharge these duties.

Mr. GORE. If the Senator can divest that amendment of any suggestion that would indicate any impeachment of the infallibility of those in authority I might support it.

Mr. PENROSE. Would the Senator be willing to support such an amendment? It might expedite the passage of the bill.

Mr. GORE. It seems to me to carry a veiled intimation against the infallibility of those who have been administering this law.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator object to that, because I openly challenge their infallibility or their capacity?

Mr. GORE. I will have to refer that to the executive council.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I shall not pursue the inquiry any further. Perhaps when the league of peace is perfected the question of wheat will be a matter of world-wide regulation and the wheat raised in Turkey will be on a par with that raised in North Dakota.

Mr. GORE. I am afraid the Senator lacks faith in the new light.

Mr. PENROSE. I am full of weaknesses and frailties, I know; but I hope that wheat will be one of the things that is taken care of in the international league of nations.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I suppose eventually this bill will pass.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. The remarks of the Senator from Illinois are always interesting, and in order that he may have a fitting audience I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sherman
Calder	Kellogg	New	Simmons
Curtis	Kendrick	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Fernald	Kenyon	Nugent	Smith, S. C.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] are detained on official business.

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORE. I should like to give notice now that I intend to try to hold a quorum to pass this bill to-night. I shall exhaust all the methods known to parliamentary usage to obtain it. I do not say that in the way of a threat, but Senators realize that we must legislate. I feel obligated to get the bill out of the way and not trespass on the time and patience of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the Senate will sit until 10 o'clock to-night, and it is the purpose of a number of us to do all in our power to keep the Senate here until that hour.

Mr. LEWIS. Not to hold it after 10?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not to hold it after 10.

Mr. SWANSON. I can not agree to that. It depends on how business is progressing. I do not understand that there is any agreement to adjourn at 10.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we hold the Senate until 10, we will be doing so much better than we have been doing that I feel encouraged by the suggestion. I shall not resist remaining longer, but I certainly shall insist that we stay here and work until 10 o'clock.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senate should stay and dispose of this measure. If the Senate will stay and see that this legislation is disposed of——

Mr. PENROSE. Is the Senator willing to adjourn after the disposition of this measure?

Mr. SWANSON. I will not say that. There is an executive session desired.

Mr. PENROSE. There seem to be two major generals on the other side. Whom is the minority to select?

Mr. SWANSON. We do not select major generals on this side. Every Senator here has his own individual will and judgment. It is only my individual wish to stay here.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have the opinion of the Democratic whip.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not know why there is such an apprehension on either side of the Chamber when I take the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

THOMAS G. ALLEN.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like at this time to call up the bill (H. R. 4610) to compensate Thomas G. Allen for injuries received while employed in the General Land Office of the United States and making an appropriation therefor. It is a bill that was referred to the Committee on Claims after having been passed by the House of Representatives, allowing $500 to Mr. Allen, of the Interior Department.

Mr. PENROSE. If I can be assured that the bill will not lead to prolonged debate, so as to delay the pending measure, I shall not object.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think I can assure the Senator that if it does——

Mr. SHERMAN. That will be the condition.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall not press its consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. All right.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas G. Allen, the sum of $500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for injuries received while employed in the United States General Land Office, Washington, D. C., December 27, 1915.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. On December 27, 1915, Mr. Allen was engaged in working in the Interior Department and in the line of his duty in an official capacity was seriously injured. Some of the filing cases fell upon him after he had been instructed to get certain documents. The claim was approved in the House committee for $1,000, but only passed for $500. It was passed December 19, and I was appointed a subcommittee of one by the Committee on Claims to investigate this claim. I made a very thorough investigation of it. It is just. In my opinion Mr. Allen should receive $1,000, but I have not changed the amount fixed by the House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOURNAL OF GRAND ARMY ENCAMPMENT.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will.

Mr. SMOOT. The House passed House concurrent resolution 69 for the printing of 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-third National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. I report the concurrent resolution from the Committee on Printing and ask for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-third National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1919, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

GUARANTEED PRICE OF WHEAT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder.

Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I shall object to the consideration of any bill that interferes with the passage of the pending measure. We have already agreed to-morrow that the entire calendar shall be called, and this bill ought not to be interfered with by any unanimous-consent agreement now. I shall object to any further unanimous-consent agreements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have a most splendid editorial from the Christian Science Monitor upon the subject of the league of nations. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It may be offered to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is raised.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to hear it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In my own time——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Mississippi has not got the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Illinois has the floor, but I have no doubt he will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt of it, either. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, if the Chair please.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois yields the floor to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I do not yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not actuated by the idea of taking up the time of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not yield the floor; and if the floor is to go, I withdraw my consent to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This editorial is entitled "Aude Sapere." At any time while I am reading this if any Senator will move or will suggest that I quit reading it and have it inserted in the RECORD, I will do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS proceeded to read the editorial.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Mississippi be permitted to have the editorial printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I join in that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is raised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I shall proceed to read.

Mr. WILLIAMS resumed the reading of the editorial, and having read some time, said:

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent of the Senate to insert the remainder of the article in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The editorial entire is as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Feb. 24, 1919.]

AUDE SAPERE.

To-day Mr. Wilson lands in Boston Harbor. He lands there as the first President who has ever left the shores of America. And he lands there bringing with him the first draft of the great document he went to Europe to attempt to induce the peoples of the Eastern Hemisphere to sign. For years the President of the United States has been a student of history. He knows intimately the story of the struggle of the human race for liberty and equality. And it is safe to say that there is no page of the story he knows better than that which tells of the signing of the Declaration of Independence of the United States. "We hold these truths to be self-evident," declares that famous instrument, "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Looking round the world, in the autumn of 1918, the President must have been struck by the apparently unfathomable gulf which still stretched between the nations and this ideal. Here and there a nation had won freedom at a great price. But even these nations were being compelled to build ships and to recruit huge armies to prevent the tide of autocracy from flowing across their meadows or through the streets of their towns.

The President of the United States sat down as it were in the quiet of the White House, with the vast oceans heaving their rollers eastward to Europe and eastward to China and Japan, to think out his plan. With all the records of the war at his disposal, with a peculiar opportunity for reading and analyzing the thoughts, the passions, and the ideals which were sweeping through the consciousness of the world and the minds of its statesmen, he built up, little by little, the theory of the league of nations. Of course it was a theory and nothing but a theory then. Of course it is to a great extent a theory now. But it was at least a theory which to have conceived, even if it were destined to be shattered, was better than not to have conceived anything of such a nature at all.

When Mr. Wilson gave his gift to the world he must have smiled a little to himself. Already he must have heard in the Government offices and in the clubs, in the chancelleries, and in the war offices the Homeric laughter of Mars and Jupiter, and the acid criticism of all of those whose training had left them with little or no confidence in the power of good. But Mr. Wilson was a statesman, accustomed not only to encountering criticism and opposition, but to grappling with every strain of public opinion. He determined, therefore, to convince the world that he was right, that the hand of the Lord was not shortened so that it could not redeem. To do this, however, he felt that he must attend the peace conference in person. That he must be prepared to expound and explain his views to the statesmen of other countries. In short, that the issue before the nations was one fraught with such tremendous consequences for humanity that the opportunity for redemption from the old fallacies and the old fetters must not be lost.

What, then, Mr. Wilson saw as he looked around the world was surely something like this: The peoples of the earth had been engaged in the conflict of Armageddon. Principle, as was inevitable, had conquered. That is to say, those nations which had adhered most closely to truth had won the day. The danger, however, was this, that the victors might, for very want of better direction, waste the victory by enacting a peace of revenge. The excuse for such a peace was unfortunately, perhaps, tenfold that of any ordinary war. Yet such a peace could only have laid the train for another war. In such circumstances what was Mr. Wilson to do? He saw the danger of the situation if it were left to drift. He saw the innumerable difficulties of any attempt to stop the drift. And he must have seen also the limitations of his own scheme for saving the situation. Something, however, it was obvious had got to be done if the situation was to be saved. Now, audacity, Danton has told us, is the way out of every difficulty. Mr. Wilson's scheme of a league of nations was, in the circumstances in which it was launched, Dantonesque in its audacity. But, curiously enough, it was also the most Fabian conceivable. To have united Danton with Fabius was surely a triumph of diplomacy.

What Mr. Wilson undoubtedly had in mind in evolving the league of nations was the idea expressed by Lord Grey in the phrase that if the sacrifices of the war could not be utilized to prevent future wars it would be a calamity to the race. The type of mind of the President and Lord Grey is, in many ways, identical. The President, thinking over the same ground as Lord Grey, in the privacy of his own home resolved independently his league of nations. That was one thing. But to induce the nations to accept it was altogether another. He sailed for Europe. In Europe he found the very condition of opposition he had foreseen. But he found also a certain number of brilliant thinkers and the great majority of the people on his side. He was fortunate in winning early the warm friendship and support of King George and of Mr. Lloyd George, and with their help much of the latent questioning of his scheme was overcome.

So Mr. Wilson comes back to America with the league of nations in his dispatch box. The nations of the world have bowed to the idealism of the President, and, with the mental reservations typical of their national characters, have agreed at least to attempt the great renunciation. What do they all hope from it? Something probably in exact proportion to their own trust in the power of good. And this, no doubt, is precisely what each will eventually receive from it. Anyway, a start has been made in a new era—the era of Armageddon. And the start has been made because the President of the United States has not flinched from the old proverb, "Aude sapere"—dare to be wise.

GUARANTIES TO PRODUCERS OF WHEAT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it is now time to pay the fiddler. We are engaged in that happy process to the extent of a thousand million dollars. When anybody undertakes to interfere with the market, he must either be prepared to undergo that process or retire from the proceedings early. A great many of my constituents have undertaken to handle all the production in a year of a certain kind of cereal, and they have inevitably either made a fortune or come to grief.

This was a vast undertaking by the Government to corner the wheat market. It had it to do, or it would necessarily have let the market take care of itself; it would have been the ordinary result. Prices of every species of merchandise used in the war—and it included about all of it—were either to be Government controlled or market controlled.

If the Government undertook to control it, it could either buy all that was offered on the open market and sell it the best it could in the event of the war's ending and the prices falling, or it could guarantee a fixed price. The Government adopted the latter process by an act of Congress, under which, by an Executive order, according to power delegated, a price of $2.26 per bushel was fixed on this year's crop of wheat. The Government either had that to do or without its action the commodity would have gone to the market price measured by the demand.

The market price on many other things reached a very high figure. Wheat would have gone to between $3 and $4 a bushel, just as it did during the Civil War, if the Government had not considered the question of fixing the price and buying whatever was offered in the market or whatever was needed for Government purposes as well as for our allies. If it had not made a guaranteed price the producer of wheat would have been discouraged; if the price had been allowed to reach the market level, whatever it might have been, the farmer would not have produced the full quantity of wheat needed for both public and private uses. So, to avoid that difficulty, to encourage the producer, the farmer was induced by a minimum price to put out a large acreage. Last year the price was fixed at something less than this year—$2.20, as I remember—while this year the price was fixed at $2.26 at the primary inland market.

When this was done, it encouraged a very large acreage of wheat. If it had not been done, naturally that acreage would have been put into something else and the result would have been a diminished supply of wheat on the market.

No one could foretell when the war would end, so the Government gave the guaranty for 1919. Unfortunately as to this guaranty, but fortunately as to everything else, the war ended for practical purposes on the 11th of November, 1918. This naturally led to a fall in the price. If the Government had kept its hands off the wheat market, the farmer would have produced wheat under the stimulus of the market price; that price would have reached figures which would have induced him to have put into wheat every acre he could—probably a much larger acreage than that under the Government guaranteed price. That condition might not have continued for so long a time; it might not have lasted long enough to cover both 1918 and 1919; but while the high market price prevailed it would have caused a large acreage of wheat. The Government, however, after it had fixed the price and the war ended, faced a falling market.

I am satisfied with the provisions of this bill, taking it in its entirety, although there are some provisions in it I would not write if I were writing a bill to cover the subject; but none of us on a measure of this magnitude can have his ideas met entirely.

When the price began to fall in other markets we had to make some provision for the wheat crop in connection with the market price. In some markets wheat can be had very much cheaper than it can in this country. I understand that the importation of wheat is discouraged, if not actually prohibited, in our country. Wheat in Australia now sells for something less than a dollar a bushel. In that country there is a limited population and they produce a very large surplus. The whole population of Australasia is not equal to that of the State of Pennsylvania—in fact, it is a million less—and their wheat production can only be cared for by an export trade. They have sent some of it to other countries. Some of it reaches England and the ports of other European countries, but it is not allowed to come into our market.

The price of wheat flour and wheat products generally has not fallen, and it is not likely to fall until the Government begins to sell wheat at a lower price than that now prevailing in the market. Sometime the Government can do this. After it has bought all the wheat that is offered, it can turn around and sell it, and can fix the price of the sale. The Grain Corporation, with its office in New York, is a great distributing agency. It is an agency of the Government. If the Government will sell at a lower price, flour and wheat products will be available to the consumer at a lower price than they are now. I do not know whether or not the Government authorities intend to do that. The administration can keep wheat at $2.26 a bushel until the 1st day of July next, or until the entire wheat crop of 1919 is harvested, thrashed, and turned into merchantable form.

If it wishes to keep up the price of flour products to the consumer for that length of time, it can do so, and it will not lose a dollar in this transaction; but the Government faces a loss on the $2.26 guaranty, or its equivalent, only when it sells at a lower price than the guaranteed figures on just so much as it sells below that figure. It will use this fund on the theory that there will be 900,000,000 bushels of wheat next year, or, taking the winter wheat, that is a potential crop now and adding that to the spring-wheat sowing, and adding it all together, the crop of 1918, and estimating it at from 900,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 bushels, a guaranteed price on that of $2.26, if the Government sells it at $2.26, will cost the Treasury nothing; the taxpayer will be out of pocket nothing; but the American consumer will, during all that time of an artificially maintained price, pay the difference. The Government must decide whether it wants to do that or not. When it is generally known that the $2.26 figure, or its equivalent, is the Government-maintained figure, and every bag of flour and all the wheat products of the country are sold on that basis, just how long the Government will be able to maintain its serenity, in the face of criticism, and save the Treasury from a loss nobody knows. It will have that to do, or we will have to face paying the bill. Just so much as the Government sells its wheat under the $2.26, or its equivalent figure, that much the taxpayer or the Treasury stands to lose—there is no escape from it—or the consumer must pay it. In all the prices in which the Government did not interfere, in which markets sought their legitimate levels, based upon the demand for the article—as with rice, with cotton, with peanuts, with cotton products, with everything raised in every area, North or South, that was not interfered with by the Government and the general market outside the Government bought for its own use for war purposes—on all those matters prices sought their legitimate level. The consumer paid the bill in that case.

Some criticism has been made here on the floor of the Senate because the Government did not fix the price of cotton. We remember, a few years ago, when cotton was down to some 6 or 8 cents a pound. Under the pressure of war requirements it rose to many times that figure, an increase of four or five hundred per cent. Some criticism was made here at times—and I probably was guilty of it myself occasionally, as a matter of argument, at least—because there was no Government price-fixing on this article. When the Government did not fix the price on cotton the consumer of every cotton product paid the bill. Every person who bought cotton fabrics, who bought cotton for any purpose in any form, either for clothing or any other purpose, paid his share of that bill. Now, if it comes to a matter of abstract justice, there is no more reason why the consumer of flour products should not pay his proportional part of the bill than there was why the user of cotton products, during these years of high prices, should not pay his share of the bill on those articles.

If the Government had laid its hand on cotton and fixed its price, it would have had to do one of two things. Either it would have diminished the consumption of cotton, and it thereby would have done an injustice to the producer, or it would have had to do what it did with wheat; it would have guaranteed the price of every bale of cotton produced in the United States in order to keep up the production, the inducement being the only way in which you can make a voluntary production possible.

That was not done, and you and I and the rest of us have paid our part of that contribution. The high price of cotton products has been the natural result of the high price level on the market. As a matter of abstract justice, although the first process is distributed among millions of people, there is no difference between them. Everybody has paid from a few cents to many dollars of this cost. When, however, the Government has guaranteed a price and it finds itself with from 900,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 bushels of guaranteed wheat likely to flow into the bins of the Grain Corporation, or that it becomes liable for upon its guarantee, then the question is presented in a very practical way; so that the Government must stand the loss or it must turn around and sell at the artificial guaranteed price. If it sells at that price, no miller can mill wheat and sell the flour to the consumer, or the by-products outside of the flour, at a low price. The baker can not sell bread at a low price. The miller can not sell bran and middlings, shorts, or anything else at a low price. The natural consequence will be that the price of wheat products will be maintained.

If that is true, the Government will lose nothing. The revolving fund of a thousand million dollars provided in this bill will continue in use as a balance for the purchase of grain until the time has expired in 1920, covering the period for the liquidation of all this transaction; and then, if the Government keeps up the artificial price of $2.26, or its equivalent, it will have that entire sum to turn back into the Treasury and there will be no loss; but I do not think that will be done. I do not believe anybody here who votes for this bill expects it to be done. The public will understand that if the present price of flour is maintained, if bran and shorts and all the by-products of wheat maintain their present prices, the consumer will begin to complain.

The consumer will understand that the Government is responsible for the high price. It can not be the grain exchange this time. No board of trade in Chicago, no grain exchange in New York, none of the exchanges in Minneapolis or Kansas City will be responsible for the present price. The people will know where to put the responsibility.

That is why the Government will not stand the pressure. Even this bureaucrat, of whom my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] spoke very feelingly awhile ago—and I sympathize with him a great deal—even this gentleman, with his metallic cheek and his nerve of drawn steel and his utter insensibility to criticism, would not be able to stand the storm of indignation that would sweep down on him if he undertook to keep the price of wheat products up for all this period, say to 1920, or until the 1919 crop was disposed of. That is what it means, because we will live on the crop of 1919 over into 1920; and I think for one time in the history of Washington there will be some gentlemen at the heads of bureaus whose ears will tingle and who will have no maiden's blush on their cheeks when they hear it. They will not stand up against it. So it means a lowering. That is what I meant when I said, at the beginning here, that the time for paying the musician had arrived—a thousand million dollars of it.

I remember when wheat sold at 60 cents a bushel. Not very many years ago it sold for $1 and less; it sold down to 94 cents. There is no money in wheat under $1. Every wheat producer who keeps books, and who knows what his land is worth, and his agricultural implements, and his team—or his tractor, nowadays—his help, the depreciation of his machinery, who conducts his business like any other business man conducts it, knows that wheat can not be produced unless he goes up into Canada, across the line, where there is cheaper land, for less than $1 a bushel and make anything out of it.

Wheat will come down from $2.26. Say it will come down to $1.26 or $1.25, and that is as low as we could expect it, say, within the next year, by the time the 1919 crop has been harvested and disposed of. When that is done, by taking the estimates here we can tell how this bill was drawn, and that the Senator from Oklahoma and his colleagues on the committee were approximately correct, as nearly correct as it is possible to be in a transaction of this kind.

In the United States, for instance, it is estimated that in 1919, with the increased acreage, we may have nearly one thousand million bushels of wheat. The crop of 1918 was over 900,000,000 bushels—917,000,000 bushels. If it should run up to one thousand million bushels, and all of it should be claimed from the Government at the guaranteed price, and the price should drop to $1.25 or $1.26 a bushel, it means a loss to the Government of $1 a bushel, and with one thousand million bushels it would absorb the amount of the revolving fund provided in this bill. If the decrease is less than the $1, it will diminish the loss by that much, so the appropriation provided in the bill is within the limits of safety. If the decrease is less than $1, we will have something left to turn back of this fund. If not, we have got to pocket the loss and go on.

We can reconcile ourselves to that, because, whatever the loss may be—whether the entire amount of this appropriation or only a part of it—that loss is a part of the cost of the war. It is as much a part of the expenses of this war as the powder that has been burned, the uniforms worn out, the hospitals that have been built and that we will not need, or these concrete buildings that are around on the Plaza, that will stay here in order that the visitor may know that there are old ruins in America as well as in Europe. [Laughter.]

We are running a hotel, a series of hotels, a series of boarding houses. The boarding-house prune and oatmeal are found in the greatest abundance in these concrete buildings across here that are now occupied. They will be there a long time, and they are a part of the cost of the war. What I said here one time, a year or two ago, will apply there. The hardest thing this Government will have to do will be to get rid of these unsightly objects. The Plaza is doomed to be the habitation of Government eyesores, it seems, indefinitely. We tried to get the old buildings down, and about the time we got them down these others went up. But it is a part of the bill we have to pay; and we will pay the bill for the guaranteed wheat price in just the same way.

Some criticism has been made occasionally of the principle of the Government appropriating this money and providing the machinery to liquidate the transaction. I think it ought to be done just as economically as possible. I do not think the Government ought to throw up its hands and quit. I believe we ought to get out with as little expense as can be well contrived, and that is what this bill is undertaking to do. There will be some pay roll connected with it, and it is provided that the administrative expenses shall be not exceeding $3,000,000. I do not think that is out of proportion for a transaction of this kind, comprising a matter of a thousand million dollars and keeping account of wheat production running into that number of bushels, it is not out of the way.

The Government has undertaken to do a good many things. It has practically put all the grain exchanges of the country out of business. The commission men who have acted as agents between the buyer and the seller, all those men who own the property from the time it left the producer until it reached the consumer, have either been working on a very close margin, a small per cent fixed by the Government, or have gone out of business altogether. I never thought a grain exchange was a burden upon the business. I thought that that agent was a middle man who could not well be supplanted.

I know in some places for a good many years it has been sought to eliminate the grain exchange, but just as surely as the grain exchange is eliminated something else takes its place. There is no difference between an elevator run by a grange in North Dakota and one run by anybody else, except it is supposed that the one run by the grange or by the Government or by a combination of farmers will be run at a less profit than a private company which is maintained entirely for gain.

Time is the great test of those things. The bill goes on the idea somewhat, there is a hint in it, here and there in some sections, that a grain exchange is an object to be legislated against. It is provided that they can not carry on their occupation without taking out a license, and being subject to various penalties for violating what are called "evil practices" in the bill. The evil practices are enumerated and lie largely, not in any matter of statutory definition, but all are matters of rules to be made by the department. So undoubtedly when the rules are made they will keep a grain exchange or a member of it from making any money.

Whatever may be the result though, by the time the Government gets through, it will have had to frame up and put into operation something to take the place of it. The Grain Corporation is nothing but a big grain exchange. It is run by the Government. The stock is owned by the Government. It is headed by a very expert wheat man, Mr. Barnes, but when they get through with it somebody will have paid the bill. The Grain Corporation is run by men just like any other business enterprise. They must live and their salaries are paid. The office, the rent, the stationery, the clerical help, all the usual expenses belonging to a grain exchange are found in the Grain Corporation owned by the Government. Those expenses will not be charged up in all probability to the expenses of the war beginning in 1917 or before that time. It will be said that it was conducted at a very low price. The Government never charges up against its transactions any of these expenses and so they make a very good showing a large part of the time.

The United States has the largest wheat production to its credit of any other country in the world. In 1918 it produced 917,000,000 bushels. British India came in as the second area of production with 379,000,000 bushels, in round figures. Then came Argentina with 219,000,000 bushels. The various wheat-producing countries follow in their order, with Australia next with 121,000,000 bushels. I shall ask permission to insert all these figures at the end of my remarks, because I should like to have these productions in 1918 shown in order to compare the productions of other countries with that of the United States. Ordinarily our exports in normal times run from 100,000,000 to 120,000,000 bushels per annum. Under war conditions, beginning with, say 1915 or 1916, our exports ran to over 300,000,000 bushels. If the same figures would be maintained out of the 900,000,000 or 1,000,000,000 bushels in 1919, we would export one-third of it. That will not be maintained, however, under peace conditions. England will draw some of her wheat supplies from other sources. Some will reach her markets from Australia and some from Argentina. British India will resume her shipments, and of the 300,000,000 to 400,000,000 bushels produced in British India, a large part of it will seek the market of England. The foreign demand for our shipment will be lessened. Even if we kept up to the full export of 1917 and 1918 we could not expect to get the prices prevailing during the war in 1919 for our exports.

Wheat products are cheaper in London than they are in Washington. They are cheaper in every South American city; they are cheaper in any settled peaceful market at present, outside of Russia, than they are here. We are paying high prices. We are still living on a war basis. We will continue on wheat products to live on a war basis until the Government reduces the price of the $2.26 wheat. When it does that the taxpayer will make up the difference.

So it resolves itself into a contest between the consumer of wheat products and the man who pays the taxes into the Treasury that supplies this $1,000,000,000. How long that will continue I do not know. It depends a great deal upon public sentiment as to just how soon the public will discover where the responsibility lies.

Prices are not falling in this country very materially just now. They are not greatly falling in Washington. They will be kept up here for some time. Prices will remain at a fairly high figure for most manufactured articles for some time.

I do not wish to see wages fall, and still a large part of the high prices of merchandise is attributable to the labor cost of whatever the article may be. It is bound to remain that way until the prices change. The labor unions tell us there will be no reduction in wages. I do not wish to see the wages unduly reduced. Whether they can keep to the full war figure or not I very much doubt. I am opposed to any reduction in wages except as the reduction keeps pace with the reduced cost of things that the wage earner must buy. If there is any reduction, the fall ought to be made proportionately so that at the time there is a reduction in wages there will at least be a corresponding reduction in rent, in clothing, and in all manner of food products that go into his kitchen, so that in the end he will not be any worse off with whatever reduction is made than he is with the high prices that prevail all along the line at the present time.

The main thing, after all, is to readjust these prices so as to keep everything moving, so the pay rolls will still be alive, so there will be no idle men collected. Out in the soft-coal country there are many thousands of idle miners. It does not make any difference what the miner could get per day; if he has no work he earns nothing. High prices are continuing for him so as to use up at these figures whatever surplus he may have accumulated. So the first thing to consider is keeping the pay roll.

I would rather the high price of wheat would remain than that it should fall out of all proportion and that the pay roll in the milling business would be diminished to the point where it hurts. Every time any industry stops it pinches the coal market. A mild winter calls for little fuel coal. The depreciation in values has led to the liquidation of war contracts and the sale of many merchantable products at lower prices. The result has been that a good many of the manufacturers have ceased operation. When the war contracts were drawn some of them had for a time to slow down or quit altogether. Their civil business was gone. They had no private orders. They began building up with war contracts. Some of them had to build their business from the ground. They had to go out and find their orders. While they are doing that some of their war contracts have been held up here under the bill validating informal contracts, that took its last step here to-day. Some $2,000,000,000 owing to contractors or manufacturers has been withheld from the normal current of the trade. This has contributed to diminish the amount of steam coal used in the soft-coal business. All of it together has contributed to make a rather dull winter.

So when we are speaking of lower figures the main thing, after all, is to keep the occupation going and its doors open. I would rather the mills would continue to run on $2.26 wheat and that the general public would have the cost distributed throughout the entire country than to have distress as the result of the closing down of business that would throw many of the men out of work.

I notice in section numbered 4 in the bill it is provided—

> That whenever the President shall find that operations, practices, or transactions, at, on, in, or under the rules of any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business cause or are likely to cause unjust market manipulation, or unfair and misleading market quotations, or undue depression or fluctuation of the prices of, or injurious speculation in, wheat or wheat flour, hereafter in this section called evil practices, calculated or likely to enhance unduly the liabilities of the United States under the said guaranties, he is authorized to prescribe such regulations governing, or may either wholly or partly prohibit, operations, practices, and transactions in wheat or wheat flour at, on, in, or under the rules of any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business as he may find essential in order to prevent, correct, or remove such evil practices.

I wish here to call the attention of the governmental authorities very briefly to the difficulties under which a miller will labor with this section unless there is a very liberal interpretation placed upon it by the men who operate it.

Some of the milling companies in the Mississippi Valley, from Minneapolis on south, in the northern spring wheat or the winter wheat, mill under contract very large quantities of flour. It is a very common thing for 100,000 barrels to be covered in a single contract. This would require between 350,000 and 400,000 bushels of wheat. A miller comes in to-day. He is licensed under the Government and the department having charge of the sale of wheat. He wishes to fill an order of that magnitude. He buys from the Government 400,000 bushels of wheat at a guaranteed price of $2.26. It is to fill the orders in some instances that will go out to his regular customers. If it is a single contract all to be delivered at once, there is no difficulty about it. He will mill it and in a very short time the whole quantity will be delivered to the purchaser. If, however, he is doing a custom business, he buys that quantity of wheat expecting to sell it in the next 30 or 60 days to the trade. He mills his flour out of it, and if the Government does not keep wheat at $2.26 for him until he has disposed of the entire purchase, the miller is bound to lose on the contract. There is no way to guarantee him against the loss.

Under the old way in the open market with a grain exchange open, he could write what amounted to an insurance policy for himself which was absolutely certain. Every miller handling a considerable volume of business guarantees himself against loss. If he bought 400,000 bushels of wheat at a fixed price, he sold on the market through the broker 400,000 bushels of wheat. It made no difference whether the market went up or down; one balanced the other; and the process familiarly known to the trade as hedging was a perfectly legitimate transaction by which the miller was able to buy for himself on the market an insurance policy covering the risk. So if he came out of the transaction and liquidated on both trades he would even up on the transaction and have the legitimate profits coming from the milling, and those profits on the transaction would be his without loss on the fluctuations of the market. He is not allowed to do that to-day. If a man were to pursue that process here on a board of trade and sell short on the one hand and be long on the other, he would be fined in the sum of thousands of dollars for such a transaction. That is where the miller must have the care of the Government in milling his wheat, and until all of a given purchase has been turned over on the market to the consumer. If that is not done, milling will be a much riskier business than buying or selling on a margin in a grain exchange when there are no governmental regulations.

I trust that Mr. Hoover or his aids or those in charge of the Grain Corporation will so handle section 4, and I am willing to trust them for it, that the millers of the country will be able to transact business without bankrupting themselves.

There were some abuses under the old way of buying and selling wheat on exchanges; I have no doubt of that. But for one abuse there were ten legitimate transactions.

This entire section is too much, if I were to fall into a critical mood with reference to it, written with the idea that every grain exchange and every broker is to be watched because he is a gambler. The most of the business transacted on the boards of trade and grain exchanges of the country, where there was no regulation on that subject, were not gambling transactions. I know many times the volume of wheat was sold in Chicago and Minneapolis. I know, too, that many times the manufacture of cotton cloth from the mill was sold. If all the cotton cloth from the mills were aggregated in a single year and then all the sales of cotton cloth were aggregated on the other hand, it would be found that many times the volume manufactured had been sold. It may be argued that there was speculation. That would not answer it. There might be some speculation, although ordinarily it does not follow, in that product. But the mills sell to the jobber and the jobber sells in many instances again to the dry goods jobber or sells to the retail merchant, so that there are from two to three times the actual volume of cotton cloth turned over which comes out of the mill before it reaches the user or the consumer; but that does not argue that there is any gambling. It only argues that somebody in handling the volume of cloth coming out of the mills turns it over that number of times before it reaches the user. A great deal of the volume of grain exchanges can be explained in the same way. The latter part of section 4 provides:

> The President shall take seasonable steps to provide for and to permit the establishment of a free and open market for the purchase, sale, and handling of wheat and wheat products upon the expiration of this act.

This act, I believe, expires in 1920, as I have indicated. The President must take seasonable steps to remove the hand of the Government from the natural markets of the world. These regulations will be taken off; the Grain Corporation will liquidate its business; this revolving fund will be wound up; the Government will ascertain its loss; the loss will be deducted, to be drawn out of the Treasury; it will be charged up to profit and loss in the bill for conducting the war. I think that is the business way to do it. I think the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the chairman have taken the right way out of this difficulty.

The only thing that I have doubt about is how long the Government will keep the prices of wheat products to the consumer high enough to get even or let them fall, so as to take some of the loss. We are bound to have a loss, and we had just as well take it at one time as another.

When the Government takes its hand off the exchanges, when the natural laws of markets reassert themselves, we shall then go back to the natural price fixed by supply and demand. I suppose the last four lines here in this section anticipate that period. It is proposed to recognize the right of the market to resume its normal operations.

Our export trade is provided for in section 5, which provides:

> Provided, That as between the two articles mentioned preference shall be given to the exportation of flour, except when the public interest would, in the judgment of the President, be injuriously affected thereby.

At some time we shall have to take our entire Government regulation off exports. How long we can continue under present conditions is a considerable query. England has very materially interfered with our exports. There is a long list of prohibitions. It covers a very large variety of manufactured merchandise. She will take our flour exports until she can begin to buy flour cheaper some place else. Then, by the natural laws of the market, she will either cease buying or she will some morning quietly add to the prohibited exports from this country that of wheat and its products. She is taking care of herself. I do not blame her for that. I think if ever I had to abjure my allegiance, if I had that misfortune as an American citizen, I should prefer, if I had to expatriate myself, to swear allegiance to the English Government rather than to any other one under the sun. I would be guided in my choice largely because England takes care of her citizens and subjects as well as, if not better, around the world than any other country of which I know. I do not blame her for taking care of her own people on these prohibited exports of ours. She is only undertaking to return to the normal traditions of trade and manufacture. She is doing that to protect her own market and her own pay rolls.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] referred to other countries that have given guaranteed prices for wheat. Italy in 1919 fixed prices ranging up from $3.96 to $4.44; France fixed a price of $3.84 and $3.96 for last year; England, or the United Kingdom, fixed a price of $1.64 in 1919 and the same figure in 1918. In Australia the price in 1919 is fixed at 95 cents a bushel. Holland has a price of $3.30, as against $2.76 in 1918. Switzerland has a price of $3.18 in 1919, as against $3.36 in 1918. Norway has a price of $4.09 this year, as against $4.38 last year. Roumania has a price of $1.61, as against $1.61 last year. Brazil has a price of $2.16 for 1919. Canada fixed no price guaranty this year, but last year fixed a guaranty price of $2.24½. The United States has a guaranteed price of $2.26. This price is a basic price. That does not mean the price is $2.26 at every place.

The price in New York is $2.39½; in Philadelphia, $2.39; in Baltimore, $2.38¾; in Duluth, $2.22½; in Minneapolis, $2.22½; in Chicago, $2.26; in St. Louis, $2.24; in Kansas City, $2.18; in Omaha, $2.18; in New Orleans, $2.28; and in Galveston, $2.28. The price in Tacoma is $2.20; in Seattle, $2.20; in Portland, $2.20; in Astoria, $2.20; in San Francisco, $2.20; and in Los Angeles, $2.20; these are all Pacific coast points. At Salt Lake City, $2; at Great Falls, Mont., $2; and at Spokane, $2.

Mr. President, as to the production of wheat for 1918, I should like to add, without reading, the tabulation, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not care to take up any more time on this matter. I only wish to say in conclusion that I regard this as an essentially honest act on the part of the Government. I think we ought to pass this bill. In passing this bill we keep the pledge. The proclamations which were issued by the President were issued in pursuance of an act of Congress. We well remember, on the floor of the Senate Chamber here, the controversy that arose in the passage of this guaranty. In pursuance of that power delegated to him by Congress, the President fixed this guaranty. Under that promise this very large acreage of wheat has been sowed. That guaranty holds good for the crop of 1919.

The Government ought to keep faith. If it wishes a response in time of trouble from its citizens again, it must keep faith. It ought to keep faith on this guaranty by the passage of this bill as much as it ought to keep faith in the payment of its 3½ and 4¼ per cent bonds. It is a guaranty in any case for the payment of money, and it seems as though it is a matter of common good faith to pass this bill in the form it is and let the Government get out with as small a loss as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

Gronna	McKellar	Saulsbury	Wolcott

Harding	Moses	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, when I occupied the Senate floor earlier in the day I was assured by those who claimed to be friends of this measure that the Senate was ready to vote. Upon that assurance I, of course, was willing to conclude my remarks immediately, which I did. I feel, however, since the Senate has seen fit to continue the discussion that I should explain my position.

I do not want Senators to think that because I come from a spring-wheat State I want any measure passed which will not result beneficially to the people of the entire country. I wish to say that wheat and grain are not the only resources of the people of my State. I believe, sir, that in the course of a few years our farmers will engage in other industries which, in my judgment, will be vastly more profitable to them than the industry in which they are now engaged.

I have taken some time to make investigations relative to the abundant coal fields of the State of North Dakota. Perhaps the Senate will be surprised to learn that an estimate made by the Geological Survey shows that we have more than 15,000,000 acres of coal lands. It is estimated by the Geological Survey that North Dakota alone has more than 700,000,000,000 tons of coal. I admit that it is not of the highest grade, but inventions and discoveries have been made which will make it possible to utilize that coal and to improve upon it by manufacture so as to render it as valuable for fuel as the best anthracite coal, not even excepting the coal from the great State of Pennsylvania.

During this session the Congress was kind enough to pass my bill which provided for the investigation of the by-products of this class of coal, and $100,000 was appropriated for that purpose. It may astound Senators when I say that we are told that it is possible to reduce the cost of this coal $1.50 a ton by extracting and using the by-products. We know that lignite coal in my State contains a large amount of moisture, but we can overcome that. Inventions have been perfected which have made it possible for us to manufacture lignite coal into briquets and take out practically every bit of moisture. This coal is absolutely as good, I repeat, as any anthracite coal that is found in the great anthracite coal fields. So, I say to the Senate, that wheat is not the only commodity that we can produce.

I am not going to stand here and beg this body to fulfill its obligations which our President has made absolutely under authority of law.

I am going to take enough time to quote from the official statistics and official records of the commissioner of agriculture and labor of the State of North Dakota, which show some of our resources.

We had in that State in 1918, 70,149 farms, and some of those farms are large; we had in 1918, 6,377 miles of railroad, 336 newspapers, 835 post offices, 600 rural free-delivery mail routes, covering a distance of 75,000. The value of animals fattened and killed for home use in 1917 was $5,828,628. We received for live stock, sold for market during that year, $17,813,645; value of the creamery industry in North Dakota for last year amounted to more than $25,000,000. We have more than 200 lignite coal mines in operation now.

So why should it be charged that it is the selfishness of the Senators from North Dakota who urge the passage of this bill? We have other industries, I want to say to you, but we have been and are patriotic enough to continue to produce the best and cheapest food known to mankind, although as a rule we are doing it at a loss. We are asking now that you live up to your agreement; that you fulfill the contract with the farmers of the country, which you were so anxious to make when you took from them more than $1 per bushel because you were anxious to give the people of the United States and the European nations the benefit of this reduction and furnish them with cheap flour and cheap bread.

But I want you to know that we have other industries. We expended last year for support of public schools nearly $9,000,000, and we have more than 5,000 of them, with almost 8,000 teachers, and with a valuation of the school property of more than $15,000,000. We have an endowment of land worth $65,000,000, and when you know that we have a population of less than 700,000 and an assessed valuation of property of only a little more than $400,000,000, but with an actual valuation of more than $3,000,000,000, you will therefore pardon me for digressing and calling attention to the resources of my own State, a State where I have spent more than 40 years of my life, a State to whose people I owe much, a State whose people have made me what I am. But let me say to you that in return for what these people have done for me, I am not willing to surrender to the acclaim of selfish interests and repudiate a solemn obligation which vitally affects my people and which would do a great injustice to them. I am here to urge that the Congress carry out this obligation with the farmers of my State and with the farmers of the entire country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, is anybody opposing the idea of paying the contract price of $2.26 a bushel for wheat?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; there are a number here opposing it, Senators on the other side and Senators on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I confess that I did not know that, because as unjust as it is to the entire American people and as much as it may cost them to make the guaranty good, I can not understand how any man can stand up and oppose making a national guaranty good.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi and I am glad to know that he feels that way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; although the Senator and I differed about this; I did not want to make the guaranty; I did not think it was right; I thought the price ought to be left to the market.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, the Senator and I do not differ as to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But we have done what we have done, and I submit to the Senator——

Mr. GRONNA. I did not differ with the Senator on that. I was in favor of not making a fixed price.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that, because at the time the Senator hoped for a still higher price.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, I did not hope for it, but the price then spoke for itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator solemnly asserted at that time upon the floor of the Senate that the farmer could get a higher price.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In which I did not agree with him; but now the thing has been done and it is settled. Why should we spend time talking about it at the late end of the session, when we have a lot of business to do? I can assure the Senator that there is not the slightest danger of the Federal Government failing in its guaranty of $2.26 a bushel for wheat.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad to have that assurance from the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, why not let us go on with something else?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that there are Senators on this side of the Chamber, and on the other side of the Chamber, who are strenuously opposing this guaranteed price. They maintain that, while they might go so far as to comply with the proclamation of the President and pay the guaranteed price for winter wheat, it should not be applied to spring wheat. I wish to make my position clear.

If we are going to have repudiation, let us have it all the way through, because when Congress first enacted this law the farmers in the States where winter wheat is raised received a price all the way from $3 to $3.42 for the 1917 crop while the spring-wheat farmers did not receive it. The spring-wheat farmers did not complain; we were in a tremendous war; and they were willing to do anything in order to win that war, and if the price of wheat had been fixed at $1.50 a bushel they would have produced all they were able to produce. It was a question of patriotism; it was not a question of profit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember it in that way. I remember that a good many of the western Senators complained about even that price and wanted it made $2.50; but, however that may be, we can vote those opposing this matter down right now and get through with this bill and proceed to some other business.

Mr. GRONNA. If I have won the Senator from Mississippi to my assistance, I may be able to win over some of the recalcitrant Republicans on this side and the obstinate Democrats on the other side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are in the minority, and a very small one at that.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope they are in the minority; but I simply wish to take a little of the time of the Senate to inform them that the winter-wheat farmers, at least, received the price fixed by the law of supply and demand, while that opportunity and that price were taken away from the spring-wheat farmers. I repeat, however, that they did not complain; they were willing to abide by anything that Congress did and by anything the President did.

But I do think that when the question is raised here now, that the winter-wheat farmers again shall receive that guaranteed price, but that the spring-wheat farmers, who have not yet had an opportunity to plant their wheat, shall receive the same shabby treatment from Congress that they received a year ago or two years ago, I think it is eminently unfair.

Let me say to you that when you discourage the production of spring wheat, you have taken away from the American miller the opportunity of making a grade of flour such as they are making to-day, such as they have made for years, which will sell in the markets of the world, and which will be given a preference in the markets of the world. Let me say to you—and I say it from the authority of men who know—that without this spring wheat you can not manufacture the high grade of flour that is being manufactured in the United States. You take spring wheat, with a high percentage of gluten, and it is always the custom to ship an inferior wheat from the South to be mixed with it. You must admit that you can not grow as good a quality of wheat in the winter-wheat belt as we grow in the spring-wheat belt. Any man who knows anything about wheat must admit that. Every miller in the United States will tell you so. Every chemist in the United States knows that I am stating facts. What determines the value of wheat is the amount of gluten in that wheat; and for the benefit of you people who are living in the South, and some of you gentlemen who are living in the North who do not seem to know any more about spring wheat than those who have never raised spring wheat, I want to give you some information about it.

Wheat contains three ingredients or constituent parts: First, its epidermal cells. That is what we call the bran and shorts. Secondly, the aleuron or gluten grains. The gluten may run from 9 to 15 per cent in spring wheat. You will hardly ever find it to exceed 10 per cent in your winter wheat; and that is where the farmer who is raising spring wheat is being robbed. The so-called heart of the wheat is the endosperm or the albumen filled with starch; and you might just as well take rice and mix it with wheat flour as to use nothing but the endosperm in flour. You can not make a good grade of flour nor a good quality of bread from it. But we have had not only Members of Congress combat this proposition, but the very department which should be the friend and the guardian of the farmer has been his worst enemy.

When, a year ago, we inserted in the bill a provision and made an appropriation of $50,000, providing that the Department of Agriculture should install in that great department a small mill and a small bakery for the purpose of making tests, what do we find? We find, upon investigation, that one-half of all that $50,000 has been expended for what? Not for the purpose of machinery, not for the purpose of carrying out this law, but for salaries and for overhead charges.

An estimate was made by the department for $85,000 more this year, and the Committee on Agriculture of the House struck out the entire appropriation; and I find no fault with them. In my judgment, $50,000 was sufficient to do the work to enable the Bureau of Markets to fix standards that would be just—just to the producer, just to the miller, and just to the consumer. It shows what is being done in the department that should administer the affairs of agriculture in the interest of production, in the interest of methods which would improve production, and methods which would improve marketing—and when I use the word "marketing" I will say to you that it has practically no limitation.

Do you suppose that the people of the great State of Michigan, in the manufacture of automobiles or in the manufacture of steel and iron, would go to work and manufacture a lot of automobiles and put them upon the market and ask people what they were willing to pay for them? Do you suppose that the people of Utah would manufacture sugar by the millions of pounds, and leave it to the public as to what price they should pay? Do you suppose that the manufacturers of Pennsylvania would manufacture steel by the thousands of tons, and then be left to the mercy of the public what the price should be? Do you believe that the boot and shoe manufacturers of New England would manufacture boots and shoes by the hundreds of millions of pairs and be satisfied to let the public make the price? Yet that is what you want to do with the farmer. That is what you have done, and that is what you want to continue to do; and the Agricultural Department does not seem to realize the importance of this matter.

I have been chided because I myself farm. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senate that you are not depriving me of a living, no matter what price you fix on wheat.

I will promise you that personally I am trying to keep away from the poorhouse, whether I raise wheat or not.

I want to prove by the Government records that the statements made by some of the Senators here that it is on account of this law that the price of wheat is so high are not true. I want to prove, if Senators are willing to listen to me, that that is not the fact, and that commodities on the farm for which no price has been fixed have increased more in proportion than the price of wheat, more than it was increased even taking the price of wheat based upon prewar times.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] spoke this afternoon for more than an hour. He proved conclusively to the Senate that the price of wheat in the open market was a great deal more when we enacted this legislation than the price provided for in the law, but you were all led to believe, as I was led to believe, that that was the minimum price. When the question was brought up before the Committee on Agriculture we were told that we should not have a maximum price, because such a price might be too high or too low, but we were assured that while the law did not provide for a maximum price justice would be done to producers by fixing a minimum price. It was the argument by Mr. Hoover and others that we had to make a fair price that would pay the farmer a fair return for his labor, otherwise the country might go hungry and we would lose the war. That was at a time, Mr. President, when we had a crop shortage of some 375,000,000 bushels. In 1917 we produced only about as much wheat as we consumed—a sufficient amount for ourselves—639,000,000 bushels.

Europe wanted our wheat. I know of my own knowledge that neutral nations were here in the city of Washington. Some of the commissions were here from the month of August, 1917, until the month of June, 1918, begging to get the grain, begging this Government for wheat, but we said no. The little country of Norway was here, all the Scandinavian countries were here, and they were all neutrals. They offered any price for this grain. They said, "We do not care if you make it $4 a bushel, our people are starving and we want this wheat; we want this food. If you can not give us the wheat, for God's sake, give us some kind of grain, give us barley or give us oats"; but we said no. I know what I am talking about when I say that we said no. That was the condition at that time, and still Senators stand upon this floor and say that the farmers wanted this law enacted. You misunderstood the situation, Senators. You have forgotten what occurred.

Do you know what the greatest expert in the United States has said with reference to the cost of producing wheat? I will put any Senator upon his honor and ask him, Do you want the farmers of this country to produce wheat at a loss, at less than it cost them to produce it? I hardly think any of you do. And yet Dr. Spillman, after an investigation of more than 20 years, made an official record, in which he made the statement that, based upon the labor cost of 1917, it cost, on an average, in the United States $2.47 per bushel to produce the 1918 crop. Are you ready to deny that statement? I challenge anyone to deny that statement. Mr. Owen, of Minneapolis, one of the best-informed men in the United States, not only on the question of wheat but on the production of wheat and other grains, made a similar investigation at his own instance, and at a very large expense, and his calculation and investigation as to cost of producing wheat practically agreed with the figures of Dr. Spillman. He was only a few cents higher per bushel. The great University of the State of Minnesota made another investigation. Their figures, as I recollect, were more than $2.60 per bushel.

I wish to say to you Senators that this is an important matter. Do you want to cut down the production of spring wheat? If you do, just repudiate the contract which you forced upon the American farmer against his will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Was the figure named by Dr. Spillman the average price throughout the country?

Mr. GRONNA. The average price throughout the entire United States; based upon an analysis of 20 years and taking the labor cost in 1917, he stated that it cost an average of $2.47 per bushel. I should like to have the Secretary of Agriculture or Dr. Bland or anyone in the Bureau of Markets deny that statement.

Mr. President, I am not talking merely to hear myself talk. Those who know me best know that I do not care to do that. But I remember that some 40 years ago, when I was but a mere boy, men from New England States and men from nearly every other State in the Union came to the naked and bleak prairies of North Dakota at a time when there were no railroads there. There were innumerable caravans of ox teams and canvas-covered wagons. Young men who had recently been married took with them their wives, perhaps from good homes, and went upon those bleak prairies and trusted to God Almighty to help them establish for themselves and their little families the homes they so much desired. They had no means even to erect a house. They broke sod and built what we call "sod houses." Young women who had a college education went upon the prairies, and for years they battled with conditions—with drought, with hail, with all the things which we have to combat in the production of that crop. They were too poor even to get back home. Many of them settled upon the prairies which were not yet surveyed.

That was 40 years ago, and most of those farmers have only 160 acres. Many of them have comfortable homes now, it is true; but many of those homes are mortgaged. Yet we hear it said that this is a plutocratic industry; that these people, engaged in the industry of farming, are coming to Congress and asking for special privileges. Why do you not go out there and try farming, if it is such a great thing? Why do you not, you Senators, go out there and get a share of this great privilege, if you think it is so profitable? Those men, who were young men 40 years ago, are old men now. Many—and I might say most of them—raised large families. You will find the large majority of those men and their wives toiling and laboring to-day with bended backs, from early morning until late at night, much longer than any of you, Senators, would be willing to labor. They have 160 acres of land, valuable as it may be, but it is not running into the millions, I assure you. So far as I am personally concerned, and so far as my interest lies in the great industry of agriculture, I am willing to sacrifice what little I have invested in farms if you will make conditions such as will benefit the great agricultural class.

You are talking about bolshevism. You are making it! You are talking about people not being patriotic. I call attention to the fact that these patriotic people, many of them who are too old to labor and should not be laboring, were found in the fields of the West from early morning until late at night, with bended back, trying to produce in order that we might have food for our boys. We sent more than 30,000 of the best men we had from our State alone. Somebody had to take their places. Nobody could fill their places but these old men and these old women, who labored by daylight and by moonlight to garner the crops in order that this great country of ours should win a victory. Are you going to challenge the patriotism of those families? Are you going to say that they were inspired by selfish motives because they increased their acreage? I could not convince you even if I showed you the books, I suppose; but if Dr. Spillman's statement is true, as I believe it to be, that, on an average, it cost $2.47 a bushel for the product for which the farmers averaged $2.05 a bushel since the enactment of this law. Where are the unjust profits of the farmer, I ask you?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this is a very important matter and I have a lot of things I ought to say. I do not want to be discourteous, but I do not want to consume any more time than is absolutely necessary to inform the Senate about wheat, because it is evident to me that the Senate is probably ignorant about the production of wheat; but I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I know the Senator is thoroughly conversant with this subject. I am from a State that, while in part an agricultural State, does not produce as much wheat as I know does the State of the Senator, but, nevertheless, has some interest in the subject of agriculture. I have been written to several times in regard to this fixing of the price of wheat, and I am somewhat anxious to have the Senator's views upon the question of price fixing.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be glad to tell the Senator, if I can.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a letter from one of the citizens of my State who says, in addressing me:

The proposed price of $2.25 a bushel for unsown wheat is a plain waste of public money. Are you yourself willing to subscribe to the next victory loan with the knowledge that perhaps as much as one-fifth of your subscription will be used to pay the farmer a dollar more than the market price for wheat not yet planted?

Certainly a large proportion of the nonfarming class may be expected to prove unwilling to do so; and should the Government adhere to its proposed intention it is certain that this policy can not fail to endanger the success of the new loan which under any circumstances is likely to prove to be the most difficult task of this nature which the Government has yet undertaken.

Although it may appear to be dangerous from the political viewpoint to approve this measure, farmers are as patriotic and as self-respecting and as willing to make a sacrifice as any other group in the Nation, though the giving up of an unearned profit can hardly be considered a sacrifice. It is time to stop the useless expenditures of public moneys not only for the above purpose, but for all other unnecessary purposes.

Then I have another letter, reading as follows:

I have wondered many times whether the Government guaranty of the price of wheat has been cut off as to spring wheat. Of course, the engagement should stand as to the winter wheat, but it should be canceled, if in force, as to wheat not yet sown. Will you give me the facts, and, of course, jump in and save us from the spring-wheat loss, if such a thing is impending?

Both those letters were from constituents.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. From farmers?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; from farmers. I replied to those letters about as follows: I stated that at the time this guaranty was made the problem that the United States had was not only to produce enough wheat for our own consumption but to feed our allies and the soldiers on the western front, and in order that sufficient acreage might be planted, the Government gave a guaranty and that guaranty carried through the 1919 crop. Did it not, Senator?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; it did.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And included the spring-wheat crop, because if the war had continued it would have been necessary to have had the full production, including the spring wheat. So the farmers went ahead and made their engagements of seed and fertilizer and implements. In other words, they practically prepared last fall for the spring-wheat crop, naturally preparing the ground, buying fertilizer, buying the seed, in order that they might be ready to produce this spring the necessary supply to feed the soldiers on the western front should the war continue. I replied that I felt in honor that the obligation of the Government extended to the fall or winter wheat crop; but in view of the fact that we had practically contracted with these farmers for the spring wheat the good faith of the Government was at stake, and that it was our duty to carry out our contract and pay the price we engaged to pay when we agreed to take the 1919 crop at $2.26.

I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if I am right in that assumption; if in my reply to these constituents of mine, all of whom are patriotic, all of whom are willing to pay the increased taxation, that the good faith of the Government is at stake; and whether in my reply to my constituents—and I have many more letters of a similar character—I have given them a correct answer? I should like, then, to ask another question, after the Senator has kindly answered this one.

Mr. GRONNA. I think I can furnish better testimony than my own answer to the question of the Senator from New Jersey, which will show conclusively that his answer to his people was correct.

I want to read just the concluding paragraph in the President's proclamation:

Now therefore I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, by virtue of the power conferred upon me by said act of Congress, and especially by section 14 thereof—

Referring to the food bill—

do hereby find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guarantee provided for in said section in order to make effective the guarantee by the Congress for the crop—

Now, mark you—for the crop of 1919, and to assure such producers a reasonable profit, I do hereby determine and fix and give public notice of reasonable guaranteed prices for No. 1 northern spring wheat and its equivalent at the respective principal primary markets, as follows.

Then he names a number of terminal markets, which I shall not name, but he begins with New York at $2.39½ per bushel, and the basic price was $2.26 at Chicago.

Mr. President, I think that fairly well answers the question of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. The President of the United States did the best he could, and we are not criticizing the President for fixing a lower price than we had reason to believe we could get in the open market. He had to deal with labor; he had to deal with all of the consumers of the United States, and it was his best judgment that this was a reasonable price. I have never questioned that; my people have never questioned it. We accepted that price and were satisfied, whether we incurred a loss or made a profit. That has nothing to do with this question.

The President saw that it was necessary, in order to win the war, in order to stimulate production, to give an assurance to the producers that the price should not go below a certain specified or fixed sum. The President was right. He had the consumers in view, which he should have had, as well as the producers. I know that he spent a great deal of time upon this question, for I myself attended a meeting with the President, together with a number of others from different parts of the United States. He received us courteously; he treated us fairly. It was his judgment that the best prices he could afford to fix were the prices which he named in his proclamation. No man could find any fault with that.

The minimum price was fixed by statute for 1918 at $2 per bushel. It was provided in the act that the President had authority to fix the price for 1919, which he did. Are you going to repudiate the patriotic act of the President of the United States? I am sure that he called upon the best experts in this country to ascertain what a fair and reasonable price would be. He did not promulgate this proclamation blindly; he certainly did not want to risk his reputation and fix an unduly high price at the expense of the consumer. The producers have accepted the price, and were satisfied whether there was a loss or a profit to them. If the President had fixed the price at $2, they would not have complained, because we were in the midst of a terrible war, and it is my honest belief that no more patriotic men and women will be found in this country than the farmers.

I do not want to be misunderstood that anything which I have said is a criticism of the administration, for I do not so intend it. I would be unfair should I make such a criticism.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from North Dakota suffer another interruption?

Mr. GRONNA. If it is not too long. I intend to conclude in a moment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, under the rules the Senator from North Dakota can not yield, it seems to me, without losing the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. SWANSON. The absence of a quorum can not be suggested unless business has intervened since the last roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GRONNA. I think that is correct.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Chair quote the rule whereby a Senator can not be interrupted more than once?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not familiar with any such rule.

Mr. SWANSON. I will read the decision on that.

Mr. SMOOT. The last decision, I will say to the Senator, was that it was left entirely to the Senator occupying the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. I have talked a great deal longer than I had expected, but I intend to conclude in a very little while. I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania has withdrawn his request. I do not yield for the purpose of calling for a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to read the statements which I hold in my hand, but I have before me the Monthly Crop Reporter, which is published by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, for February, 1919. I merely wish to call attention to the prices of a few articles, beginning with the price of hogs. The price of hogs on January 15, 1914, was $7.45 per hundred pounds. On September 15, 1918, it was $17.50 per hundred pounds. This advance holds good not only with reference to hogs but to beef cattle, to milch cows, to sheep, and to everything that is being produced; and certainly, Mr. President, there was no law which guaranteed a fixed price upon these and other commodities. So it is absolutely reasonable to suppose that the price of wheat would have advanced much higher than or, at any rate, to the price at which it was when the price was fixed. That price in my locality was $3.07 per bushel. I ask, Mr. President, to have printed as part of my remarks this table, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Average of prices received by producers of the United States.

Prices of articles quoted below as of 1st of month are averages of reports of county crop reporters, weighted according to relative importance of county and State; 15th of month prices are averages of returns from a list of about 7,000 country buyers; State averages are weighted according to their relative importance to obtain the United States averages.]

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should not have taken up this much time, only I felt that it was my duty to inform my friends on this side as well as my good friends on the other side of the Chamber as to the importance of this question. I thank the Senate for its patience.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to prefer a request. I will say, by way of preliminary, that the entire day has now been devoted to a discussion of this measure. So far as I have been able to see, there is no opposition to it. Only one speech has been made against it. In order to restrain its friends and prevent them from unintentionally delaying the measure too long, and thereby jeopardizing its final passage, I ask unanimous consent that hereafter speeches on the pending bill be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to inform the Senator from Oklahoma that at least half a dozen Senators on this side of the Chamber have informed me that they were opposed to the bill and were going to vote against it, and I do not want the RECORD to show that there is no opposition to it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I hope the RECORD will show that there is no opposition to it.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope so, too.

Mr. GORE. If any Senator can muster up opposition he is at liberty to do so, but, so far as I am concerned, I hope that the Senator's speech has dissuaded Senators from persisting in their opposition.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, I think it has.

Mr. GORE. I think so; but I do not think there is any opposition to the bill, and I regret that the friends of the measure have taken this day in the discussion of a measure as to which there is no danger of its being defeated.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I think that this bill is one of the most questionable of the bills pending before Congress to the ordinary American citizen, without explanation; and I am one of those who feel that a miserable economic policy was adopted during the war in fixing prices.

Mr. GORE. I agree with the Senator entirely about that, Mr. President.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, we are called upon to vote an appropriation for the enormous sum of $1,000,000,000 to make good a mistake——

Mr. GORE. It is that.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator admits it is a mistake, and a very expensive mistake——

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENROSE. Requiring the appropriation of one-sixth of the total amount of all the revenues contemplated to be raised under the recently enacted revenue law; and, indeed, in all seriousness, I think we are entitled to the fullest explanation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I come, Mr. President, from a great industrial State, where the wage earners are not in sympathy with this measure. They look at it in some way as tending toward increasing the cost of living; and yet such is the depth of my sympathy that I intend to vote for it; but I want to be fortified with argument. I am in receipt of letters every day protesting against the bill and asking me to vote against it, and my reply is to send to my correspondents the speeches of the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. GORE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. As fully explaining it. If those speeches had not been made, where would I be at? [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. I hope the Senator will explain my explanations, if necessary.

Mr. PENROSE. Moreover, personally I am more persuaded and convinced with every speech that is made to support the measure, notwithstanding it is to make good a folly—an expensive folly—and I hope the Senator will not begrudge a little illumination upon this most expensive blunder. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. I am glad that the Senator is not only almost, but altogether, persuaded to vote for this bill. I think every Senator is.

Mr. PENROSE. I can only defend my course on the arguments presented by the Senator from Oklahoma. I have had his speeches printed at my own expense, and I am circulating them in Pennsylvania as the only vindication that I can obtain for my course in voting for this measure with the great mass of nine or ten million wage earners in factory and in mill.

Mr. GORE. I can only say to that compliment what Juliet said when marriage was proposed to her without her previous knowledge, "It is an honor that I dreamed not of."

Mr. PENROSE. Well, through my efforts the Senator's name has become very well known throughout that imperial Commonwealth.

Mr. GORE. I am indebted to the Senator for that addition to my reputation.

Mr. PENROSE. And were it not for my keen sympathy with North Dakota and Oklahoma and the other wheat areas, and did I consult the selfish dictates of section, as sometimes prevails in this body, I would vote against the measure; but, Mr. President, the prosperity of the western prairies is just as dear to my heart as is the prosperity of any Eastern State. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will realize my patriotism.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator's patriotism is beyond challenge; and I am certain that if he needs any additional fortification through my speeches they have been afforded by the very able and exhaustive—mark, I say "exhaustive"—speeches by the senior and junior Senators from North Dakota and the junior Senator from Minnesota. They will afford the Senator ramparts and bulwarks which can not be penetrated.

Mr. PENROSE. I need all the help that I can get [laughter], and I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not begrudge me any further help.

Mr. GORE. The only explanation in justification for this bill is that we promised to do it; we are simply "standing hitched." That does not really need any elaboration to a man like the Senator from Pennsylvania, who always stands hitched.

Mr. PENROSE. I nearly destroyed my political future by voting for $2.50 wheat at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma. I did it cheerfully, however, and as a result of patriotic inspiration.

Mr. GORE. The Senator's future is much more securely entrenched and fortified than he has imagined. It will withstand many an assault of that character.

Mr. PENROSE. I feel that is true.

Mr. GORE. And if it does not, the farmers of the West will bless his memory.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this bill and all amendments to it may be voted on at 2 o'clock next Monday afternoon.

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will have to be called on that request.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us have the roll call, then. I do not object, but let us have the usual roll call.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from North Dakota has indicated that he would object. Now, I ask unanimous consent to lay this measure aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to lay the pending bill aside. Is there any objection?

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, upon which he demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. OWEN. I second it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I object.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I did not understand the first request of the Senator from Oklahoma. I understood that his first request was to lay this bill aside, and for that reason I objected. I was engaged in conversation at the time with a fellow Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Regular order!

Mr. GRONNA. I did not hear the first statement and withdraw my objection to the first request made by the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is, Is there a second to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. OWEN. I second the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a motion to lay aside one measure and take up another bill is debatable at this stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. GORE. It is not in order after the yeas and nays have been ordered, I suggest.

Mr. LODGE. That does not make any difference.

Mr. GORE. I think it does.

Mr. LODGE. The yeas and nays have not been ordered, as a matter of fact, but that makes no difference.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the call of the yeas and nays be proceeded with.

Mr. LODGE. They can not be proceeded with while there is debate.

Mr. GORE. The rule does not permit debate after the yeas and nays have been ordered. We very often indulge in debate afterwards, but it is out of order.

Mr. LODGE. No; it is not out of order, if the Senator will pardon me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquired if the request for the yeas and nays has been seconded; it has not been seconded up to this time, and the motion is debatable.

Mr. LODGE. The motion is open to debate.

Mr. GORE. I thought the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate. Perhaps the motion to take up the Indian appropriation bill ought to be thoroughly discussed and illuminated. It is a question involving a great many mysteries, obscure propositions, and corollaries, and the Senate ought not to act precipitately upon so serious and far-reaching a motion as that. I am certain that every Senator is anxious to dispatch business, and I hope now that the debate will proceed on the motion to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, we have now taken about eight hours on this bill, the only point of importance in which is the promise of the United States to pay th's guaranteed price. It has taken eight hours of the session, and it is obvious to the country, and it is perfectly obvious to every Member of this body, that it means nothing in the world except a filibuster to prevent business in this body.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Oklahoma is the chief offender. He made a speech that was interesting, but entirely unnecessary, concerning the league of nations, when pressing legislation was crowding the attention of Congress. I heard a number of Senators intimate a suspicion as to whether he was loyal to these great measures or was not secretly and surreptitiously engaged in a filibuster. [Laughter.] The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], made a speech to-day an able and brilliant effort, but entirely unnecessary.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. Those speeches consumed several hours; in fact, three-fourths of a day have been consumed by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Oklahoma in unnecessary discussions about a matter on which I assume they will vote as it is given to them. It seems to me to require considerable effrontery to charge anyone with filibustering when those two Senators have taken up more time than any other two Members of the Senate in the last three days in needless, ill-placed, and unnecessary discussion, when we are within three days of final adjournment.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. I appreciate the humor of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. It is not humor, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. But, at the same time, the Senator can not really seriously deny that he has been the chief offender in this filibuster which is going on.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, Mr. President, I have been confined for nearly five months in the various committees of the Senate, chiefly the Finance Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee, and have been very little on this floor, and have consumed very little time. While the Senator from Oklahoma has been junketing through Europe we have been endeavoring to carry the burdens of state and do the best we can to bring these great measures to a final disposition, and yet the first day he lands in the Senate he takes some half a day in an address upon an academic subject.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PENROSE. Now, in all seriousness, I think the Senator from Oklahoma should be a little consistent before he charges his colleagues with any hidden effort or desire to delay the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Oklahoma was entirely justified in quietly departing when he knew perfectly well that this filibuster was organized at the beginning of the session and would run right straight through and he could not accomplish anything by being here, so he went away.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that if he wants to make a request for a unanimous-consent agreement to fix a time to vote on this bill, there will be no objection interposed by me. I misunderstood the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PENROSE. I do, for an inquiry.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to vote on this bill at the time stated by the chairman, on Monday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object.

Mr. KELLOGG. This bill ought to be pushed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think I can make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we will agree to limit debate to 10 minutes from this time on, we will get a vote speedily on this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to limit debate to 10 minutes on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Georgia for that purpose?

Mr. PENROSE. It is not necessary to yield, for I object to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the request to limit debate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Just on this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. There is a motion pending.

Mr. OVERMAN and other Senators. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is that the Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will not object to the unanimous-consent request; but I understand that under the rules a quorum must be called for before the agreement is made.

Mr. ASHURST. Not when an objection is made.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, I understand——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Pennsylvania, I think, will recall—because he is very punctual in his attendance here—that I have made five ineffectual attempts to get up the Indian appropriation bill. The Senator will remember that when the legislative bill was up I was assured that if I would be patient and wait until the legislative bill was passed the Indian appropriation bill would be next. The same assurance was given me on the Diplomatic and Consular bill, on the conference report on the Post Office bill, and on the fortifications bill; yet, for some strange reason, I am unable to get the Indian appropriation bill laid before the Senate. A moment ago I could not even get the yeas and nays. If I can not get the yeas and nays on a motion to take it up, of course, I could not hope to displace the pending bill.

I thought the friends of wheat, from those States where the wheat voters are, wanted this bill. I thought their voters were demanding this bill. Knowing that Senators would rush immediately to vote for any bill that the voters in those wheat States want, I was paralyzed with amazement to see the Senators from wheat States standing on the floor, hour after hour, talking and practically endangering the passage of this bill; and, for all I know, the suspicion is now being engendered that it is a buffer to prevent the passage of other legislation.

I hope that is not true. I repeat—and I have said it so many times that I am ashamed to say it again—that the Indian appropriation bill is not supremely important, but if it is not going to be passed I want to know it. I do not want to sit around here like a child making mud pies. I want to know if the bill is to pass; and if it is not to pass, the Indians can go. They have no votes. Wheat growers vote, of course, and I expect this billion dollars to go to them. They vote, but the Indian does not vote. He can chase jackrabbits and be neglected; but if he had a vote he could make himself manifest and make himself heard.

I think, too, that the Committee on Indian Affairs is entitled to consideration. Sixteen of the best Senators in the Chamber are members of that committee. Some of the most eminent Members of the Senate are members of that committee. Are you going to cast their work aside? Are you going to say that their work shall go for naught? It is the best bill that we have ever brought out. Moreover, on the 4th of March my official head goes into the basket. I shall no longer be chairman of the committee. I have a pride in this bill, very great pride; and then, Mr. President, I do not want the work of myself and my colleagues on the committee wasted.

I ask now that this billion-dollar wheat-growers' bill be passed, and let us forget it just as quickly as we can.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Why does not the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw my motion, because it would not carry, anyhow. I withdraw my motion now, because it will not carry.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has kindly yielded to me in order that I may ask unanimous consent that debate on this bill and all pending amendments shall be limited to five minutes. I want to help the Senator from Arizona to pass the Indian bill. As he knows, I am a member of that committee——

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator is.

Mr. GRONNA. And I am anxious that that bill shall come up after this bill has been disposed of. I ask unanimous consent to limit debate on the bill and all amendments to five minutes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I will not consent to that unanimous-consent agreement unless it is provided that no Senator shall speak more than five minutes, and that no Senator shall be recognized more than once for any purpose whatever until the bill is passed.

Mr. GRONNA. I will agree to that.

Mr. ASHURST. All right, if that is to be the agreement.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not know that I would want to put myself in that situation.

Mr. ASHURST. All right, then; I object.

Mr. GORE. The Senator understands that when a Senator is in charge of a bill it is hardly proper for him to bind himself to speak only once upon it.

Mr. ASHURST. All right; I will withdraw it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I will withdraw my objection because I can not get any support.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma, before I proceed to discuss this motion, if he is willing to fix a time on Monday at 2 o'clock to vote on this bill?

Mr. GORE. I will say frankly to the Senator that I think we had better vote on the motion made by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am assured that if I withdraw that motion this bill will be shortly disposed of; and I therefore temporarily withdraw it, with the understanding that I will renew the motion if the bill is not disposed of soon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I wish to inquire what disposition was made of the amendment offered by the committee on page 3, line 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the pending question.

Mr. KING. Before it is disposed of I want to be heard.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to add a new section at the end of the bill. I suppose it is in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. KIRBY. I understood that no agreement had been made to take up committee amendments first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may offer it later. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 21, after the words "including the protection," the committee proposes to insert the words "or indemnification."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I made an inquiry of the chairman in regard to this provision, and, as I understood the statement that was made by him and by other Senators who are in favor of this bill, the bill contemplates payment to all millers and all bakers and retail merchants for any losses which they may sustain by reason of a decline in the price of wheat or flour in the market, in consequence of which flour and wheat which they have shrink in value.

It seems to me that is a very unfair proposition. Men who have purchased merchandise in large quantities on the war basis are now confronted by a sharp decline in the prices of the same commodities.

It would seem to me that there is just as much obligation on the part of the Government to reimburse them for the losses which they sustained as to reimburse the miller or the baker or those persons who purchased wheat on the market or flour on the market at market prices, and who now sustain a loss because there will be, or may be, a decline in the price of wheat and flour on the market.

I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Will a motion to strike out the entire provision bearing upon this question be in order now, at a time when we are considering the Senate amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not be in order at this time.

Mr. KING. A further parliamentary inquiry. Would the adoption of the Senate amendment prohibit a motion to strike out the entire provision as amended at a later period?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not.

Mr. KING. Then I shall not submit a motion now or make further objection to action upon the Senate amendment; but at the proper time I shall move to strike out the entire provision bearing upon this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may we not dispose of committee amendments before we take up amendments to come at the end of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been no agreement about considering the committee amendments first.

Mr. GORE. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will not defer offering his amendment until we finish the committee amendments? That is the usual procedure. The request was not made to-day.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well; I will do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 6, after line 5, to insert:

The President shall take seasonable steps to provide for and to permit the establishment of a free and open market for the purchase, sale, and handling of wheat and wheat products upon the expiration of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. I see that this is an amendment suggested by the Senate committee. It is not clear to me, and I am asking purely for information what the chairman had in view in tendering such an amendment.

Mr. GORE. The bill provides by its terms for its expiration on June 1, 1920. It also provides for closing boards of trade and grain exchanges throughout the country. If that time comes and no provision has been made for reopening the exchanges or for reopening the markets, of course chaos will prevail in the markets. It will take some time, of course, for the boards to get to running steady, and I thought we ought to devolve the duty on the President to take such steps as he can. It will be impossible to take any steps to restore normal conditions when the end comes.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, it seems to me, the act expiring by limitation at a given time, nothing further could be done by the President or any of the executive officers that might operate under the provisions of this bill. In view of the fact that the bill does expire by limitation, there is nothing that the President could or ought to do. The machinery itself ceases to operate when the time for the expiration of the bill arrives.

Mr. GORE. It may be possible that nothing can be done and, of course, there would be nothing to do if there is nothing we can do, but I thought perhaps there would be steps we could take to bring about normal conditions. Of course, in the whole country a great many products are in an abnormal condition. We have got to get back to normal sooner or later. We ought to facilitate the transition to normal conditions as much as we can. It is more a declaration of policy than any fixed direction as to the duties to be performed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are we not really providing for additional interference with what would be normal, and is it not better to leave the normal to take care of itself?

Mr. GORE. If that day comes and the markets are kept closed until that day Senators are wiser than I am if they can tell what will happen. We go over a precipice, where I do not know, and I do not know what the effect will be. Wheat begins to move in my State and in Texas early in June, and I dislike to see it begin to move into a demoralized market. I do not know what the President can do, but I do know it is desirable to have a free and open market.

I may say that, as Senators know, the handling of the wheat crop is rather a delicate process and involves a great deal of credit, credit pyramiding upon credit. If the trade does not know that normal conditions are established they can not expect to provide themselves with credit.

As Senators know, if an operator in wheat has $100,000 worth of capital of his own, he will buy $100,000 worth of wheat and hedge against it. Then he will use the elevator receipts, and on those he will borrow $90,000 more. He will buy $90,000 worth of wheat with that, and he will hedge against it in the market, and upon the elevator receipts will borrow, say, $80,000 worth, and this wheat has to be carried for 12 months from the time of harvesting in June and July until the time the last wheat is consumed in May or June of the next year.

It is a very delicate process, and I do not know whether it can spring up over night or not. If the President can do anything to repair the situation and to speed the restoration of normal conditions, he ought to do it. Of course, if there is nothing he can do, as the Senator from Utah suggests, there is nothing he will do. I need not say to the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Georgia that I am as much opposed to continued interference and meddling as any man can be, and yet we are at an abnormal height, and we ought to come down by the lock-and-dam system instead of rushing down a cataract and jumping over the precipice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 6, line 14, after the word "announce," to strike out the word "no" and insert:

Provided, That as between the two articles mentioned preference shall be given to the exportation of flour, except when the public interest would, in the judgment of the President, be injuriously affected thereby. No——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word in regard to a verbal change in the amendment. Following the reading as I did I am unable to make very good sense out of the amendment taken in connection with the text, considering the punctuation and everything. It occurs to me that there should be a comma after the word "thereby" and that that should not be the end of the sentence. This proviso is thrown in parenthetically.

Mr. GORE. The Senator may be correct about that. If so, I ask that the necessary change be made.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereby," in the committee amendment, strike out the period and insert a comma and the word "no" with a small "n."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 7, before the words "wheat flour," strike out the word "or" and after the words "wheat flour" to insert "bran or shorts."

Mr. GRONNA. That should read "bran and shorts."

Mr. GORE. I think the word "or" ought to go out and "and" be inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 8, line 23, after the word "wheat," to insert "semolina"; on page 9, line 6, after the word "wheat," to insert "semolina"; on page 9, line 13, after the word "wheat," to insert "semolina"; in line 13, after the word "wheat," to insert "semolina or wheat flour"; in line 18, after the word "wheat," to insert "semolina or wheat flour"; in line 23, after the word "wheat," to insert "semolina or wheat flour"; and on page 10, line 3, after the word "wheat," to insert "semolina or wheat flour," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That whenever the President shall find it essential in carrying out the guaranties aforesaid, or to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States from any country named in such proclamation, or to export from or ship from or take out of the United States to any country named in such proclamation, wheat, semolina, or wheat flour, except at such time or times, and under such regulations or orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress: Provided, That no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another. Any person who shall import, export, ship, or take out of the United States, or attempt to import, export, ship, or take out of the United States, any wheat, semolina, or wheat flour in violation of this section or of any regulation or order made hereunder shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both: Provided further, That when the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat, semolina, or wheat flour produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to law, and ascertains what rate of duty added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat, semolina, or wheat flour at the time of importation would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed or prevailing under the direction of the President under or pursuant to this act, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat, semolina, or wheat flour when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat, semolina, or wheat flour under any then existing tariff law of the United States.

Mr. KING. If I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I ask for information under what authority is there a provision that in time of peace the President may prohibit exports from the United States; and does the Senator think it is wise to give the power to prevent the exportation of wheat or wheat products to any country?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator's memory is playing truant for the moment, because I know he is one of the best lawyers in the Senate. The first embargo laid in this country was, I think, the 23d of December, 1806. It was a general embargo against the exportation or importation of all goods. Even our own ships were not permitted to depart from our ports. That measure was repeatedly reenacted and was sustained by the courts of the country.

There can not be any question about the power of Congress to lay an embargo in peace as well as in war. As to the advisability of conferring this power, I may say that my first inclination and my first determination was to favor the elimination of this power from the bill. It struck me that the power to prevent exports was to favor the elimination of this power from the bill. It struck me that the power to prevent exports was in every circumstance a bad power; that it could only result in depressing the price of wheat here at home and in aggravating the indemnity to be paid.

I almost hesitate to tell the Senate what changed my mind. Those in charge of the measure in the other House advised me that they were advised that the fear existed that if the power to prevent exports was not included in this bill there might be an arrangement abroad not to take our wheat except at a price so low that it would not be justified by world conditions, and at a price so low that it would enormously aggravate our burden. The power to prevent its export was included in this bill in order that if any effort of that sort should be made abroad we would refuse to let them have the wheat they did need until they consented to take such supplies of wheat as they required at a reasonable price.

When assured in such an authoritative way that that fear was entertained I felt that I had no choice but to invest this authority in some agency of the Government, because if that contingency should arise the power ought to be invested somewhere to combat it, and I was not willing to take the responsibility of withholding such a power and subjecting ourselves to such treatment. I do not know that there is any danger of such treatment or that the fear was justified, but my information upon the subject did not leave me free as to the course I should take.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word. I am familiar with the act to which the Senator refers, and I know it provoked a great deal of discussion, and there was a great deal of opposition to it, and its constitutionality was questioned. As I recall the statute which was passed at that time, it was not left to the discretion of the President of the United States to lay the embargo upon certain articles. Our controversies at that time with France and with Great Britain and the discrimination under which we were suffering in our trade and commerce with Great Britain and France alternately led some of the American statesmen to a recommendation of the policy of an embargo for the purpose of retaliation.

Mr. GORE. It was a very unwise policy.

Mr. KING. I think it was very unwise, and proved to be very unwise, and the President of the United States at that time was subjected to a great deal of criticism and the officers were subjected to a great deal of criticism in their attempt to enforce it. They attempted to enforce it in the shipment of cargo from one port to another, from one part of the United States to another, and it provoked, as I recall the history of that time, not only verbal controversy but there were some very serious physical encounters. If the Senator will pardon me, and then I shall desist, notwithstanding he has made a very logical statement as a justification for this legislation, I am not persuaded that the reason he assigns warrants us in departing from sound economic principles.

Mr. GORE. This is undoubtedly an unsound economic proposition and only as a weapon of economic warfare would it be justified at all. I remind the Senator that one of the early acts during Jefferson's administration authorized the President to lift the embargo either as to France or England if either one of them would revoke their orders in council or the decrees which were oppressing our commerce.

This I may say to the Senator is merely a case of economic isolation, which will probably become universal at an early date. At least if the power is to be vested in our league of nations to make economic isolation universal, it might be well to experiment with it on a small scale.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask whether amendments are in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not at this time.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 13, line 7, after the word "flour," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the President may, if necessary in his judgment to carry out the provisions of this act and protect the public interest, extend said time for a period not exceeding 60 days in which to sell or dispose of any wheat which the Government may have on hand and to wind up the affairs of the Grain Corporation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there was considerable division of view in the committee in regard to the insertion of the proviso just read; and while I am not authorized by the committee to withdraw it, I desire to say that Congress will be in session next winter and in the spring of 1920. If any situation should arise which shall necessitate the extension of the time, Congress could then act. I would rather see the Senate disagree to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on page 11, after line 16, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, it is proposed to add at the end of line 16:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to be a guaranty of the price of spring wheat harvested in 1919 to the producers who did not sow or produce spring wheat in 1918, and no portion of said moneys herein appropriated shall be paid to such producers of spring wheat.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to offer just a word in explanation of this amendment. The armistice was signed on November 11 last, and the guaranty which was given extended to the crop of 1919. I have been advised by a number of correspondents that in certain sections of the country where, as a rule, only winter wheat is produced, it is now proposed by a good many farmers that they shall not in the spring plant corn, but shall sow spring wheat, when they have not been accustomed heretofore to do so, in order that they may get the benefit of this guaranty. I think that that is a gross imposition upon the Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the Senator from Ohio know about what time spring wheat is usually sowed?

Mr. POMERENE. That of course depends upon the section of the country.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is there any section of the country in which it has now been sowed?

Mr. POMERENE. I assume there is in the Southwest. I am not entirely familiar with the matter.

Mr. KELLOGG. There are sections of the country in which spring wheat is now being sowed.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that as to the sowing of the spring wheat that is now in the ground and which was certainly sowed under the guaranty provisions of the existing law, would it not be fairer to provide that from the date of the passage of this act the crop of spring wheat which is sowed shall not receive the benefit of this appropriation?

Mr. POMERENE. Possibly that may be a wise suggestion. My only thought is to prevent the deliberate taking advantage of the bounty of the Government under circumstances which can only be equal to a gross fraud upon the Government. I may suggest that this amendment be adopted, and if it needs any modification in conference let it be done there. The matter was only called to my attention recently.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator from Ohio entertain a modification of the amendment so as to provide that spring wheat should have been produced in 1917 or 1918 by farmers desiring to get the benefit of the law? With many farmers, I am told, it is the custom to alternate crops, so that a farmer who is producing wheat in 1917 might be planting for corn in 1918 and then seeding spring wheat in 1919.

Mr. POMERENE. I hardly think that it would be necessary to modify the amendment in that respect. If farmers were encouraged during the existence of this law guaranteeing the price to sow spring wheat in 1918, and they had not been sowing it theretofore, I am disposed to think that they are entitled to the benefit of this guaranty; but if they did not see fit to take advantage of the guaranty that was given in 1918 and go along down to the point where the war is practically ended, and then see this opportunity to get their hands into the public till, I think that Congress owes it to the public to prevent just that situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know of a condition in one State in the Union where there are a great many renters, and I know that some renters who did not raise wheat in 1918 have already rented land especially adapted to wheat growing, and expect to put that land in wheat. They did this sometime ago. Now, it does not seem to me that they should be cut out, and they would be cut out under the Senator's amendment. They have made their preparations for seeding spring wheat.

Mr. POMERENE. If they have made their preparations, I can see how there may be some equity in their behalf. It is not my desire to interfere in that respect.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the Senator can see the difficulties of applying his amendment without working a very great injustice on some very innocent people.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Does not the Senator from Ohio believe that the guaranty by the President of a price of $2.26 a bushel for wheat applies to the grower of spring wheat in 1919 as well as it does to any winter-wheat grower?

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, it goes to him.

Mr. STERLING. He has made his arrangements with reference to the sowing of spring wheat.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from South Dakota misconstrues the purpose of this amendment. The farmer that I have in mind is the man who knows that the war was over in November, but he sees that under the order which was made by the President he can come in and change his crop, refuse to plant corn, put his corn land into wheat, and then get the benefit of this excessively high price.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it seems to me there will be the greatest difficulty in the world in administering a provision such as that proposed by the Senator from Ohio. It goes to the matter of intention upon the part of the sower of wheat, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. STERLING. The Government would have to be able to determine whether the man intended to sow wheat before the armistice.

Mr. POMERENE. It is the matter of intention to get the excessive price. I believe that this safeguard ought to be placed in this bill, and I insist on the amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, just one suggestion about this matter. This amendment would prohibit any farmer raising any spring wheat in 1919 from obtaining the guaranteed price unless he raised spring wheat in 1918.

Mr. POMERENE. That is true.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to suggest to the Senator that, of course, the spring wheat that is sowed in much of the southwestern section is already being planted. That is one serious objection. Another serious objection——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator is speaking of a locality in which spring wheat is generally produced.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I am speaking of a locality where the prevailing crop is winter wheat, but where they do raise some spring wheat.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well; if they are raising spring wheat, then this does not affect them at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; it affects them, because they have planned to sow some spring wheat this year, as I was informed by gentlemen from Texas the other day, on land which they ordinarily do not use for planting spring wheat.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, why are they planting it?

Mr. KELLOGG. Because they are going to get a good price; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. POMERENE. Most assuredly. They have an opportunity to skin the Government and the public.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is one practical objection, and a very serious objection, which is that the Government would have to survey practically every farm. The only way this wheat guaranty can be administered—and I think the chairman of the committee will bear me out in this statement—as shown by the hearings, is to pay a stated price at the markets. It is impossible for the Government to deal with each farmer. That was found to be too complicated; otherwise the Government would have adopted the plan of opening the market and settling with each farmer separately, but it was found that that would entail such a detail of work on the Government that it was practically impossible of operation. This provision would compel the Government at every wheat-purchasing station to deal with every farmer as to what land he raised the wheat on or whether he raised wheat in 1918, and the Government would have to have a force and system which could not be put in existence between now and harvest time.

Mr. POMERENE. There is some provision for the making of regulations.

Mr. KELLOGG. The only regulation the Government made is this: It licenses every purchasing warehouse. All the wheat is sold at the stations, which are authorized and required to pay a stated price. The farmer brings his wheat there and gets the price. No inquiry is made where it comes from or where it was raised, but if the farmers bring it there before June 1, 1920, they get their money. This amendment would require the Government to know every piece of land on which wheat was raised in the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no.

Mr. KELLOGG. And to show whether the farmer raised the wheat on the land previously or whether he did not.

Mr. POMERENE. That is an exaggeration which the Senator does not quite expect——

Mr. KELLOGG. I am quite accurate, I think. Let me see——

Mr. POMERENE. No; the Senator is not at all accurate in that statement.

Mr. KELLOGG. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will show him that I am accurate.

Mr. POMERENE. I beg the Senator's pardon, too. In my own State last year there were only, as I am told, 3,000 acres of spring wheat. The Senator does not mean to say that in a State where there were millions of acres of winter wheat there has got to be an inspector sent around to each particular farm?

Mr. KELLOGG. There are no such States; that is the trouble. Now, suppose we take the State of Kansas——

Mr. POMERENE. There is no such state of facts as the Senator suggests.

Mr. KELLOGG. Take the State of Kansas or the State of Nebraska——

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, even if that is true, it is a poor argument to be made against a restriction of this kind, that it may require a little diligence on the part of the Treasury in order to prevent fraud upon the Government.

Mr. KELLOGG. It would not only require that, but it would require the purchaser in every market town to show whether the grain was raised on land on which the farmer had raised wheat in 1918. That is exactly what it would require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am in accord with the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I think it is a most meritorious one. Reports are coming in from all over the country that some farmers who have been planting their fields in recent years with alfalfa, corn, sugar beets, and other crops will this spring plant them with wheat, in view of the high price they will receive.

The farmer who was patriotic last year and endeavored to raise wheat to feed our Army, our allies in Europe, and our people at home deserves the support of the Government under the circumstances; but I have no sympathy for the man who did not grow wheat last year, but planted something else because he thought he might get a higher price, and this year plants wheat on the theory that it will be more profitable, and neglects other crops which the people will need fully as much as they will need wheat.

The larger the crop of wheat we have the greater the sum that will be taken from the Treasury.

A very large crop of wheat ordinarily would mean a low price in the world's market, but under existing circumstances the more wheat raised the more the Government will have to pay out of the Treasury. The patriotic farmer who planted wheat last year ought to be taken care of by this guaranty, but the man who did not ought not to be.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator know how much the increased acreage of wheat was in his State?

Mr. CALDER. For the crop of 1918?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. I do not know.

Mr. GRONNA. For the information of the Senator I will say that the report shows that in the State of New York the acreage in 1917 was 40,000 acres, and in 1918, 50,000 acres, an increase of 10,000 acres. That would be an amount that could be divided up among four farmers in the western section of the country.

Mr. CALDER. I assume, Mr. President, that the same proportionate increase will be found in most of the States of the Union.

Mr. GRONNA. I take it the farmers of New York are just as anxious to get a fair price for their product as the farmers of my section of the country.

Mr. CALDER. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio gives them a fair price, and takes care of the farmer who planted wheat in 1918.

Mr. GRONNA. I am merely calling attention to the facts and showing that the acreage increase in the Senator's own State was infinitesimal; it did not amount to anything.

Mr. CALDER. I am not thinking of my State alone; I am thinking of the tax upon the people of the whole country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment, not because of the injury that I think it will do to the owners of farms, but more because of the injury that I think it will do to farmers who are renters. I am concerned for them more than for anybody else, and I know that this amendment will affect many renters in some sections of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRBY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. All laws authorizing or permitting the making of restrictions against the sales of cotton for export or laying embargoes on or authorizing or requiring licenses for the exportation thereof are hereby repealed.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, this amendment is plain and easy of understanding. It only provides that all laws authorizing the laying of restrictions on the sale of cotton for export, and all laws authorizing the laying of embargoes, and authorizing and permitting or requiring licenses for the exportation of cotton shall be repealed.

We are not asking any bonus of the Government here or any guaranty for the price of cotton. We are not asking anything of the Government except to take off the restrictions, since the war is over, and give us an opportunity to sell our cotton.

It can not be said that the allies can complain about it because it shows a disposition upon the part of our people now to give themselves an opportunity to do business in the products that have been restricted and held here, to the great injury of all the producers, up until this time. We are only asking that the restrictions that ought not to be here now shall be removed; and I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that it was my original purpose to request the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to adopt and report an amendment of this character—an amendment modifying the law which authorizes an embargo on cotton. When it was decided to retain the authority to limit the exportation of wheat, I thought it would be inconsistent to do so. I was desirous of avoiding anything which might clutter up the measure and defeat its final passage. I think, in view of the amendment just adopted, offered by the Senator from Ohio, that objection has largely departed. I understand that the amendments reported by the Senate committee, if agreed to by the Senate, will be accepted by the House, thus obviating a conference. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio and its adoption, I think, will necessitate a conference. I had intended to offer an amendment of this sort on a measure which is to come up between this time and the expiration of this session. I am not authorized to accept this amendment. If I were, I would certainly accept it. I should be very much pleased if the Senate would vote this amendment into the bill. It is justified by every consideration of sound policy and justice.

There are 2,000,000 cotton producers in the South. Their product, essential to their prosperity and one of the chief contributors to our national prosperity, has been denied the privilege of entering into foreign commerce with certain neutral countries. That privilege is now limited, notwithstanding the armistice was signed nearly four months ago. Every effort has been made by the cotton-producing States, by Representatives and Senators from those States, to prevail upon the authorities here in Washington to revoke this order. We have failed. I think the Congress ought to modify that law and permit cotton to enter into international commerce. It is now selling for less than it is worth. It is selling in my State and in the State of Texas for less than it costs to produce it.

I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For a speech or for a question?

Mr. GERRY. I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GERRY. I want to ask the chairman, if this embargo is repealed, if it would not be allowing cotton to go into neutral countries and to Germany, thereby breaking the armistice?

Mr. GORE. I assume that authority would exist to prevent the breaking of the armistice. I am as anxious to keep the terms of the armistice in good faith as I am to keep the terms of the wheat guaranty in good faith. Wheat is now being allowed to go into Germany to the amount of 6,000,000 bushels a month.

SEVERAL SENATORS. And the American people are paying for it.

Mr. GORE. I do not know as to that. I raise no question as to the wisdom of that policy, but I do question both the wisdom and the justice of permitting wheat to go into Germany to feed their people and at the same time exclude cotton from going into neutral countries. I do not think this involves the shipment of cotton into enemy countries. It would permit, however, the shipment of cotton into neutral countries. The Government has now limited the shipment to neutral countries. It ought not to be limited. The war is over. The President, in his address to Congress on the 11th of November, declared:

The great war thus comes to an end.

If the war is ended, why preclude cotton from going even into Germany? But I am not insisting upon that. I do insist, however, that cotton ought to be allowed to go into the neutral countries. The reason why it is excluded is because certain countries with whom our relations have been friendly think that it might resuscitate the factories in Germany to their prejudice. I do not think it will reach Germany. Perhaps it ought not to reach Germany. My purpose is to permit it to go into the neutral countries. Exclusion from those countries is unjustified.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. GERRY. Will the Senator yield again just for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GERRY. I simply want to ask the chairman, if cotton is allowed to go into neutral countries, if that will not mean that eventually it will go into Germany; that the neutral countries will buy more than they need, and that will be simply a subterfuge; and that therefore the matter should be left to the President to deal with?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator's question on broader grounds. There is no authority under international law to prevent innocent goods from going to neutral countries. It has been done. It has been done during this war. There was a list of noncontraband articles agreed to by the London convention in 1909, in which it was declared that certain articles should never be classified as contraband. The first article upon that list was raw cotton, but there is no acknowledged authority to prevent innocent goods from going into neutral countries even if it is certain that they will go to enemy countries. Contraband of war can be interdicted from going into neutral countries if they have enemy destination. Conditional contraband goods can be prevented from going into neutral countries if they have an enemy destination and be designed for the combatant forces. Innocent goods can not, in accordance with international law, be precluded from going into neutral countries, even if they have enemy destination and be intended for the combatant forces.

These are the old-fashioned principles of international law before the new era of the "new magic." I do not think any country on earth ever observed those principles except the United States of America. It did observe them during the Civil War. Arms shipped to Matamoras, Mexico, designed, undoubtedly, for the Confederate service, were interdicted. I believe it was in the Peterhof case that the Supreme Court of the United States held that those goods could not be interdicted even though they were consigned to Matamoras, and even though it was morally certain that they had an enemy destination, because that fact had not been conclusively proved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that no part of the agricultural interests of this country has suffered during the war as have the cotton growers of the Southern States. First, in 1914, the entire market was cut off. Cotton could not go abroad. Sixty-five per cent of it was dependent upon the foreign market, and cotton went down to almost half the cost of production. Last year's crop cost the average farmer about 30 cents a pound to produce it. It has been beaten down by its own Government from the price at which it was selling last September. In the early part of last September cotton was selling at 38 cents a pound. Merchants and farmers advanced money upon it around 30 cents. The War Industries Board raided it, threatening to fix a price that they had no authority to fix and no power to maintain; and after talking about it, and talking about it for several weeks, they broke the market, and got it down to about 30 cents.

Then, when they admitted that they had no authority and no power to fix or maintain a price we thought the market would begin again, and what did we find? The War Trade Board, under the power given as a result of cotton having been put on the embargo list, was declining licenses to ship cotton even to Spain in considerable quantity compared with the demand of that country; it was requiring licenses even to go to Japan; and the market was again broken.

Now, we do not come to the Government that has injured the cotton grower—breaking his price down by its conduct from 38 cents a pound to now about 24 cents, substantially less than it cost him to raise it—we have not come to the Government and asked a billion dollars to take care of our crop or to take off our hands the cotton that has been cut off from its markets. We simply ask that the embargo put upon it be taken off of it, and that it be permitted free shipment; that is all.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I just wish to ask the Senator if he does not remember that when cotton was put in the food bill, authorizing the Government to fix the price, he and all his friends cut it out?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On the contrary, I stated that if they would fix the price at any reasonable sum I would not object; but I added that "if you do it, the Government does not need the cotton, the Government will not need to buy any, and you will burden the Treasury."

Mr. KELLOGG. But the committee put it in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the committee did not.

Mr. KELLOGG. The committee put it into the food bill; and when it came into the Senate cotton and iron and steel and many other products were in the bill, as I recall.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is mistaken. They were put in on the floor of the Senate——

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And we all joined together and took them all out.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not join together with anyone else. I voted against taking it out. I was in favor of leaving it in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, most of those industries joined.

Mr. KELLOGG. The iron and steel industries and cotton made a combination and cut it out. That is what occurred.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the folly of putting into the bill things that the Government did not intend to take over was realized, and the burden it would place upon the Government if it gave a guaranteed price was also realized.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator knows that the wheat growers opposed putting wheat in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I insisted at the time that if the wheat market was to be in a measure controlled by the Government, a guaranty that would take care of the wheat grower should be made; and I voted for $2 wheat and I voted for $2.50 wheat. I said upon the floor of the Senate, "If you wish to put cotton in and give it a relatively increased price, so far as the cotton growers are concerned, I am willing, but I do not think it is wise for the Government; for, if you give that kind of guaranty, our people will plant for an immense crop, and the Government may be compelled to buy from 16,000,000 to 20,000,000 bales of cotton"; and my opposition to it was, at least in part, upon that ground.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is just one other question I wish to ask the Senator. I am not familiar with this situation. Has the President got power now to remove the embargo on cotton?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think he has.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why does he not do it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I differ with him about it. I think he ought to.

Mr. KELLOGG. What reason is given for not doing it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MYERS. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the pending amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment by adding at the end of it the following words:

Provided, That no cotton be allowed to go to Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, or Turkey.

I do not think we ought to furnish cotton to any of the central powers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are under the blockade. The objection to that is that when the war is over it would prohibit its going there.

Mr. GORE. Let me suggest to the Senator that he put in a proviso that the President can prohibit it from going to Germany.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it is already prohibited. The blockade stops that; and the amendment of the Senator from Montana, even after peace is reached and the blockade is raised, would continue the prohibition against cotton going to those countries.

Mr. MYERS. That would be very agreeable to me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But not to the owners of cotton.

Mr. GORE. Six million bushels of wheat a month are now going to Germany.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that will give rise to another difficulty, because objection might be made to a shipment on the theory or supposition that it was going there, and the shipment might be entirely stopped from going to any country upon the assertion that it was likely destined to Germany.

Mr. MYERS. No; I think it would only stop or prohibit shipments going directly to Germany.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a request of a very important character, and that it comes at a time when it is impossible for the Senate to understand the merits of the proposed amendment.

No committee, so far as I am advised, has taken any testimony upon this proposition. We do not know what the reason is why the embargo is not raised already. It is conceded that the President has power now to raise this embargo and without legislation. Unquestionably some of the Senators who have been speaking upon this question to-night have insisted that this thing be done. It is apparent that it has not been done; and is there anybody here who believes that it has not been done without some cause? Do you not believe there is some good reason why this thing has not been done? And are we, without information, to pass upon this amendment and to take out of the control of the Commander in Chief this most important activity? Do we want to act at this time upon legislation which is so serious in its nature without having examined it most carefully?

I can not recall any proposition which has been presented to the Senate which seems to me to be more in the nature of a half-baked proposition than this. Before you repeal a law of this character, which was entered into after the most careful consideration, and before you repeal it against the protest of the President, who has in his hands its execution, should you not at least know the facts? Should not some one appear here and state why this embargo has not been raised before? Do you want to act in this way without careful consideration and stay the hand of the President of the United States in the performance of his duty without even knowing why he himself fails to perform the thing which the Senators now seek?

I simply ask that Senators give this matter careful consideration. For one I know nothing about it. I have had no opportunity to ascertain the facts. So far as I know it may be that the embargo should be removed, but the people who are intrusted with the duty of enforcing it must have some reason or else this would not be done.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana withdraws his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it had not been my intention to take up any of the time of the Senate at this late hour in the day and in the session in the discussion of this bill. I assumed, and I believe that assumption was right, that the Senate was practically unanimous in the belief that the guaranty given by the President under a law of Congress as to wheat should be carried out in good faith. I supposed that the bill would not be before the Senate more than a few moments before it would be passed.

I regret, Mr. President, that this amendment has been offered. In my judgment it endangers the success of the legislation which I believe we are all anxious to bring about. As has been truly said, the President has the right under this law to remove the embargo on cotton, and that is what this amendment seeks to bring about. No new legislation is necessary if the President wants to act. The fact that he does not act and remove the embargo is evidence to my mind that, at least, in the judgment of the President, the embargo ought not to be removed. Personally, I do not know why it should be removed.

It may be that if this were a separate proposition and a bill by itself or if hearings could have been had and those connected with the enforcement of the embargo act heard, I would be convinced that we ought to pass this law and repeal the embargo act. But I would not want to vote for its repeal now without a hearing and without getting the viewpoint of the President and those whose duty it is to enforce the law.

I am impressed, and that is a serious argument, with the fact that has been stated on the floor of the Senate here this evening to me that this very day when the President was in his room across the hall in the Capitol he stated to members of the Senate that he did not intend to remove the embargo on cotton. If he did so then he is convinced in his own mind that it ought not to be removed.

I do not know how serious it might be. I do not know what his argument is. I do not know what his reasons are; but at least he is convinced it ought not to be done.

We are now confronted with this legislative proposition: If we tack this amendment on the bill that everybody wishes to become a law it will put up to the President the necessity of either doing what in his judgment ought not to be done or to veto the entire bill, and thus defeat all legislation on the guaranty of the price of wheat. If his reasons are in his mind sufficient that it would be seriously wrong to remove the embargo, he would veto the bill, and the Government would therefore not be in a position to carry out the guaranty that has been solemnly made under the law of Congress. So it seems to me it is not right to tack on this bill this particular amendment.

I think those facts have a direct bearing on the question, but there is still another reason. I heard the argument made in the Senate when the pure food act was before this body. I remember how we put in a large number of articles in that clause which gave to the President the power to control and fix prices, and that cotton was one of them. I voted, I think, for all those amendments. I thought we ought to keep everything out or put practically everything in. I thought if we were going to limit the price the farmer ought to get for his wheat we ought also to limit the price of those things he had to buy to produce the wheat.

I remember an argument being made by some Senator from a cotton State that was rather appealing to me. It was to the effect that there was a reason for putting wheat in and limiting the price that did not exist as to cotton, because he said we must have wheat to live, and while it would be a hard thing to get along without cotton, we could do so. The man who produces wheat did not want the price limited and the historic fact is that the day we passed the law wheat was selling in Minneapolis, as I remember it, for a little over $3 a bushel on the open market, and when we placed the limit at $2 it practically meant that every farmer in the United States contributed to the Treasury of the United States for war purposes $1 for every bushel of wheat he owned. So there is some equity if the farmer lost a dollar a bushel then for his getting next year $1 more. That is outside of the guaranty. I take it we all want to make the word of the Government good since it has been solemnly pledged, no matter what the reason may have been, but that is the equity in it.

Mr. President, there is another thing. Nobody knows now whether there will ever be a dollar necessary to pay to the farmer producing wheat that is to be harvested next summer. We know that if the wheat crop, which now appears to be in good shape, would turn out and no accident happen, if God gives us rain and the wheat yields as it indicates now that it will, if the hail does not destroy it, if pests do not destroy it, it looks now as though it will be necessary to use some of this money to make that guaranty good. But there is no certainty about it. It may be that wheat on the open market will sell higher next year than it would sell now if there was no law on the subject.

It seems to me, Mr. President, taking it all in all, that it is hardly fair to the President to put up to him a proposition that he must either sign a law that will repeal the embargo act or he must violate the pledge of the Government and veto the entire bill.

I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. POLLOCK. Mr. President, there seems to be a misapprehension on the part of a great many Senators here as to the purposes of this amendment. I might say that I am heartily in favor of the passage of this wheat bill whereby the taxpayers of the United States will contribute to the wheat growers of America more than $1,000,000,000. So far as I am concerned—and, I believe, all those who represent the section of the country from which I come are concerned—we are going to see to it that the pledge of the Government made through its President is kept to the letter. We are going to pledge to the wheat growers of America $1,000,000,000 out of the pockets of the American people, and there need not be any fear on the part of gentlemen on the other side or from any section of the United States that the pledge will not be carried out.

But, Mr. President, that is not the only thing before the American people right now. This is not the only question which is of vital interest to a large number of farmers of this country. The farmers from my section of the country, from the South, from the cotton-producing section, have by reason of this war, by reason of the action of the Government in part, lost more than $1,000,000,000 in the fall in the price of cotton recently. Cotton has dropped, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has said, from around 38 cents a pound down to a little over 20 cents a pound. The cotton growers have lost from $70 to $80 a bale. On a crop of 12,000,000 or 13,000,000 bales that means a loss to the people of the South of more than $1,000,000,000. We are going to take our less like men and we are not going to come here and ask the Government to make good any loss we have suffered.

In order that Senators may realize fully how this has struck the South, if you take 20 cents a pound as the reasonable and ordinary price for cotton, and that is higher than it was before the war, the amount we are going to appropriate out of the Treasury is more than enough to pay every dollar that the southern cotton crop, the American cotton crop, would bring in gross without allowing one cent for the use of the land, one cent for fertilizer, one cent for labor, one cent for marketing, one cent for anything else. We are going to vote to you gentlemen in the wheat section as much money out of the Treasury as the whole cotton crop of the South is ordinarily worth, and more still.

What is the proposition before the Senate at this time? We merely ask that we be given a free market, as far as it is possible to sell our crop. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas is not merely to raise the embargo that the United States Government has established against the exportation of cotton. There is no embargo. Let me read it:

> All laws authorizing or permitting the making of restrictions against the sale of cotton for export or laying embargoes on or authorizing or requiring licenses for the exportation thereof, are hereby repealed.

There is not an embargo as far as the United States is concerned. Whatever embargo foreign countries have adopted and put in force we can not change by the passage of any act here. But, Mr. President, we can repeal a law which gives any board here in Washington the power to require a license before cotton can be shipped out of America to any other country, and that is all the effect this amendment will have if it is adopted. We ask the balance of the country, we ask the American Senate, we ask American people to do this as a matter of common justice to us. We ask no money out of the Treasury. All we want is that these restrictions be taken off the free movement of cotton wherever the Government of the United States can take it off. We can not take it off in so far as France, Italy, Germany, Austria, England, or any foreign country is concerned, but in so far as the restriction placed upon the movement of it as far as the United States Government is concerned, we ask that these laws be repealed in order that in so far as we are concerned we may find an open market for our cotton. That, Mr. President, it seems to me, ought to be sufficient to appeal to the sense of fairness and justice of every Senator in this body.

We are going to give you $1,000,000,000. We do not ask you for a billion dollars for our cotton; but we do ask you to help us, as far as it is in your power, to open up the gates of commerce and let us go out and sell that cotton wherever we can, and that you do not require us to get a license, which is oftentimes refused, and which, so far as I can see, is without any reason at all.

I therefore hope the amendment will be adopted for whatever it is worth. I do not believe it is worth as much as perhaps some might think, but whatever it is worth I hope it will be adopted in order that we may get the benefit of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say a single word. As I understand it, we agreed in the armistice to maintain the status quo; and therefore if we undertake to change it, and it would be a change to remove any embargo, we violate that agreement. I imagine that is the view of the President, though, of course, I know nothing about it. I do not see how he could fail to take that view. It seems to me an unfortunate preface or preliminary to a league of nations to begin by breaking existing agreements.

I am for this bill. I know it is an enormous sum of money. It was improvidently contracted, but it seems to me that it is a debt of honor that ought to be paid and must be paid, and to attach to it something which I should think it extremely improbable the President would sign—for I do not see how he could sign it—is a way of beating the bill that is not very creditable to the Senate and would not be very creditable to the Congress if the House should agree to it.

Mr. POLLOCK. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. POLLOCK. Is it not a fact there is no embargo, in so far as the United States Government is concerned, on the exportation of cotton?

Mr. LODGE. I supposed there was.

Mr. POLLOCK. Where did you get the information upon which to base such a supposition?

Mr. LODGE. What does the amendment propose?

Mr. POLLOCK. To repeal all laws that have placed any restrictions upon the exportation of cotton.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from South Carolina draws a line of distinction between restriction and embargo. The repeal of any laws affecting the status quo agreed to under the armistice is a breach of the armistice to which we have agreed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think for the United States to take an item off its own embargo list would be a change of the status quo.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. POLLOCK] that there is no embargo, that it is only a restriction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not agree with the Senator from South Carolina. I think that the President put cotton on the embargo list, and there is an embargo on the exportation of cotton, and I think it has to go out under the rules and regulations prescribed by him and licenses issued by the War Trade Board.

Mr. LODGE. That is my precise impression.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am agreeing with you.

Mr. LODGE. I was disagreeing with the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts upon that subject, but I do not understand that for the President to take it off of our own embargo list interferes with the status quo. The status quo is the blockade of Germany and Austria, and for us to allow cotton to be exported without a license does not mean that it will go to Germany or Austria at all, but the blockade continues just as the status quo provides. We have taken barley off the embargo list since the armistice was signed. Did that interfere with the status quo? We have taken a number of items off the embargo list in the last 30 days. Indeed, the rules as to the export of cotton have been modified since last November.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Without taking any stand on the particular question as to whether we have an embargo or not, at least the President, as I understand it, has declined to remove it. I understand the President was here to-day and talked with Senators; perhaps he talked with the Senator from Georgia. If he did, I should like to know if he told the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should not feel at liberty to repeat any discussion I might have had with the President.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I will not ask the question. I thought perhaps you would not object to stating that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I would not feel at liberty to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not at all sure that I would not agree with the Senator fully, but I at least would not want to take this action until the President's side could be heard. If he has only indicated his ideas in confidence and the Senator can not give it to the Senate, I would not like to act upon it until I had that information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have perfect confidence in my judgment as to the propriety of relieving all agricultural products from the embargo.

Mr. NORRIS. I likewise have confidence in the Senator's judgment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will yield to the Senator if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I was just going to agree with the Senator so far as his judgment is concerned, and yet I think that when the President has the duty to enforce this embargo and refuses to remove it, I am justified in halting before I act without having the President's side.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not criticizing the Senator from Nebraska. When we allowed this embargo to go into the espionage act, we first beat it on the floor of the Senate on my motion, because I considered it a weapon put into the hands of any set of men dangerous to the people of the country. Subsequently we went into executive session, and upon the assurance that it would only be used during the war to keep supplies out of Germany and Austria, I moved to reconsider the action of the Senate and put the embargo back. Now, I know it has served its purpose. I am glad we took barley off the embargo list. That was done since the armistice; that was within the past 30 days. The Senator from California presented to me views on that subject that made me feel that it was an outrage to keep barley on the embargo list. Other agricultural products have been taken out of the embargo list since the armistice. This did not change the status quo; and I think it but fair that cotton should be taken out.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have always been under the impression that no one more than the Senator from Georgia has wanted to have Senators fully informed upon any question before being called upon to act with reference to it. Now, if I understand the Senator from Georgia, his position is this: A reason has been given by the President, with information from those who have been executing this authority, against doing what this amendment proposes to do. What that reason is we are not permitted to know. The Senator from Georgia, I have no doubt, with all propriety withholds that information, and as against the withheld information, upon the ipse dixit of the Senator from Georgia, he would have us take his word and say that this thing should be done, when he knows that we do not know the things which can be said upon the other side. I ask the Senator from Georgia, with all respect and deference, if he thinks that is the right position in which to put Senators?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we understand it perfectly. The Senator from Massachusetts suggested the objection, which was that the terms of the armistice required the status quo maintained. Now, the status quo does require the continuance of our embargo list, for within the past 30 days barley has been removed from the embargo list and other items have also been removed from it.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not fair to say—or to assume, at least—that the Senator from Massachusetts did not give the reason why the President was keeping it on the list, because, as the Senator says, the President has taken it off of something else within the last 30 days? So there must be some other reason besides that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not believe there is another reason. I have never heard any other reason suggested. I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not heard any reason for his action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have given the only reason that anyone has communicated to me. I can say that much to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it is evident the President did not even give to the Senator from Georgia his reasons for keeping it on.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the only reason anyone has ever suggested to me, and I insist that it is not a reason which should control action by Congress.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it seems to me there ought to be no great mystery about the embargo on cotton. Cotton is peculiarly available for making nitrocellulose, which is an explosive, and the Germans have, of course, been desirous of getting cotton; but they have been using wood pulp since 1916, which is within a few per cent as available for making nitrocellulose as is cotton.

The British Government has a complete embargo in the form of a blockade against any explosives going into Germany or any cotton going into Germany. The Germans have surrendered their fleet; they have surrendered their submarines; they have surrendered their warships. They are perfectly defenseless against the blockade which Great Britain has established. There is no reason in my mind, when Norway and Sweden want to use our cotton for the making of cloth, why the cotton should not go to Norway and Sweden to be used in the making of cloth.

So far as this embargo on material is concerned on going into Germany, Great Britain herself is now sending to Germany all of her surplus pork products, while we are supplying her with new pork products.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Oklahoma permit an inquiry?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Does he still retain the same position concerning filibustering as he gave expression to three hours ago?

Mr. OWEN. An inquiry came from that side of the Chamber with regard to the reason, and I am answering that inquiry. It will take me about two minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator's remarks are interesting, but he is taking a great deal of time and delaying this bill.

Mr. OWEN. But the Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized in the Senate as the leader of filibustering on that side.

Mr. PENROSE. I am beginning to suspect that I have an able colleague in the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Oklahoma will not use many minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad to know it.

Mr. OWEN. I have explained now the reason why cotton has been regarded as subject to the embargo.

I do not know what commitments might have been made some executive officer in dealing with an allied commission that might meet in London with regard to certain products here and there. There may be some agreements of that sort of which I have no knowledge; but I think the Senate is entitled to know if agreements committing the United States against shipping cotton abroad exist. I think we have a right to know it. If we do not know it, I think we have a right to act as if they did not exist. I do not believe that the Senate of the United States should be kept in darkness with regard to commitments made in behalf of the United States. If there are commitments made, we are entitled to have them; and, if we are not advised with regard to them, then I am in favor of acting regardless of any such commitments.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has stated. If this were a proposition where there had been an opportunity to be heard by the President and his advisers, and they did not give us the information, or give any reason why the law should not be repealed, then I would follow those who say it ought to be repealed; but here we have a proposition presented to the Senate without an opportunity for those in favor of it to be heard.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think that if any such agreement had been made to bind our Government it ought to have been made public, and if it has not been made public, have we not the right to conclude that it was not made?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will not yield just at this moment. If there is any agreement that was kept secret I could not say whether it ought to be made public, unless I knew all the circumstances. Without knowing, I should say yes. I am not trying to make an argument against this proposed amendment, if those who enforce it, particularly the President, decline to take it off and have the power to do it, and, without giving him an opportunity to be heard, it does not seem to me to be right to pass the law. If he had the opportunity and had the time to give us the information, and refused to do it, as has been stated by those who favor the amendment, that would be an entirely different proposition; but there has not been such an opportunity.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. The very fact that he declined to remove it, having the power to do so, makes a fair and honest presumption that, in his judgment, it ought not to be removed; and, without giving him or those who enforce the law an opportunity to give their reasons, I am opposed to putting up to him the necessity of either vetoing another proposition or backing down on that. If it were standing by itself, I would not hesitate to vote for it, because then he could veto it without hurting anything else.

Now I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am glad to say to the Senator, before making the observations which I wish to make, that I am very much in favor of the bill carrying the appropriation for the wheat growers of America, but, as was suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], if there is an agreement which prevents the President from removing the embargo on cotton, the American Senate is entitled to know that such an agreement exists and the reason for its existence.

This is no simple, trivial, little thing; it involves an amount equal to a billion dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator that the Senate ought to know; I am not disputing that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Pardon me, if the President has given no reason——

Mr. NORRIS. He has not had an opportunity.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, the matter has been discussed with him repeatedly. A delegation of Senators from the South called on the President this afternoon and discussed it with him.

Mr. NORRIS. Privately; but not a single Senator is at liberty to disclose what the President said. There has been no opportunity to hear his side.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] says that there has been no reason given by him.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not mean that the President does not have a reason.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Georgia was the head of the delegation which presented this request to the President.

Mr. NORRIS. If we had had this matter pending before a committee, or something of that kind, or if it were where there had been some opportunity to ascertain all the circumstances, then the argument of the Senator would appeal to me and would be decisive; but I submit that it is a dangerous thing at the very end of a Congress to put up to the President the proposition that this pledge of the Government as to the price of wheat shall either be violated or that he shall be compelled to do what, in his judgment, he ought not to do—remove the embargo on cotton. I will say to the Senator that if he will put it in a separate bill here to-night, so that it can stand on its own bottom, I will vote for it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have no desire to embarrass the President, and I would not put this amendment on the bill if I knew it would imperil the passage of the pending measure; but I do not see why it should embarrass the President. I am quite interested in saving to my constituents a billion dollars; it is a matter that affects me quite as deeply as the possibility of displeasing the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. KIRBY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to limit further debate on this bill and amendments to five minutes, and that no Senator shall speak on the bill or on any amendment to the bill more than five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have the request stated.

Mr. GORE. That no speech by any Senator on the bill or amendments hereafter shall be of more than five minutes.

Mr. KING. The Senator means, five minutes on each amendment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; on the bill, or on any one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 10, line 5, after the words "United States," to insert a new section, to be known as 6a, which I will ask the Secretary to state. After it is read I desire an opportunity to explain it briefly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 5, it is proposed to insert a new section, section 6a, to read as follows:

SEC. 6a. That cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of low middling, or cotton that is below the grade of low middling, or, if tinged, cotton that is below the grade of strict middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned, or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed," shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is simply to provide that, in the contracts for delivery of cotton, cotton of unmerchantable grades shall not, as now, be tendered on a contract. Under the present cotton-grading law the cotton-grading committee has standardized a great variety of grades of cotton, so that the exchanges are tendering these very low and unmerchantable grades to such an extent that it has driven legitimate business away from the exchanges and has practically converted them into mere gambling places and not a place for legitimate business. In other words, there is now a difference of anywhere from $25 to $30 a bale between the contract and spot market. This amendment is simply to make the exchanges legitimate trading places and make the contracts commercial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I call attention to page 3 of the bill. A few moments ago I invited attention to an amendment tendered by the committee, and stated that at the proper time I should move to strike out those parts of the paragraph that related to the matter then under consideration.

I now move to strike out, beginning on line 20, page 3, and ending with the word "crops," on line 25, the following words: "including the protection or indemnification of millers, wholesalers, jobbers, bakers, and retail merchants who purchase in carload lots against actual loss by them on account of abnormal fluctuations in the price of wheat and wheat flour of said crops."

It seems to me that the Government is under no moral obligation, and certainly under no legal obligation, under any of the proclamations made by the President to care for the losses, if there should be any losses, upon the part of bakers or merchants who may have had flour on hand when the armistice was signed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not think that language ought to be stricken out. As the chairman of the committee explained, it was absolutely necessary to keep the grain in the millers' hands, and 10,000,000 bushels were constantly in transportation in the form of flour, and without that guaranty the milling of grain in the country would stop; that is all there is of it.

The chairman of the committee suggests that an amendment, after the word "crops," so as to read, "the fluctuations in price of wheat and wheat flour of said crops due to Government action," would certainly remove any possible objection that the Senator has.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, because I will have no chance to explain the amendment any further, as I presume the few words I uttered would be construed as part of my five minutes? I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that if this bill goes through in the way it is drawn, persons who are engaged in the milling business, or bakers, or wholesalers, or retailers, who bought flour or wheat months ago, and who now would lose by reason of any decline—not any decline caused by the Government, but by the operations of the law of supply and demand—could not compel the Government to reimburse them?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly not, because there can not be any decline until the Government fixes the price, and there never will be any decline until the Government takes off the price on the product, so as to lower the market, and then the loss comes; and if the words "due to Government action" should be inserted, they would cover everything.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. KING. Suppose the Government concludes to let the law of supply and demand take its course, and the farmers put their wheat on the market—if at the end of the year, or at any time when it is called upon to purchase the wheat under the guaranty, it would do so, and in the meantime under that law wheat goes to $1.50 per bushel, would not those persons who bought flour and wheat at war prices be entitled to reimbursement for their loss at the hands of the Government?

Mr. KELLOGG. The Government can not take off the guaranteed price. It has been made and fixed, and fixed in this law; and there will be no fluctuations, no decreases at least, until the Government takes off the price which is fixed upon the wheat; and when it does, of course, it may go down. In that event the Government would make it good, but it would only make it good once. If it made it good on wheat, it would make no allowance for it on flour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, beginning on line 20, after the word "trade," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the following words: "including the protection or indemnification of millers, wholesalers, jobbers, bakers, and retail merchants who purchase in carload lots against actual loss by them on account of abnormal fluctuations in the price of wheat and wheat flour of said crops."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I want to give my support to the motion of the Senator from Utah. Why should we protect them? We have made no obligation to them. It is the farmer who raised the wheat that I want to take care of. I do think the obligation of the Government is enough now. That is all right; I am in favor of taking care of the farmer, if some of the wheat-growing people did help beat us on cotton just now. I have stuck by them all the way through on wheat, and I am going to go the rest of the way; I think it is right; but I do not believe in carrying this to the merchants.

I hope the motion of the Senator from Utah will prevail.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia must be under a misapprehension as to the effect of this amendment. The only indemnification that it provides for is where a miller is obliged to sell his wheat at a less price than he paid, due to the action of the Government. The Government compelled him to buy it at $2.26.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why, the Government could not compel him to buy it at all.

Mr. GORE. Well, the Senator understands that wheat must move in this country from the farm to the table. The millers have to buy wheat at the Government price or else they have to stop operation. There is not any choice about it. That is the practical situation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is not all. The ruling was made by the Food Administration that if any miller did pay any other price than the one fixed the miller lost his license.

Mr. GORE. Yes; that is true. It was a sword of Damocles over his head. He had no choice. Now, the Senator will realize that when the Government reduces the price below what the miller paid, and leaves wheat in the miller's hands which he bought at the high Government price, the Government ought to make good the difference between the high price which it compelled him to pay and the price which results from the Government's letting wheat go to the market on any other basis than the market price.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. KING. It has been stated repeatedly by the advocates of the bill that if it had not been for the Government fixing the price of wheat it would have gone to four or five or six dollars a bushel. Suppose the mills, retailers, and wholesalers had purchased wheat, the Government not having fixed the price, at four or five or six dollars a bushel, does the Senator think——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the war should suddenly come to an end——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oklahoma has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move now to insert after the word "crops" the words "due to the action of the Government." I think those words ought to be in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma to insert, on page 3, line 25, after the word "crops," the words "due to the action of the Government," so as to read:

> Including the protection or indemnification of millers, wholesalers, jobbers, bakers, and retail merchants who purchase in carload lots against actual loss by them on account of abnormal fluctuations in the price of wheat and wheat flour of said crops, due to the action of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President. I now move to strike out section 5 of the bill. I am in favor of carrying out, of course, the promise which has been made to the farmers. I think the Government is under obligation to pay according to the proclamation which was made by the President; but I do not think it is necessary to perpetuate the machinery which is now in existence and to create another organization in part as provided by the bill. I believe all that is necessary is for the Government to pay the amount it has agreed to pay. I am opposed in time of peace to the Government superimposing itself upon the States—going into the States and licensing individuals so that no man may engage in the purchase or sale of wheat or flour without obtaining a Federal license and making himself amenable to the rules and regulations and being subject to prosecution under the Federal law for a violation of those rules and regulations.

Mr. GORE. This license is just as odious to me as it is to the Senator from Utah. I consented to it only as a matter of necessity. The Senator will observe that in section 2 the committee struck out the words "create and" and substituted the word "existing," so that it reads "use any existing agency or agencies." We do not intend to have a multiplicity of agencies in this country. I am not certain that this artificial situation can be relieved or that we can restrict the ways and means through which it shall be enforced except by the use of the machinery through the operation of which we got into this situation.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I now move, on line 2, page 11, to strike out the figures "$1,000,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$500,000,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have been obliged to be out of the Senate during the greater part of the evening, and I wish now to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. Section 4 is still open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out on line 4, on page 6, the following language: "$10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than four years, or both," and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. President, I have not been giving this bill the attention which it no doubt deserves. I wish to say to the Senate, and I say it in all sincerity and with all the earnestness with which I am capable, that when it is proposed to authorize anybody to make rules and regulations simply governing trade transactions and then fine a man $10,000 and send him to the penitentiary for two years for having violated those rules and regulations, any such provision is simply barbarous and a disgrace to a democracy. There is no use in it; there is no sense in it; there is no dignity in it; there is no democracy in it; there is no republicanism in it; there is no humanity in it.

While it is said these rules and regulations will be made by the President, they will, in fact, be made by some clerk, and to impose a penitentiary sentence upon a man for failure to obey the order and mandate issued by some clerk is an outrage upon decency and any such provision in the bill is a reflection upon the committee that reported it.

I therefore move to strike out those words and insert $1,000 fine, which, indeed, is entirely too much.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the adoption of this amendment. The bill bristles with penalties from beginning to end. It was my purpose to have the committee recommend the elimination of some of them, but it was an oversight.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the same amendment should be made in line 10, page 8, by striking out "$5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. GORE. I will accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I move, on page 9, line 10, to strike out the words "or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 10, line 21, I move to strike out "$5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. REED. Before the bill goes to the Senate I move to insert before the word "willfully," in line 23 on page 5, the words "intentionally and," so that it will read: "intentionally and willfully."

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to that amendment and will accept it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I move that the same amendment be inserted at the same point in all the penalty clauses in the bill.

Mr. GORE. That is acceptable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the proposed amendments are agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KELLOGG. The question is now on the so-called Pomerene amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the Pomerene amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be considered to be a guaranty of the price of spring wheat harvested in 1919 to producers who did not sow or produce spring wheat in 1918, and no portion of said moneys herein appropriated shall be paid to such producers of spring wheat.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to explain that amendment. It simply means this, and I want the Senate to understand what it is: Unless a farmer can show that he raised spring wheat in 1918—he may have made all preparations to plant his crop and raise it in 1918—but unless he can do that he does not get the guaranteed price, while everybody else gets it. You will find that spring wheat is being planted in all the Southwestern States. That is not all. Every grain raiser sells his wheat at a market town, and the market town has got to find out whether he raised spring wheat in 1918 or not, and if he did not they allow him no price and he will sell his grain in a country where there is no open market.

In my judgment the amendment is inequitable and unjust and will require the Government to make every elevator company in every part of the country an agent of the Government to find out where the spring wheat came from and whether the man had raised any in 1918 or not.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if I may say just a word, I believe the Senate wants to be just in this matter and wants to see that the Government pledge with regard to the price of wheat is fulfilled. It will not be just nor will the Government pledge be fulfilled if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is adopted. It will be unjust, of course, to the owner of the land on which the spring wheat is grown in 1919 in many cases. It will be unjust to the tenant in many cases. It may be that the owner, notwithstanding the inducements for raising wheat in 1918, found it impossible by reason of his particular situation to grow wheat, but he is so situated in 1919 that he may grow wheat. Relying on the pledge of the Government, the guaranty of the Government made in September, 1918, he prepares his ground and sows his crop in the spring of 1919 in pursuance of that idea, and the preparation that he has made for the spring wheat crop in 1919.

Take my own State, for example, where we grow both the winter and spring wheat; winter wheat in the southern part of the State, where I think there is more winter wheat grown than there is spring wheat. There is a tenant on a farm there. He raised in 1918 not a bushel of spring wheat, and he grows winter wheat that year; but he changes his tenancy or moves into the northern part of the State or moves to the newer country west of the river where it is all spring wheat, and relying on the Government guaranty he prepares his ground in the fall of 1918 for the spring wheat crop of 1919. The Government has not fulfilled its pledge to him and has not done justice by him——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize that we have got to a point where it is very unpopular to try to save any money for the public under any circumstances, and particularly is that true when we are dealing with this subject. I submit there is not an instance before the Senate now in which it is shown that one party has moved from the southern part of the State of South Dakota to the northern part of the State of South Dakota. The amendment which I have offered, and which was adopted, presents this situation: Spring wheat in South Dakota and in Ohio or Indiana and Illinois is not yet sown. They are starting to sow wheat of this kind now that the armistice has been signed, and they conclude they will sow spring wheat because they can get the high price guaranteed by the Government. That course by men who pursue it is not prompted by patriotism; it is prompted by self.

Mr. President, I do not know why the United States Senate should sit silently by when men are threatening to take this very course and thereby take the money out of the Public Treasury. I do not yield to other Senators in any respect in their eagerness to have good faith kept with the farmer. We ought to keep faith with the farmers when the pledge has been made, but they ought certainly not to adopt a method whereby they can take advantage of the Government, and ought not to be permitted to do it. For these reasons I insist upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to get some light on this proposition. The form of the amendment, as I take it, will mean that a farmer who raised spring wheat in 1918, whether he raised 10 bushels or 10,000 bushels, will be paid the full price for his wheat in 1919 whether he raises 10 bushels or 10,000 bushels. I can not see the fairness of that rule. There are entire sections of this country that raise nothing but spring wheat. There are other entire sections that raise nothing but winter wheat. The winter-wheat country will get the guaranteed price for what it raises, but the spring-wheat country will get a less price, being obliged to sell upon the open market.

Mr. POMERENE. It is to be assumed that if there is a spring-wheat section, they are raising spring wheat; but what I am seeking to do is to go into those sections where they have not been raising spring wheat, but are doing it now because they can take advantage of the Government. That is the reason for this amendment.

Mr. REED. The Senator knows I have a very short time.

Mr. POMERENE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. REED. Will he just let me ask him a question for light? Is it the idea of the Senator from Ohio that if it passes in this form, then if a man rotates his crop and is prepared to plant spring wheat this year and would have planted it any way, even if he did not plant it last year because it was rotation year, when he had corn in that ground, shall not be allowed to plant spring wheat this year?

Mr. POMERENE. In only a very small portion of the country has spring wheat been sown up to this date. In sections in the northern and central West they have not even begun plowing for spring wheat, and in many of these sections the reports show that the people, instead of planting corn in the spring, are going to refuse to plant corn and sow spring wheat. It is to meet that situation.

Mr. REED. Of course, the Senator supposes that that will come, but it is the fact that the man in the spring-wheat section rotates his crop; that he plants his field with corn in one year and perhaps some other crop another year, and then comes his spring-wheat year. So a great number of men in the spring-wheat section will be cut out under this provision, and I can not see why you should discriminate against one section.

Mr. GRONNA. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand those who are in favor of the so-called Pomerene amendment will vote "yea" to keep it in the bill, and those opposed will vote "nay." Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a proper interpretation of the vote to be taken.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to say that if this amendment is adopted it will be very difficult to administer. I have considered and analyzed a great many propositions of this kind. They could not be administered at all without doing a great deal of injustice.

Now, I have no doubt there are some people who will plant wheat this year on account of the guaranty who would not have planted it but for the guaranty. They are animated, of course, by mercenary motives or motives other than patriotic ones. They may be subject to just criticism. On the other hand, if we adopt this amendment, people will be precluded from the enjoyment of this guaranty who have every moral right to enjoy it and for whom it was originally intended. I believe that, upon the whole, the amendment will do more harm than good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the former vote, and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad to see the Senator from Mississippi in the Chamber. I was engaged in conversation when my name was called, and not knowing that the Senator was present, I postponed my vote until the close of the roll call. At the proper time, and at the first opportunity after the call is completed, I shall ask the privilege of voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I vote "yes."

THE CENSUS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. ASHURST addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the census bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the motion is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is. Does the Senator from Washington desire to be heard?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] desires to be heard.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to be heard. I have no objection to the conference report being laid before the Senate, but I have some observations which I desire to submit upon it, and therefore, while I am on my feet, I will proceed to make them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. FRANCE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow the motion to be put to lay the conference report before the Senate?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes; provided I do not lose the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before that is done, of course, the Senator from Maryland is not to be taken off the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator from Texas. He interrupted me.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My intention was to yield at once to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], to move a short executive session, and then to adjourn.

Mr. PENROSE. That is satisfactory. That is what I wanted to understand—that the proposition is to make this conference report the unfinished business, and then to move a short executive session, and then adjourn.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENROSE. That will permit the Senator from Maryland to complete his very important remarks to-morrow.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It will.

Mr. PENROSE. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon proceeding to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 11984, known as the census bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m., Friday, February 28, 1919) the Senate adjourned until Friday, February 28, 1919, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, that the citizens of our National Capital and the strangers within its gates will demonstrate in a tangible way to-day their profound gratitude and appreciation for the brave men who rallied round the flag in answer to the call of distress and danger from over the sea and lifted Old Glory to its full height in answer to the call.

We are coming, millions on millions, to defend liberty, justice, truth, right. May they ever be held by the Nation in grateful memory and wards of our people and all the world, and stand as an earnest that the people of America are ever ready to defend the oppressed and downtrodden of all the world. In the Christ spirit. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in making the request for printing a statement in relation to Mrs. Mary Russell Butler, I referred to her 19 grandchildren. The RECORD, as printed, says 19 grandsons. I ask that that correction be made. Also, my request included not only the statement in the paper but a list of the 19 grandchildren and the services that they have performed in the war.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to renew my request to have this printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. FERRIS. To call up a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has agreed to recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], who has a short conference report. And the Chair will not recognize anybody to call up a conference report unless he agrees to move the previous question within an hour.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, before the conference report is taken up may I make a brief statement to the House? It is highly desirable that the general deficiency bill be passed by the House at as early a day as possible, in order to insure its enactment by the Senate. This bill, of all supply bills, ought to become a law at this session, because there are certain sums that are necessary for various departments. It is my desire and hope to call up the bill in a few minutes and ask its passage to-day. In order to do that we must expedite matters, because all of us want to accommodate, and will do so, the minority by not keeping the House in session late this afternoon. I make this statement in order that gentlemen may realize what is ahead of us and that they will not press conference reports unless absolutely necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman ready to call his bill up?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am ready now.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, this conference report was to be taken up to-day by a hard and fast agreement. I do not think that other bills ought to keep conference reports back.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it is absolutely necessary that this bill should pass at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FERRIS. And this conference report ought to be disposed of and go to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make a suggestion himself. It is the Chair's business during the rush to expedite business and get as much through as possible. It does not make any difference whether a conference report passes at 11.15, or 12.15, or 2.15. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FERRIS. I make the point of no quorum, and we will have to have a quorum right along.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a report on a bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma has made the point of no quorum.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to suggest that the gentleman from Oklahoma——

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman need not make any suggestions that will sweep this conference report aside.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not making a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union now. I suggest that we probably can accommodate each other, as we must determine to do, in the closing hours. I suggest that the gentleman's report requires action simply by the House and the Senate. Of course it is of the highest privilege, along with other conference reports, but requires but one vote. To-morrow or the next day puts it just as certainly on the statute books as it does to-day; but appropriation bills must be considered, and must be considered by the two bodies as original legislation.

Mr. FERRIS. If the bill had been considered by the Senate and it was not for the opposition over there—an unreasonable opposition, I fear—I would not ask it; but I know that every minute lost here is a step toward killing the bill which for eight years has tied up Government property worth $16,000,000 or $18,000,000. I have worn my shoe leather out to get an agreement to call this bill up the first thing. I had made arrangements with the Speaker, and I do not think I ought to be constantly swept out of the way by bills that have not yet passed the Senate. I have eliminated the objectionable features. I have gone to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Illinois on matters that they objected to and they have been taken out of the bill.

The SPEAKER. All this talk is out of order. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-seven Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make a parliamentary inquiry with the point of no quorum pending. The gentleman from Tennessee moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the doors were closed, and the Sergeant at Arms was ordered to notify absent Members. The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Dill	Kennedy, R. I.	Sears
Ashbrook	Dooling	Kettner	Sells
Austin	Eagle	Key, Ohio	Shackleford
Ayres	Emerson	Langley	Shallenberger

Crago	Heaton	Roberts	Wilson, Tex.
Curry, Cal.	Heintz	Rowland	Winslow
Decker	Helm	Sanders, N. Y.	Woodyard
Delaney	James	Scully	Zihlman

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). Three hundred and thirty-five Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized.

COAL AND OIL LEASING—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1138).

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not seem to be present. I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphates, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, and ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report. It is practically the same report that was read the other day. There are only a few minor changes which I can explain more clearly than can be had by the reading of the entire report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is section 18 substantially different from what it was?

Mr. FERRIS. The big changes are in section 18. The statement is substantially the same as that which accompanied the first report.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the statement does not indicate what changes have been made.

Mr. FERRIS. The statement has been modified.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read the statement, but could not locate the changes that have been made.

Mr. FERRIS. I can state them to the gentleman in a moment. They are in the statement, but are not very much in evidence.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, it having been announced that debate upon these conference reports is to be restricted to one hour, and the gentleman being recognized for that hour, I would inquire if there is to be an equal division of time between those in favor and those opposed to this report?

Mr. FERRIS. I shall yield practically all of the time to the other side, as I do not think any time is required here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, is not that a supplementary statement?

Mr. FERRIS. We modified the statement formerly filed.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to adopt conference reports without hearing the report of the statement. I think the supplementary statement ought to be read.

Mr. FERRIS. Very well; I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Oklahoma. Before the point of no quorum was made it was understood by Members that the deficiency appropriation bill was to come up. When will that probably be called up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not inform the gentleman. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, but he did not happen to be in the Chamber at the time.

Mr. DYER. Will the Chair state whether or not after this conference report is disposed of it is the intention to recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] to call up the validation of informal-contracts conference report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair does not know who will be in the chair at the time this conference report is concluded. The Chair does not care to answer that now. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know what this supplemental statement is, but I am not willing to have an important conference report adopted without reading either the report or the statement.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read the statement in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to read the statement in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

The second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, owned by the United States, including those in national forests, the Grand Canyon National Park, and the Mount Olympus National Monument, but excluding those in other national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and, in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas, to municipalities.

"COAL.

"SEC. 2. That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union, exclusive of those in Alaska, not otherwise appropriated by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situate more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad, and the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair: Provided, That improvements or development work of the aggregate value of not less than $8 per acre upon the coal lands so entered shall be made or done upon the lands annually for two years after such award, when patent shall issue therefor. Upon failure to comply with the terms of this section within the required period said lands shall be subject to entry by any other qualified applicant.

"No such person, association, or corporation shall own coal lands entered after the passage of this act in excess of said area, at any one time, nor be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, and no member of such association or corporation, or stockholder of such corporation, shall own any other coal lands or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, or in any other association or corporation owning or controlling any coal lands: Provided, however, That any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held two years after its acquisition and not longer, and in case of minority or other disability such time as the court may decree.

"That any person, association, corporation, member of such association, or stockholder of such corporation who violates any of the foregoing provisions shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a felony, and punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not exceeding two years, or both.

"That if any of such coal lands entered after the passage of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of a trust, or the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by individuals, copartnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States of America by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General in the courts for the purpose.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the petition of any qualified applicant shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States, outside of the Territory of Alaska, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act, into leasing tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such tracts, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing tract; and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, from time to time upon the request of any qualified applicant or on his own motion, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and, upon a royalty fixed by him in advance, shall award leases thereof through advertisement, by competitive bidding, or, in case of lignite or low-grade coals, such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any qualified applicant, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act: Provided, That no railroad or other common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire through lease or permit under this act any coal lands or deposits of coal in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use, and such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder. That such a railroad or common carrier may be permitted to take under the foregoing provisions not to exceed one lease hereunder upon and for each 200 miles of its line in actual operation. The term 'railroad' or 'common carrier' as used in this act shall include any company or corporation owning or operating a railroad, whether under a contract, agreement, or lease, and any company or corporation subsidiary or auxiliary thereto, whether directly or indirectly connected with such railroad or common carrier, but shall not include spurs, switches, or branch lines operated by any lessee and necessary to connect the mine with the line or lines of any railroad or other common carrier.

"SEC. 4. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure modifications of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

"That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the existing lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres, through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

"SEC. 5. That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest will be subserved thereby, lessees holding under lease areas not exceeding the maximum permitted under this act may consolidate their leases or holdings through the surrender of the original leases or holdings and the inclusion of such areas in a new lease of not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands.

"SEC. 6. That where coal lands aggregating 2,560 acres and subject to lease hereunder do not exist as contiguous areas, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, if, in his opinion, the interests of the public and of the lessee will be thereby subserved, to embrace in a single lease sections or parts of sections which can be operated as a single mine or unit.

"SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall be not less than 2 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of diligent development and continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for.

"SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue limited licenses or permits to individuals or associations of individuals to prospect for, mine, and take for their use but not for sale, coal from the public lands without payment of royalty for the coal mined or the land occupied, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interest: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to any corporation: And provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 160 acres, upon condition that such municipal corporations will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the acquisition of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

"PHOSPHATES.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease or sell to any person qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States containing deposits of phosphates, under such restrictions and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulation adopt.

"SEC. 10. That each lease or sale shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, if surveyed, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease, in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of public lands, and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such survey; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose; and any excess deposits shall be repaid to the person, association, or corporation making such deposits or their legal representatives: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width.

"SEC. 11. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the phosphates or phosphate rock from the mine, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 12. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates, or phosphate rock, under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits.

"OIL AND GAS.

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles of any producing oil or gas well and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated more than 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill one or more wells for oil or gas to a depth of not less than 500 feet each, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered. The Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that the permittee has been unable with the exercise of diligence to test the land in the time granted by the permit, extend any such permit for such time and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought, a monument, not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits, not more than five in number, may be granted to any qualified applicant for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within three years from date of the permit, and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within four years from date of permit: And provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

"SEC. 14. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims if located upon unsurveyed lands: Provided, That said permittee shall be given a preference right to lease the remaining and unpatented lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty determined by competitive bidding at a rate of not less than one-eighth, otherwise to be upon the same terms and conditions as provided for other general leases.

"SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for patent to the one-fourth of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

"SEC. 16. That all permits, leases, entries, and patents of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so located, leased, entered, or patented, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the locator, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the location, entry, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 17. That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same, except, however, those embraced in any prospecting permit during the life of the same, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding under general regulations in areas not exceeding 1,280 and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than one-eigth in amount of value of the productions, which royalty on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 18. Upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed since prior to July 3, 1910, by the claimant hereunder or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting petroleum placer law to any oil or gas bearing land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced and saved from such land, the claimant or his successor in undisputed possession of any such claim shall be entitled to a lease thereof from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the proceeds of oil or gas produced: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provisions of this section when the area of such geological oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor subject to this limitation shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to, but not in excess of, said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure.

"All such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas produced after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all such claims situate within naval petroleum reserves the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act of August 25, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one more of them as shall be deemed just.

"SEC. 19. That any person who, at the time of any withdrawal order, or on January 1, 1918, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands not withdrawn from entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within three months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That such lands are not reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud or who has not acted honestly and in good faith shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: And provided further, That within one year after the passage of this act where any land has been included within an oil withdrawal or classification heretofore made after bona fide entry upon the same by a qualified homestead or desert-land entryman and where said entryman has complied with the requirements of the law relating to such entries up to the time when said withdrawal was made, said entryman or the patentee under such entry, shall be given a preference right to a prospecting permit for the same under the same terms and conditions as prescribed in this act.

"OIL SHALE.

"SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any person or corporation qualified under this act any deposits of oil shale belonging to the United States and the surface of so much of the public lands containing such deposits, or land adjacent thereto, as may be required for the extraction and reduction of the leased minerals, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as he may prescribe; that no lease hereunder shall exceed 5,120 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the United States, at the expense of the applicant, in accordance with the laws and regulations for the survey of public lands. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to methods of mining, prevention of waste, and productive development. For the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the oil or other minerals covered by a lease under this section the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as shall be specified in the lease and an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year, at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum, for the lands included in the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year; such royalties to be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products from shales the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any royalty and rental during the first five years of any lease: Provided, That any person having a valid location to such minerals under existing laws on January 1, 1918, shall, upon the relinquishment of such location, be entitled to a lease under the provisions of this section, for such area of the land relinquished as shall not exceed the maximum area authorized by this section to be leased to an individual or corporation: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil-shale bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: Provided further, That not more than one lease shall be granted under this section to any one person, association, or corporation.

"ALASKA OIL PROVISO.

"SEC. 21. That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, or his successors or assigns, who prior to withdrawal had complied otherwise with the requirements of the mining laws, but had made no discovery of oil or gas in wells and who prior to withdrawal had made substantial improvements on or for each location or had prior to the passage of this act expended not less than $250 in improvements on or for each location shall be entitled, upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States within one year from the date of this act, or within six months after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent to a prospecting permit or permits, lease or leases, under this act covering such lands, not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each: Provided, That leases in Alaska under this act, whether as a result of prospecting permits or otherwise, shall be upon such rental and royalties as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and specified in the lease, and be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period of the lease: Provided further, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products in Alaska the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any rental or royalty not exceeding the first five years of any lease.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"SODIUM.

"SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of sodium dissolved in and soluble in water, and accumulated by concentration, in lands belonging to the United States for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands in San Bernardino County, Cal.

All other lands described and embraced in such a prospecting permit, from and after the exercise of the preference right to patent accorded to the discoverer, and all other lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 22 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, except such lands as are situated in said county of San Bernardino, shall be held subject to lease or sale, and may be leased or sold by the Secretary of the Interior through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres, all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre for the first calendar year or fraction thereof and $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year. Leases may be for indeterminate periods upon such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be incorporated in each lease or prescribed in general regulation theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to mining methods, waste, period of preliminary development and minimum production, and a patentee under this section may be lessee of the remaining lands in his permit.

"SEC. 24. That in addition to areas of such mineral land which may be included in any such prospecting permits or leases, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee of lands containing sodium deposits, and subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than 25 cents per acre, the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 20 acres in area, for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, AND GAS LEASES.

"SEC. 25. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit, and shall insert in every such permit issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him.

"SEC. 26. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations are as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act; and the interests held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18 and 19

Failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located in an appropriate proceeding.

"SEC. 28. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit upon such terms as he may determine to be just, for joint or several use such easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made, it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease: And provided further, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease, and may with like consent, surrender any legal subdivision of the area included within the lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare: Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated.

"SEC. 33. That the provisions of this act shall also apply to all deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale or gas in the lands of the United States, which lands may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States such deposits, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by such laws reserving such deposits.

"SEC. 34. That all moneys received from sales, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That any moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts."

"SEC. 35. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment to the title: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title to the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shales, or gas on the public domain."

And the House agree to the same.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to S. 2812, to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed to by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

There are no material changes in section 1 of the House bill.

The House conferees accepted in substance section 2 of the Senate bill with the amendment exclusive of those in Alaska and placing the improvements on an acreage basis, which in effect doubles the requirements on the larger acreage and relieves the smaller operator from a prohibitive burden.

Sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the House bill, embracing the coal-leasing provisions and regulations, were accepted by the Senate conferees without amendment.

All of the provisions of sections 15, 16, 17, and 18 of the House bill pertaining to phosphates, and now consisting of sections 9, 10, 11, and 12 of the agreed bill, were accepted by the Senate conferees with an amendment authorizing the sale of phosphate deposits within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and upon competitive bidding.

Section 13 of the agreed bill, dealing with the general oil provisions, was accepted by the Senate conferees without a change. It was section 9 of the bill as it passed the House.

Section 14 of the agreed bill makes one substantial modification to the bill as it passed the House, to wit: It provides for a patent to one-fourth of the permit as distinguished from a lease to one-fourth, as was provided by the bill as it passed the House. In both the House bill and the agreed bill a preference right was allowed to the applicant to lease the remaining three-fourths of the permitted area. It will be observed that in making this change the conferees provided an additional safeguard in compelling the Secretary of the Interior to lease the remaining area at competitive bidding, thereby insuring a proper preservation of the Government's interest. It will also be observed that the royalty may be not less than one-eighth, and it may be as high as the competitive bidding and other conditions warrant. This corresponds to section 10 of the bill as it passed the House.

Section 15 is a section not found in the House bill. Its insertion was made necessary by the modifications to section 14.

Section 16 of the agreed bill is accepted as it passed the Senate, being made necessary by the provision allowing a patent to one-fourth of a claim as a bonus to the locator. Otherwise the sections are substantially the same. The corresponding section of the bill as it passed the House was section 11 and section 14 of the Senate bill.

Section 17 of the agreed bill is a literal copy of section 12 of the House bill down to the proviso, with the exception that the area of land which may be leased through competitive bidding is raised from 640 acres to 1,280 acres. The provisos as contained in section 12 of the House bill are now inserted as a separate section and is in substance reenacted in section 18, and is a substitute for section 16 of the Senate bill.

Section 18 of the agreed bill is the so-called relief section. It embodies the substance of the provisos in section 12 of the House bill and sections 16 and 17 of the Senate bill. Section 18 preserves intact the Naval Reserves, subject to the pumping of wells already opened, which might be destroyed by the seeping in of water and other perils known to be damaging. It preserves all the oil intact unless the President, in the public interest, provides for the drilling by Executive order. The proviso to section 18 provides against monopoly in this: That no claimant shall be permitted to have a lease for more than one-half of any geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field. The royalty for all oil or gas removed from the land prior to the passage of this act is fixed at one-eighth; for all subsequent production the amount is to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and in no case may be less than one-eighth and is without any maximum limitation whatever. Drastic provisions against fraud are incorporated and the legislation specifically provides that no claimant found guilty of fraud in any way shall participate in the benefits of this relief section.

Section 19 of the agreed bill deals with the subject matter provided for in section 28 of the House bill and section 17 of the Senate bill, and is in substance the same as section 28 of the House bill with one or two amendments. Section 19 of the agreed bill is the same as the provisos of section 28 of the bill as it passed the House with two unimportant amendments. The first seven lines of section 28 in the bill as it passed the House is now inserted in the agreed bill as section 35 without change.

Section 20 of the agreed bill is identical with section 14 of the bill as it passed the House.

Section 21, pertaining to Alaska, is identical with section 29 of the House bill, save and except one amendment providing against fraud and specifically providing penalties therefor.

Sections 22, 23, and 24 of the agreed bill pertaining to sodium are the same as the provisions of the Senate bill. The House bill did not contain anything on the subject of sodium.

Sections 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34 of the agreed bill are identical with sections 13, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27 of the House bill, the Senate receding from all the corresponding provisions of the Senate bill.

Section 35, it will be observed, is identical with the first seven lines of section 28 of the bill as it passed the House and is a mere transposition. It deals with another subject and it was thought advisable to make it an independent section.

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT DEALING WITH SALIENT FEATURES OF THE BILL.

Your conferees feel it their duty to make a general statement for the benefit of those who do not desire to make a critical examination of the several amendments. We feel such a statement will be helpful to those who want to arrive at a conclusion regarding this measure and who are not able to take the time to go into it in great detail. This bill makes possible the leasing, in whole or in part, of approximately 700,000,000 acres of public land, approximately 365,000,000 acres of forest reserve, 35,000,000 acres of coal land, 6,000,000 acres of oil land, and 3,500,000 acres of phosphate land. Under present law all of this land may be passed to patent, without Government regulation, without Government royalties, and without the receipt of any remuneration by the Government, excepting such purchase price as may be provided for the patenting of the same.

Sharp differences of opinion have existed as to the advisability of installing leasing legislation of any kind. But for many years the West has been practically tied up and no development had, due to the antiquated land laws that have been on the statute books and the strict interpretation of them, which has rendered them valueless, unworkable, and utterly impracticable.

The legislation provided for herein, it is thought, will go a long way toward the development of the West and of the natural resources of the West and at the same time reserve to the Government the right to supervise, control, and regulate the same, and prevent monopoly and waste and other lax methods that have grown up in the administration of our public-land laws.

In addition thereto, royalties and rentals are provided, so that the Government may not be passing to title the national resources without receiving something in return therefor.

Drastic provisions against fraud are provided in the legislation. No one found guilty of fraud can participate or take advantage of any provision under the proposed law.

This legislation is made necessary by certain withdrawals made by President Taft during his administration and later by President Wilson during his administration. Both Presidents Taft and Wilson and the Secretaries of the Interior under them have felt the necessity of passing this legislation. President Wilson has urged its passage in his annual messages, but due to differences of opinion between the House and Senate and to the advisability of adopting a leasing law it has been forced to wait until this time. The bill in substance as agreed upon has passed the House during three Congresses. It has had the support of Republicans and Democrats uniformly in the House. It has been fashioned with great care. The committee have had the benefit of assistance and counsel of the Departments of the Navy, Justice, Interior, and Agriculture. The committee has had written reports and personal presentations of it from the several departmental heads. Your managers on the part of the House feel that every interest of the Government, including the Departments of the Navy, Interior, and Justice, have been carefully conserved and protected. Your managers on the part of the House feel that, while they have not been able to grant all the oil claimants feel they are entitled to, the claims of each and every one have been carefully considered and that they have been afforded all the relief they are entitled to consistent with the public interest.

It is the thought of your conferees, and they are firmly of the belief, that the legislation is progressive legislation, that it is in the public interest, that it is along conservation lines, that it will help open and develop the West, and that it will break the deadlock that has existed in the West since the withdrawals of 1909.

The bill as agreed upon is the best judgment of your conferees, after six years of effort to secure its adoption, and is the best compromise that can be obtained.

The royalties accruing under this legislation are disposed of in the same manner and in the same form as in the legislation which has three times passed the House.

The House has unanimously passed this bill three times and its provisions have not been criticized by the public. The Senate has each time heretofore refused to accept either the policy or the substance of the House bill, but now, with the exception of a few amendments, which your conferees believe are eminently fair and which do not take out of the hands of the Government the right to preserve its interests, the Senate has accepted the House bill.

SCOTT FERRIS.
EDWARD T. TAYLOR.
JNO. E. RAKER.
W. L. LA FOLLETTE.
N. J. SINNOTT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for an hour.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to consume only five minutes and will ask the Chair to call my attention to it when I have occupied that much time. The first important change that is made in this second conference report is that instead of including Alaska in the bill we specifically exclude it, both for sale and leasing purposes. The next important change is in section 18. As the bill came before the House the first time and was agreed to here, section 18 provided for the payment of a royalty to the Government estimated on the net instead of the gross. Some very good men in the House and some in the Senate object to that feature, and objection was made. I think myself the objection was partially, if not all, good. We had tried to get our views in toto on this, but had conceded on it to get a report. We felt it was not vital as there was no maximum. We thought, however, that we had protected the rights of the Government fairly well, and that was the best agreement that we could get, by keeping the royalty open so that we could collect as much royalty as the Government elected to have paid, thereby preserving the interests of the Government. Be that as it may, under the present plan we figure on a royalty on the gross, and there is no maximum. We can take whatever royalty the Government elects to take, and we have modified it to that extent.

The first paragraph of original section 18 was stricken out by this last conference, wherein it provided that the President might make certain settlements. It was not stricken out on the theory that it was bad legislation, but on the theory that it might be in excess of the authority of the conferees and in the Senate that some critical objection be made; that objection might be made in the way of exceeding the conferees' authority. That paragraph, however, was originated by the Attorney General's office, who thought that it might be helpful, but we think under the general provision in reference to rules and regulations they can work out and accomplish that without the conferees taking any chances on exceeding their authority. So if you will refer to your original bill you will find that the first paragraph, section 18, as the bill appeared the last time, has been stricken out. If you turn over to page 18 of the present print, you will find we strike out the words "after first deducting the actual and necessary expenses of such production," which, of course, makes the claim of the royalty on the gross output instead of the net. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin had some objection to that and that that would meet with his approval.

Mr. STAFFORD. It certainly does.

Mr. FERRIS. We struck out the last paragraph of section 18, which provided that the Secretary of the Interior might make a compromise between the smaller claimants and the larger claimants. I personally think that paragraph should have been left in, because I think under some circumstances it might become necessary that the Secretary have that right, but there was some question as to whether or not we could clearly do that within the rights of the conferees. They have adopted a new rule in the Senate, as the House knows, which is a very critical one, and if any one objection were made it might be made on that proposition, so we struck it out and take no chance on it, feeling, under the general rules and regulations, it could be properly taken care of.

Now, in a word, this bill is the general leasing bill that has been before the House for eight years. It has had the approval of the House three times. The conference report was adopted the other day by a vote of some two to one, but we have had no vote in the Senate recently. There was some objection in the Senate. There were objections of Members who were opposed to a leasing bill at all, and for eight years there was a bitter controversy raging as to whether or not we should adopt a leasing policy in the West at all. So we have had great objection from two sources. Some Senators objected on the score that we were giving too little and some people holding that we were giving too much to the West. In response to that, I desire to say, after eight years of hard work and careful thought and careful consideration, having the benefit in our counsels at all times of Secretary Lane, the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, the Attorney General's office, and the Secretary of the Navy, and Commander Wright, and others who have been called in, this represents the best judgment of all the committee; it is the best thought that can be had, and it sacrifices no public interest. For example, the areas are held to a small area. The royalty is without limit. Government can charge for the lands whatever it wants to charge. There is no limit, and the acreage is limited to a very small acreage, and the bill supplants the old antiquated system of placer leasing laws applied to oil and other leases that have grown antiquated and grown out of use, which ought to be abolished and ought to be repealed, and I think this bill, if a true verdict was put upon it, would be about 75 or 80 per cent perfect and about 20 per cent imperfect.

We have some things in this bill I would like for it to be rid of if I had my own way, but I think, as I say, this bill is about 80 per cent perfect, and I hope the House and Senate will go to it and make it perfect in any way they can. We should adopt this and get rid of the old antiquated land laws. They have outgrown their usefulness. The oil people think we are dealing scantly with them. They have some rights. The Government has rights. Both have long and faithfully been considered. This is a long step forward. It is our best judgment. The conservationists, so called, strong conservationists, feel that we have done too much for the West. It is one of the cases where the House and the Senate have got to be brought together on a reasonable basis. This has been done. Some men oppose it because we are too stingy with the West, and their position is stubborn and resolute. Still to them I say we must protect the Government. We must go forward; we must not stand still; we must not close our ears to those who know this subject and listen too attentively to those who do not know and proceeding on rumors. I think that has been accomplished. There will always be those who can make critical objections. There will always be those who are opposed to moving forward and in favor of standing still. For me and mine these old antiquated land laws should not stand any longer; new and better ones should have supplanted them years ago. They would have supplanted them but for opposition from outside sources who knew little of the subject. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, unless some gentleman wants to ask some question.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I would want about 30 minutes for myself and other gentlemen on this side.

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield to the gentlemen that much time.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I will take five minutes for myself.

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield the gentleman from Michigan five minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has said, this subject has been pending before the Congress for eight years. Now, when the calendars of the House and Senate are in the most congested condition that they have been at any time in the eight years, this measure comes before us making a final disposition of this subject, providing for the sale of all our coal deposits, the leasing of all of our oil and gas deposits and other deposits, and, more than that, the adjudication of claims amounting to many millions of dollars. Now, there is neither the time nor, I imagine, the disposition on the part of the House to take up an itemized consideration of what this measure really does. I want to direct the attention of the House to one or two general propositions that I think should be of interest. The conference committee report states that this measure "has had the support of Republicans and Democrats uniformly in the House. It has been fashioned with great care. The committee have had the benefit of assistance and counsel of the Departments of the Navy, Justice, Interior, and Agriculture. The committee has had written reports and personal presentations of it from the several departmental heads. Your managers on the part of the House feel that every interest of the Government, including the Departments of the Navy, Interior, and Justice, have been carefully conserved and protected. Your managers on the part of the House feel that, while they have not been able to grant all the oil claimants feel they are entitled to, the claims of each and every one have been carefully considered and that they have been afforded all the relief they are entitled to consistent with the public interest." In brief, we are given to understand that this measure you are about to vote upon comes before the House with the approval of the Interior Department, the Navy Department, and the Attorney General. Now, I want to impress this fact upon the membership, that for the last two years at any rate, to my own knowledge, the Navy Department, because of the great oil reserves they are seeking, and the Attorney General's department, because of the suits pending that amount to many millions of dollars, have given the closest possible attention to these measures. They were before our Public Lands Committee; they were heard at length; they submitted proposed amendments, and, in fact, I violate no confidence when I say when the House Committee on the Public Lands reported this measure a few months ago the report then was practically dictated by those departments and in accord with their wishes, and so, I think, was the measure the House then passed. You are given to understand the measure now before you is the same measure; but let me say this to you: That these departments that have spent months of time on this legislation, the Attorney General's Department familiar with the legal questions, the Navy Department familiar with their naval oil reserve problem, neither one of those departments to-day approves the bill that is now before you. I am stating a fact that neither the Navy Department——

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In a moment.

Mr. ELSTON. I take issue with the gentleman on both of those propositions.

Mr. CRAMTON. In a moment I will be glad to yield. Neither the Navy Department nor the Attorney General's office to-day is approving the bill that is before you.

Now, the gentleman asks if I have authority. On February 14 it was stated in the Washington Times:

> After being six years in preparation the oil-land leasing bill is before the House and Senate to-day for final approval or rejection.
> Enormous pressure is being brought on Congress for the adoption of the conference report on the bill, and equally heavy pressure is being brought for its rejection.
> President Wilson, it was learned to-day, has cabled Secretary of the Interior Lane and Attorney General Gregory, urging them to settle their differences over what form the bill should take, and get behind the bill, so that it may be put through before the present Congress adjourns.
> NO CABLE TO DANIELS.
> Secretary of the Navy Daniels did not receive a cablegram from the President. He flatly denied the statement of the conferees that the provisions of the bill affecting the naval oil reserves had the approval of the Navy Department. He had never seen the section of the bill in question, he said, as it was agreed to in conference.

Now, that is only a newspaper report, but it has stood uncontradicted from February 14 to now, and the conferees have not and, in my judgment, they could not give to this House any statement of the Navy or the Attorney General approving this measure. Now, further, I wish to say that I was not content to leave this with the newspaper report. I made inquiry as late as yesterday at the Navy Department, and I asked them directly whether they had approved of this bill, and whether they now approve it, and they said to me——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask for five minutes more to conclude. There are gentlemen here seeking information.

Mr. FERRIS. I will give two minutes more.

Mr. CRAMTON. Five minutes more, Mr. Speaker. I am a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Oklahoma say?

Mr. FERRIS. I am trying to apportion the time. As I understand, they want 30 minutes on that side opposed to the bill, and I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] five minutes, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] five minutes, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] five minutes, and five to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], but I will say that the rest of the time will have to be reserved for those in favor of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand. The chairman is very kind.

Now, I was stating that I had made inquiry of the Navy Department, and I was advised on yesterday that the Navy Department had not approved this bill; that the amendments made by the conferees had not been referred to the department. Not only have the Navy Department not approved of the bill but they could not approve of the bill. Of course, I will say that the department has further stated that they have been heard at length before the House committee—if I may have the attention of the chairman, because I want him to know that I am trying to state the question fairly—and they stated further that they had had fair consideration in the House committee, which they did. They got it the way they wanted it. They have had a good hearing everywhere, and now the conferees have acted they did not care to start a campaign—I am not quoting their language—against the report of the conferees. They were not seeking to make trouble. They say that concessions have been made to them and the conferees have used their best judgment, but the fact remains that the Navy Department does not to-day approve the bill as reported by the conferees.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, further, as to the Attorney General's office. There I have not personally made inquiry, and I can only say to the House that on my best information I have stated the fact as it is.

Mr. ELSTON. Did the Navy Department state wherein they were dissatisfied with the settlement made by the conferees? I would like to have that question answered.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would have been glad if I could have gone into it at length and got their exact points of disagreement, but I would not have time to give it if I had it, as the time this morning is limited and the House would not listen to it. They did say they could not approve of a bill that took away so largely the Navy oil reserve.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I am greatly surprised at the statement of the gentleman from Michigan. He and I both attended the hearings before the Public Lands Committee, and we were there when the representative of the Navy Department testified. The gentleman knows the extreme concessions made by the representative of the Navy Department, and if he reads this bill he will see that not only everything the Navy then asked before the committee has been granted, but they have got more than they ever dreamed they would get.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to submit that the Navy Department ought to know best whether the bill suits them or not. They say it does not.

Mr. ELSTON. The Navy Department is taking a very different course of action from what it did before the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not responsible for it.

Mr. ELSTON. Before the committee the Navy Department admitted that there were claims in the oil reserves in California which had to be recognized. They were perfectly willing at that time to make concessions for less than have been conceded to them. They were willing to take a relinquishment of all the claims of the California oil men and give them back practically an owner's lease upon a 25 per cent royalty, a better proposition than a man would get who owned the land. What do they get now? They go to these oil men and say: "Relinquish every claim you have; put it into our hands; give us an owner's royalty of one-eighth on all back production without any diminution, notwithstanding what you spent upon it, and as to all forward production, submit it to us. We will take the whole of it if we want to; we will take anything we please, from one-eighth up to 100 per cent." That is what they get. What more do they want?

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman permit a question? Is the gentleman in a position to contradict my statement that on yesterday and to-day, and ever since the conferees made this report, the Navy Department has not approved it?

Mr. ELSTON. It may be true that they are not willing to approve it, but if they are not willing to approve it they are acting in a very unconscionable way. They have come before us and they have said they are willing to take certain things, and they made certain, definite proposals. They submitted their demands and every demand they submitted was for less than they are getting now in this bill. What do they want? What is the situation now in regard to those claims inside the Navy Reserve? It is this: To the Californians they say, "Submit everything you have got, give it back to us, and we will give you whatever we please."

Under this bill the Secretary of the Navy can go to the President, who has to regulate the royalties on the claims given back by the Californians to the Government, and say, "Mr. President, we claim every bit of that oil. Give it to us." Whereupon the President can say to those people who have given up their rights, "The Government will take an eighth back of everything you have produced and it will take 90 per cent of everything forward."

That is the situation. We have been beaten down to absolutely nothing, and now we are in a position where our future rights rest absolutely in the discretion of the President. That is as much as the Navy could ask. I do not understand their attitude. They came before us, as the gentlemen of the committee will recollect, and made proposals for far less than they are getting now. I can not conceive what is the cause of their new attitude or how they can claim any more from the oil men.

Now look at the situation of the California oil men as compared with those of Wyoming. We went upon the public domain before there was a withdrawal of those lands. We spent millions upon millions upon those properties when it was perfectly legal to do so. Then they put the withdrawal order upon the land. Then the Government imposed a double hardship by another blanket order in the nature of a naval reserve.

It is not just. The Government is getting all that it is entitled to. According to most of the court decrees the California oil men are entitled to the whole of their claims. The Southern Pacific and the Associated Oil are not going to bring in their claims under this bill, so far as I know. The Southern Pacific has already won the title to its claim in naval reserve No. 2 by decree of the circuit court of appeals. They are not going to submit their claims to the Government.

Who are those who must submit to this bill? They are some 80 little operators in that naval oil reserve who have no money left. They have got to submit. They have been beaten down to the point where they say, "Take it all; give us what you will." They are broke. If the Navy wants the rest of it, they can take it under this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. On what subject?

Mr. WINGO. On the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should not interject that into the midst of a conference report debate. In the end it will appear in this place. That is not orderly procedure.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's request is withdrawn.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House at this time to the remarkable spectacle just presented, when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with one of the most important bills that can be found, came before us and was unable to get the attention of the House. No other committee can get the attention of the House, because the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands insisted that this oil provision, this coal provision, this shale and phosphate provision, and everything else in this proposition, must have the right of way. When refused recognition by the Speaker, what did he do? He called for a quorum, and he got it, consuming the closing hours of the session by filibustering for this coal and oil bill.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, there is more in this bill than was suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON], who has stated that 80 operators are interested in oil claims. There are over 100,000,000 people interested in it. There are many billions of dollars of oil and gas and phosphate, our natural resources on Government lands, contained in this bill, and there is more than that which we are practically giving away here in the closing hours of this session, if we vote for this conference report.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] suggested a moment ago to the House that the best judgment of the Attorney General's department and of the Navy Department is that this bill meets with their approval. I feel justified in saying it does not. Let me read from a man who calls this bill "public plunder." His statement has been placed in the RECORD time and time again, both on this side of the House and the other. Here is a telegram that Gifford Pinchot sent on February 26, only two days ago:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 26, 1919.

THOMAS W. GREGORY, Attorney General,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.:

I see you are quoted as favorable to the conference report on the so-called coal and oil leasing bill. There must be some mistake. Your patriotic and effective efforts to prevent injury to the Navy through legislation which like this would impair the naval petroleum reserves proves that I feel sure you would not want your name connected with this bill which undoes so much of your work, endangers the interests of the Navy, and leaves the people of the United States holding the bag. You have done too much to leave the rest undone. The belief in Congress that you favor the passage of this bill is a powerful factor in its favor. It ought to be corrected for it might well be decisive. I urge you to let your true position be known.

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

That is a letter from Gifford Pinchot to your legal adviser, your Attorney General Gregory, let me say to my friends across the aisle, the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. No; I can not yield until I get through with my statement. And here is Attorney General Gregory's answer, under date of February 26. Remember only two days ago the legal adviser of the Government wired this reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1919.

GIFFORD PINCHOT,
1218 Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia, Pa.:

In reply to your Western Union wire of 26th. No one can truthfully say that I have favored the conference report on the so-called coal and oil leasing bill. Members of both Houses of Congress are aware of the fact that I have declined to advocate its passage.

THOMAS W. GREGORY.

Here is the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, and he is supported by the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy. I will not read Secretary Daniels's statement, but will insert it in the RECORD. With those two Cabinet officers refusing to advocate the passage of this bill or to favor it, it has been forced in here, and how? By the chairman of the committee, one of the leading Democrats in the Congress, at the expense of every other proposition. It is forced in here by what influences, I ask? What do you think of the position of the Secretary of the Interior, who is pushing this bill, when, against the action of the House of Representatives and of the United States Senate, the conference committee was permitted to insert a provision regarding the coal lands of Alaska? No conference committee has power to legislate, and it was stricken out in the Senate, but what can we think of turning over all the coal and oil lands on Government lands in this country and Alaska to such officials? I have no personal imputations of bad faith to make, but of inexcusably poor judgment. What do you think of taking these coal and oil lands belonging to 110,000,000 of people and turning them over to one man to administer, who may patent or lease them at his option, no matter what his action may be?

I remember very distinctly, Mr. Speaker, that the one issue that defeated the last Republican President of the United States as much as anything was the issue of the Cunningham claims, when Ballinger was Secretary of the Interior. They were insignificant claims comparatively, but here you have ten times, yes, one hundred times as much property involved belonging to the people of the United States, and in these closing hours of the session extraordinary efforts are being made to railroad this bill through Congress.

All the coal and all the oil substantially remaining in the people is out there in the tracts of land covered by this bill. I sympathize with those 80 men in California who have unadjudicated rights, but, as I said, over 100,000,000 people are interested in these natural resources, and their rights are involved in this bill.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman has had his time.

Mr. ELSTON. I would like to have the gentleman point out——

Mr. FREAR. I have not time to point out. I will say that $35,000,000 is held in escrow to-day for men—some of whom were dummy men—who sold their holdings. The hearings show it. Now as far as the 80 people in California are concerned, we would be glad to relieve them, but there are more than these 80 men involved. The Standard Oil Co. is much interested in this. In many States its interests are found entrenched everywhere. It has the same rights as private people and is entitled to proper protection, but the Standard Oil Co. has been interested in the National Security League, which declared this Congress disloyal. Its contributions were liberal, and I can not consent that this coal and oil money shall be used for that purpose any longer. Not with my consent. Let me say to my friends who are pressing this bill, your party on the other side of the aisle has just put through a $33,000,000 river and harbor bill that does not sound well to the people of this country. It is extravagant and wasteful. There is an effort here to put through a $60,000,000 public building bill that is worse in character, if that could be. Here is an oil and coal leasing and patenting bill that takes away the natural resources of the people of this country. You are proposing, practically, to give them away, because the big interests will bid them up and control them as has always been done in the past. The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands smiles at that statement. I modify that, and I want to say that in his bill before us he provides that 2 cents a ton on coal must at least be reserved by the Secretary of the Interior. That is a postage stamp. I forgot that, but offer the correction. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, to the House and to the country, that the people will look below the surface of this bill. They know what is involved. They know we are taking away the last of their natural resources. The Secretary of the Navy, who wants the greatest navy in the world, asks us not to yield up all the Government oil lands. Can we conceive any more preposterous proposition before the Congress than to have an administration that insists on the greatest navy in the world yielding up all these coal and oil lands to private speculation? And that is only one feature of the bill. It is the coal and the oil and the phosphates and all these natural resources that we are asked by this bill to give up.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman show how the Government yields up any oil lands? The Government can take them all if it wants to. It can take 100 per cent of them if it wants to. The gentleman ought to read the bill.

Mr. FREAR. I have read the bill. I have not a particle of personal interest in this matter except the public interest. I know the men who are most interested in this bill are here, and the lobby is here, but it will be a grave mistake for this Congress to give up these valuable lands.

I insert herewith a few statements regarding the opinion of responsible authorities on this bill, or the bill which involved the same fundamental principles:

[From Senator HUSTING'S minority report.]

According to statements made by officials of the Departments of Justice and Interior, 66⅔ to 75 per cent of the oil lands in dispute would pass under this bill to a few powerful oil companies, including the Standard Oil Co. It is therefore not a small man's relief measure, and while Congress should not hesitate to grant relief to the Standard Oil Co., or any other large concern, as well as to the impecunious individual, where relief is due, the fact that such large and powerful interests are fostering and financing the persistent efforts to push this measure through is at least to be taken as a warning against hasty action and against too great reliance upon the voluminous assurances and the pathetic appeals which fill the printed hearings.

It is believed that the existing law, applied in an orderly manner by the courts to facts obtained through sworn evidence, will in practically all cases afford all of the protection which equity and good conscience require of the Government. There may be some few cases in which legislative relief would be justifiable. When the facts of those cases, as found by the courts, have been brought to the attention of Congress through the Department of Justice, Congress will be able to grant such monetary relief as each case demands, or pecuniary compensation for improvements honestly though unlawfully but mistakenly made. The effect of this present bill and the evident purpose of the Oil Industry Association in advocating its passage is to grant away the entire subject matter because a small part of it is claimed in circumstances which seem to make a moral appeal.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 18, 1916.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

On April 10 you requested that I submit a brief statement showing what effect the bill (H. R. 406) passed by the House would have on the oil lands in California and Wyoming which are under investigation by the Department of Justice; the character of claims that would be covered by the legislation; the extent of the relief that would be granted; the value of the property affected; and like information, if the bill, as amended and passed by the Senate, should become a law; and like expression of my views if the bill, as amended by the Senate committee, should be enacted into law.

THE LANDS.

Of the lands in California investigated by the special agents, under the arrangements between the Department of the Interior, the Department of Justice, and the Navy Department, reports now in show that 40,810 acres are reported on adversely, exclusive of the Honolulu lands, referred to hereafter. Of these lands 24,053 acres were entered upon by persons who were not protected against the order of withdrawal, or by the provisions of the Pickett Act; and 19,773 acres of such lands are reported to have been entered by persons who claimed fraudulently by employment of the names of dummy entrymen, with the view of acquiring more lands than allowed to be acquired under the acts of Congress. Some of the 24,053 acres is included in the 19,773; that is, as to some of the lands it is reported that dummies have been used, and also that the lands were entered upon after one or both orders of withdrawal. Adverse proceedings have been directed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to 17,642 acres, and hearings have been applied for as to 9,990 acres of these lands. As to 3,855 acres, I have not been advised whether hearings have been ordered by the commissioner or not.

THE VALUE OF THE LANDS.

The value of the 40,810 acres is about $50,000,000. In addition there are over 2,700 acres of land reported by the special agents to be adversely affected on account of the order of withdrawal, but claimed by the Honolulu Consolidated Oil Co., and proceedings with respect to which are pending before the Secretary of the Interior. Including the Honolulu lands, the total value of the lands in California reported on adversely by the special agents is $55,000,000. Valuable and extensive oil lands in the Salt Creek oil fields, in Wyoming, were also entered upon in violation of the order of withdrawal of September 27, 1909, and will be affected as the California lands referred to.

In addition there is involved in the controversies the value of many barrels of oil extracted from the lands and converted, or yet on hand held by the receiver appointed by the courts in suits brought by your department. The quantity of oil produced before the receiver was appointed can not be determined until an accounting is had.

BENEFICIARIES OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

From 66⅔ per cent to 75 per cent of all the lands referred to above as having been reported upon adversely are controlled by a few large interests, among them the Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Co., the operating company of the Santa Fe Railroad Co., and the Standard Oil Co.

The Secretary of the Navy, on February 9, 1916, concluded his testimony before the Senate Committee on Public Lands by saying:

I wish to as earnestly as possible impress upon you our conviction, in which not only the Navy Department joins, but the Department of Justice, that this oil land having been set apart for the Navy belongs to the Navy; that this leasing bill would take away from the Government that which in time of peril might change the tide of war; that these gentlemen who have equitable or legal rights should be remanded to the courts or to the regular department of the Government to have their rights tested.

In a letter to Senator Tillman, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, dated February 17, 1916, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, opposing efforts to lease lands in the naval petroleum reserves, said in part:

These reserves were relied upon when the policy of building oil-burning ships was adopted, and now that we have a large and increasing number of ships that depend solely upon oil for fuel it is of the utmost importance that the rights and needs of the Navy be not overlooked in the effort to relieve claimants of oil lands. * * * The Navy Department does not desire to produce oil from the naval petroleum reserves at the present time and does not want the oil converted into money at any time, but does want the oil conserved under ground, where it may be stored without cost and free from loss or evaporation until the decreased production and the increased market price renders its production and use desirable.

In an address before the American Mining Congress in February, 1916, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, in part, said:

If private individuals have valid claims on these lands, they must be adequately compensated for these claims, but they must cease to remove oil from these lands.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels said, in testifying before the Senate Committee on Public Lands, February 9, 1916:

* * * In pursuance of a long and earnest effort to secure oil for the Navy we are now building all of our ships in the Navy to burn oil. The advantages of oil burning over coal is so very great that, if there is any policy of practical conservation of oil that can be adopted, I think it is entitled to be put through, especially in view of the plans of preparedness we are now discussing. * * * Every battleship we build now increases the demand by 90,000 barrels per year. Every destroyer we build increases it 20,000 barrels. So, considering the 9 battleships and 17 destroyers authorized to be added to the fleet, the annual consumption of fuel oil will be about 1,760,000 gallons, without counting auxiliaries. That is in time of peace. In times of war it is estimated that it would amount to 5,000,000 barrels. * * * Our country is the greatest oil-producing country in the world, and yet I apprehend, if this bill passes (Phelan bill), before the lives of these ships are ended this country will be in the position of having oil ships and no oil, except at the very high prices that will prevail. * * * Of course the Navy Department has no disposition to deny any man his legal right, but Uncle Sam is also entitled to consideration.

He later on in the same testimony said:

* * * No part of the program for preparedness is of more importance than the providing of an adequate supply of fuel oil for the Navy.

In a letter to Senator KEY PITTMAN, chairman of the special joint conference on Public Lands, dated December 23, 1916 (hearings, p. 104), Secretary of the Navy Daniels said:

My opinion has always been and still is that whatever equities or rights these claimants (naval petroleum reserves) have should be determined through court proceedings which have been or will be instituted, and that it would be highly inadvisable to put an end to all such court proceedings and determine these rights and equities or ex parte evidence. * * *

* * * I am advised that many of the claimants have no rights enforceable in any court of law or equity and that they maintained possession in most cases by force or intimidation. The prospective prize was so rich that their successors by purchase or lease invested large sums of money in the development of these alleged claims in defiance of the law. These men are now asking Congress to give them, at the cost of naval efficiency (which means at the cost of the national security), that to which they have no legal or equitable claims, and it is my understanding that this proposed remedial legislation is calculated to accomplish this result. I consider it to be the duty of the Navy Department to make every effort to fully protect whatever rights the Navy secured through the action of the President in setting aside these reserves for the exclusive use of the Navy, and as the head of the Navy Department I wish to make known my unalterable opposition to any measure that could have the effect of depriving the Navy of the reserves so created.

With the largest Navy in the world under construction and enormous quantities of fuel oil in prospective demand, why has the Secretary of the Navy remained silent on this bill, which gives our public oil and coal fields over to private speculators?

This is the latest official utterance on the subject which I have just presented to the House:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 26, 1919.

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1919.

GIFFORD PINCHOT,
1218 Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia, Pa.:

I reply to your Western Union wire of 26th. No one can truthfully say that I have favored the conference report on the so-called coal and oil leasing bill. Members of both Houses of Congress are aware of the fact that I have declined to advocate its passage.

THOMAS W. GREGORY.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there are certain provisions of this conference report that I can not approve. Some of them are as follows: First, I object to it because it is not exclusively a leasing bill as it pretends to be. So far as the coal features of the bill are concerned, it is an unwise extension of the present sale law. It does not deal fairly with present claimants and locators of oil lands, particularly those outside of rich proven territory, who are mostly men of small means. This failure to do justice in these cases affects not only the locators and claimants but thousands of small investors in the stock of such properties.

The plan of competitive bidding, of bonuses and royalties, is not fair to present claimants or future developers of limited means, and will inevitably give an undue advantage to large interests.

The provisions of the bill relative to future operations are unduly restrictive, are not clear or definite in all respects, and will not, in my opinion, be found to afford a wholly satisfactory or workable plan for equitable development.

The provisions of the bill relative to the disposition of the funds arising from bonuses and royalties are grossly unfair to the States containing large acreages of lands that will become subject to the law. It does not afford them any revenues to compensate them and their communities for the very great loss they will suffer by reason of permanently retaining vast areas of valuable lands from taxation.

With the exception of these objections and a number of others that I could state, had I the time, there is some virtue in the bill. [Laughter.] The people I have the honor to represent, and the people generally of the country affected, are in such a desperate condition now as regards oil development, so utterly unable to carry on their operations and developments, owing to the hostile and unfair attitude of Government bureaus and departments, that they are willing to accept the bill as the only way out of an intolerable situation. They prefer this bill rather than no legislation. Therefore, having voiced my objection to these provisions, I shall not object to the adoption of the conference report. I still entertain the hope that in the no distant future we shall be able to secure amendments that will cure at least some of the objectionable features of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much interest to some of the objections that are being made to this proposed legislation. I have heard the statement here that this bill is in the interest of the Standard Oil Co. and other great corporations, and I give the gentlemen who make these statements credit for being honest and for believing what they say, but I believe they are absolutely wrong; and I want to say—and I think I say it advisedly—that if they were in the pay of the Standard Oil Co. and the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., or some other so-called big interests of this country, they could not take a better course for the benefit of those great corporations than they are taking on the floor of this House. This is the best-guarded bill against monopoly that has been presented to the House during the eight years I have been a Member, and I bar no bill on any subject.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield long enough to tell us about that 2-cent-a-ton provision for coal?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not the time to go into that. If there is anything wrong with that it can be amended at any time. It does not cut any figure.

Mr. FERRIS. That is only the minimum.

Mr. ELSTON. The Secretary of the Interior fixes it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is only a minimum to cover administrative expenses. The Secretary of the Interior can make it a dollar a ton if he wants to. How could your lessees compete if charges were made high? But I want to say that ever since the wild hysteria for half-baked reforms struck this country some 10 or 12 years ago the West has been penalized and in some respects paralyzed thereby. Gentlemen who are honest in their endeavors to benefit the whole United States and to keep some of our great resources from getting into the hands of monopolies have made it possible for the then and present monopolies to penalize and put burdens upon the people of the West they should not be compelled to bear. In the coal States, where there are millions of acres and billions of tons of coal, the people are paying more for coal than some of you have to pay back here in the eastern country where you are much farther from the coal than they are in those States. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have 100,000 acres, and probably very much more, coal lands in the State of Colorado, and because of their monopoly and because of the inability of the people to get permission to mine coal on the public domain or to purchase coal lands, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. are selling coal to the little villages of that State at $6 or $7 a ton, when there is enough coal in Colorado undeveloped to last the United States for 500 years, and three or four dollars a ton there should be a high price. They can not mine an acre of it on account of withdrawals and drastic construction of the laws that have been passed, thus taking it out of the reach of developers.

The Interior Department, carrying out the ideas of Mr. Pinchot and a few extremists, who might be right in theory but who know nothing about the practical working of their theories, has placed the value so high on coal lands in that country that nobody can buy or operate them.

Mr. Speaker, it is a singular thing that those who oppose this legislation seem of the opinion that all of those attempting to develop resources under it will be looters, malefactors, and plunderers of the public, and the administrative officers their aids and abettors.

If their ideas could be carried into effect and become law all of those attempting to work under it would, of course, be honorable men and above reproach and the administrative officers would always construe laws in the public interest and the millenium would be at hand. For 10 years the West has suffered, while these gentlemen have attempted to pass their ideas in shape of laws so extreme that Congress has refused to enact them. Mr. Speaker, I can go into some States within 500 miles of this Capitol and buy coal land for $10 an acre with 9 feet of coal underlying it in veins, and $200 per acre is asked in some cases in the West, where there is no better coal or thicker veins than there are in the States I refer to. It is an outrage on the western people. If you really understood the conditions you would prevent it by sane legislation, and this is the sanest of anything that has come before the House of Representatives in the last 10 years. It is trying to give an opportunity to work out and dmonstrate whether ideas of leasing are practical, and at the same time it allows sales so safeguarded that no one can get an acre that way if your officers think it is for the best interests of the country that the lands applied for should be leased. All I ask, gentlemen, is that you do not listen to the extremists and kill this bill that promises relief and is the best that has come before the House of Representatives in a decade, taking it all in all, and promises to settle the questions that have agitated the public mind for the last 10 years. Congress will be in session hereafter, and if it finds this law is not working well it can amend it. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who has just spoken, says that if the people understood this bill they would request its passage. I agree with him to this extent, that if the people understood this measure before us there would be an uprising of the people in righteous indignation against those who plan to give away countless billions of dollars worth of their property.

Mr. Speaker, it is an ill time to act the spendthrift with the possessions of the people. Americans are at bay before the high cost of living. They are pinched by high taxation. These resources covered by the provisions of this bill are fundamentals of life. They have been monopolized by private interests and toll has been taken from every man, woman, and child in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a steady and dangerous trend to monopolization of the natural resources of America. Private interests have compelled those dependent on these natural resources to pay tribute to the monopolist. Are we now to give new privileges to those who have exploited the people in the past? Will Congress put new powers in the hands of those who have grossly abused the powers already possessed?

Here are some of the facts by which to judge the situation. The Thirteenth Census report has the following report of the anthracite coal industry:

> The 11 mining concerns affiliated with railroads reported 84.4 per cent of the total coal land in 1909, 75.7 per cent of the total output of anthracite, and 78.2 per cent of the total number of wage earners.

The Thirteenth Census gives the following concerning the oil industry:

> In 1909 there were 7,289 producing operators of petroleum and natural gas and of these, 24, or three-tenths of 1 per cent, controlled 9,322,938 acres, or 66.3 per cent of the entire acreage of oil and gas fields, while 19 operators produced 46.2 per cent of the aggregate value of products.

The Bureau of Corporations in its report of 1914 on the lumber industry says:

> One thousand six hundred and ninety-four timber owners hold in fee over one-twentieth of the land area of the entire United States from the Canadian to the Mexican border. In many States these 1,694 own no land at all. In the 900 timbered counties they own one-seventh of the area.
> These 1,694 holders own 105,600,000 acres. This is an area four-fifths the size of France; or greater than the entire State of California; or more than two and one-half times the land area of the six New England States. Sixteen holders own 47,800,000 acres or nearly ten times the land area of New Jersey.

As to water power, Commissioner of Corporations Smith, in his report on "Water power development in the United States," stated that a large proportion of the water powers is owned by a few large capitalists. Thirteen companies controlled at the time of his report 1,825,000 horsepower, or more than one-third of the entire development of the United States at that time. Since then the centralization has greatly increased.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in the very face of such dangerous control already obtained by private interests over the natural resources of America, we have this proposal to give away all that remains in the hands of the Federal Government.

Why, just think of the sums involved. This bill applies to some 450,000,000,000 tons of coal. Section 2 makes it possible for any speculator to force the Government to sell him lands, and he can secure 2,560 acres of coal lands at a nominal sum.

The oil and gas resources covered by this bill, as submitted by the conference committee, are worth many billions of dollars. They belong to all the people, but under the operation of this measure they will pass into private ownership.

Take the phosphate lands alone. There remain in public ownership 20,000,000,000 tons, according to the Senate report. It is worth $4.50 a ton, or $90,000,000,000. There is enough money involved in this one item, little discussed, to pay all the expenses of America in the great war twice over; and still we talk of giving away such national assets.

We have just listened to the statement that the Secretary of the Navy does not approve this bill. We have heard the letter of the Attorney General emphatically declaring his opposition.

I call attention to the fact that another Cabinet member, the Secretary of Labor, is on record many times as being absolutely opposed to the principles of this measure.

He has a right to be heard, for he has been urging for five years the development of these natural resources through community settlements of workers.

In his report for 1918 he says:

> Mineral land which may be utilized as an opportunity for the employment of American soldiers now returning consists for the most part of the coal fields which still remain in the public domain.

The Secretary of Labor goes into details in giving his plans for developing mining communities and forest communities, so that American soldiers and workers shall have permanent opportunities for constructive employment.

Now, this conference report would deprive these Americans of this opportunity. It runs counter to the expressed desire of the heads of at least three great departments of the Government. It brazenly proposes to give away national assets to the value of hundreds of billions of dollars so that a few private operators may build still stronger and firmer and more menacing their monopoly control of natural resources for the exploitation of all the people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this report should be defeated now, and that we should take time to enact a measure which will mean real development for the public welfare, and not a surrender of the property and resources of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. Has not the gentleman voted for this bill three times before?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I have not.

Mr. ELSTON. The bill has passed the House three times before.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The coal-leasing proposition was never carried in the bill, and I never voted for it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WINGO). The gentleman from Oklahoma has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. FERRIS. I think there must be some mistake. Several who have had five minutes time have yielded back time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The timekeeper at the desk says the gentleman has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] three minutes.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I do not know the history of this bill. I know that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has been advocating this bill for some time. I do know that when this bill first came before this Congress there was a very little group of us who voted against it, including the chairman himself, Mr. FERRIS. The last time the bill was up 106 Members voted against it, including the minority leader of the House, Mr. MANN. I believe this bill is going to lose out at this time, at least I hope it will.

It takes, for instance, one great natural resource, coal, and allows it to be sold at a minimum of 2 cents a ton. In North Dakota the people have been trying to obtain legislation for years to develop this great natural resource. Legislation has now passed whereby the State can develop some of our lignite. If we give it away, the municipalities or the States will not have any chance to develop it, because these exploiters and despoilers of our natural resources will come in and buy it up before the people wake up. It will absolutely alienate every bit of our natural resources from the States, and thereby remove from them the opportunity through their sovereign power to develop these sources of wealth themselves. It is a disguised gift of our natural resources to monopoly and the most pernicious piece of national exploitation ever passed in Congress. It is a complete surrender of our natural resources to wealthy exploiters who have been looting our public lands for years.

I would like to see some legislation initiated which is not drawn up by bureaucrats who are assisted by paid corporation lawyers of the exploiters of this country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, it is an easy thing to wave one's arms and denounce this or that man in these days. People who indulge in that kind of thing all too frequently find an audience. But what are the facts in this matter? Long before there was a single withdrawal of public land from entry the men in the West, under the then existing laws of the United States, went upon the lands of the Government, the public domain, and began to explore for oil and other natural resources. They had expended great sums of money in the development of their claims when the President of the United States withdrew the land from further entry. It was withdrawn from the public domain. These men who had their money invested were left high and dry. Congress, recognizing the fact that it was unfair to these men who had in good faith invested their money, passed a bill to give them relief. That bill was known as the Pickett bill. It did not accomplish all that it was intended to accomplish, but the claimants were given a day in court to establish the validity of their locations. Before many months had passed there came a change of government, and the new Secretary of the Navy covered a great tract of this land into what he called a naval reserve. These people in California have been trying for years to get their rights. They were on the land in accordance with law long before it was withdrawn and long before the naval reserve was created. The Secretary of the Interior passed many of the claims to patent. They were held up by the present Secretary of the Navy and the present Attorney General. Finally the Secretary of the Interior, at the request I am told of the President, withdrew his order passing the claims to patent. These people are anxious to get a settlement of some kind. I assert that if a private individual had treated them as the Government of the United States has treated them that individual would have been denounced from one end of the country to the other as a robber and a scoundrel. These people in all honesty, believing that the faith of the United States was behind them, put their money into these ventures.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] rises in wrath against these people. What would Pennsylvania have been able to accomplish if her oil lands and coal lands had been tied up by some earlier Secretary of the Navy? [Applause.] What would have happened to Pennsylvania if the executive department of the Government had tried to do that in the early days when Pennsylvania developed oil and coal? Fortunately we had officials who respected the rights of the individual, even as against the Government of the United States.

This conference report is not all that the people of the West would like it to be. It does not go far enough, but it is the best that they can get. They are trying now to wind up the trouble they have had in developing these resources in the West. Would there have been a single resource developed if the Congress of the United States had had to appropriate the money to develop them? Not a dollar would have been secured from Congress to drill a hole in the ground in a speculative chance of striking oil. It was private capital that developed those resources, and private capital that was honestly invested under the then law of the land at least ought to be protected. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1.30 o'clock p. m. in order to give the Members of the House an opportunity to view the parade of the returned soldiers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, might I make a suggestion there? Will not the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] report the deficiency bill, so that Members will have a chance to look at it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would be very glad to do that. I instructed my clerk to have a lot of copies printed, and they are printed.

Mr. MANN. I managed to get a copy of it awhile ago, confidentially and secretly, with the statement that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] did not desire them delivered until the bill was reported.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, that was a misunderstanding or a misstatement.

Mr. MANN. It must have been a misapprehension.

Mr. SHERLEY. Because I expressed the desire that they should be delivered to anyone who wanted them. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I present the third deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 16187; H. Rept. No. 1148).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and reported printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves all points of order on the bill.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1.30 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized for 17 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have that much time, but I think there has been an error made in regard to the time. I think some of that time has been used. I feel it my duty to call attention to that fact.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is correct, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, of course there are not very many here. I am sorry the gentlemen who heard the other speakers can not hear what I have to say, because I have given a lot of study to this legislation and am anxious to get the facts straight. This bill practically in its present form, with some minor changes and some concessions to the Senate, none of which I feel are vital or in any way sacrificing the interest of the Government, has passed the House with the support both of the Democrats and Republicans, and with the support of all the departmental officials who had studied and were well informed about the subject. About a week ago it passed the House by the vote of 232 for to 109 against, and the things which were then urged as objections have since been eliminated by the second conference, to wit, we now figure the royalty on the gross production instead of on the net production. I felt that the other procedure was not absolutely objectionable, because there was no maximum and the department could make the royalty as high as they desired. The Interior Department tells us they could protect the Government interest under that, but I do say I agree with the gentleman who opposed it that the bill is much better now in that respect than before, because I think that is the normal and regular way of collecting royalty. This is the way it is done in private transactions, and it seems to me we should preserve every safeguard for the Government. The second objection made was that we had Alaska in for the same method of leasing that was accorded the States. My own notion is that Alaska, remote from civilization and with troubles about transportation, markets, and so forth, ought to be on the same plane, and I think with our $40,000,000 investment in Alaska in the Government railroad it is very foolish not to put it on the same plane; but the objection has been made and fears have been made manifest that there might be some trouble in reference to the Cunningham and Guggenheim claims, and so forth; so in deference to the objections in the Senate, in deference to those here objecting, that has been eliminated. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], both very estimable gentlemen, got up here and railed against this bill because it provided for a 2-cent royalty on coal. Frankness, I think, would have demanded of them to have said that was the minimum royalty above which the department could go as high as they like. If they wanted to make it $1 or to make it $2, or whatever they desired, they could do so; it is a minimum with no maximum. No man can say what the royalty should be on lignite coal far remote from railroad facilities. No one can say what the royalties should be on coal way back where they can scarcely afford to mine it at all, so that the gentlemen of the Geological Survey, the gentlemen from the Bureau of Mines, the gentlemen from the Interior Department, the Department of Justice, and those who have to do with it, thought we should put the minimum and no maximum. We followed that course. It is in the bill now. It is all in the Government's hands. They can protect it under the new proposed legislation, whereas they can not as the law now stands. Of course, my friends who have spoken against the bill have felt keenly about it. They have received letters from people who either have extreme views on the subject or who do not know what the situation actually is. Now, I do not want to get into any quarrel with anybody about it. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] for some reason seemed to try to take some sort of a fling at me. This is not a personal matter——

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. FREAR. I desire to apologize for anything I may have said if the gentleman feels that way.

Mr. FERRIS. I am proceeding in perfect good humor. The gentleman is all right. I have no objection to what the gentleman said; I am not thin skinned. I am not taking offense at anything he has said about me. The gentleman has some positive views on river and harbor bills and has presented them here at very great length, and I have no doubt has accomplished some good in their presentation. It is proper to have both sides of this proposition presented. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] very ably presented his side. The gentleman from Wisconsin presented his, and what I do say is that the men who have studied this legislation, both in Congress and out, know, and know very well, this bill is the best bill that can be gotten through Congress at this time. There are very few honest men who, if they will proceed carefully to study this bill, but what will say that this bill supplants a very defective system of the old land laws that should have been supplanted years ago. Some one has said here we are giving away the public domain. The slanderer in his finest fettle never uttered a more untrue statement. We gave away what? Nothing. They may collect in charges and royalty whatever they will, they may reject or lease or sell any of the oil, they may collect whatsoever they will of every pound of coal without any limitation. The acreage is small, the limitations are small, the fraud regulations are so drastic that many good men in the Senate and House from the West consider we are tied up so tight that it can not be used at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether the present conference report differs from the original report that not more than an absolute fee of one-fourth——

Mr. FERRIS. No; that remains the same. I am glad the gentleman raised that question. It has been said that here, why, we are giving away the public domain. Why, under the old law as it now stands on the statute books we give away the public domain and do not get a cent for the Government on oil. Under the placer law we get no royalty; the claimant gets patent to it all. Here is the way we proceed under the present law—a very unwise way, if not the poorest way, to proceed: Eight men, seven of whom usually are dummies, fictitious men, join with one another. They go and take up 160 acres, and then another and then another and then another until one single man and his seven associates can take up the whole area, and when they strike oil and the discovery is actually made technically under the law they get title, and not to one-fourth but four-fourths, for which they pay nothing. No royalty, no reservation of patent, no regulation, no prevention of fraud, no Government powers at all reserved. Now we provide for a lease of oil lands, for a lease of coal, and they may provide any royalty they like; why, it seems to me it ought to be voted for unanimously. I can see no reason for this fury and these objections. I know they must be well intended, but I am sure they are not well guided. I assume plenty of men in the House know about the situation, and plenty of them evidently have known about the situation, but I hate for any honest, earnest, fair-minded man here to vote against this under a misapprehension. The facts are all that is needed here. This fury, this wild opposition—men who are following rumors are not the safe ones to follow here.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FERRIS. I could develop one other question, but I will yield.

Mr. RAKER. In regard to one-fourth, if the patent is given, is it not a fact that the other three-fourths is developed territory, on which the Government gets a royalty?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. They get no patents on proven oil land. We give them one-fourth only on wildcat territory, but if a developer goes on the bald prairies of the West and brings in an oil well at very great expense, it was thought by the committee, and it was thought by the department, they ought to have at least one-fourth of the area as their bonus or reward for discovering the oil, leaving to the Government three-fourths of the developed proven land, which they can use for the Navy or any other purpose that seems just or wise to the Government.

Something was said here to the effect that it was unsatisfactory to the Navy Department and the Department of Justice. The Navy Department is advocating another bill asking Congress to appropriate the money and buy all these oil wells and operate them themselves. I do not know whether that can ever come true or not. My own notion is that when we are taking about 80 per cent of the people's income to carry on and pay for the war, they do not want us to buy oil wells and operate them by the Government. That bill has been here before Congress for a long time and has not been reported. Everyone knows there is no chance to pass such a bill. Wise or unwise, there are no votes here for such a bill. The moment this bill was agreed to I paid a page boy 50 cents to take copies of the bill to Secretary Daniels and to Attorney General Gregory and to Secretary Lane, and I wrote on it this: "We worked eight years on this. This is the best agreement we can get," signed my name and sent it to them. If they object to it, they have not communicated with me. And I sent it to them before the report was written up. I have not heard a word from them. The Department of Justice and the Navy Department did make serious objection to this bill when it passed the Senate. That bill was stricken out in toto and a new bill substituted. The bill substituted was all gone over by all departments.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has spoken on this bill. He will corroborate me, as will every other member of the committee, that Secretary of the Navy Daniels had Commander Wright, his oil expert, sitting in the committee with us to help prepare this bill; that Attorney General Gregory had his assistant there, and he helped us; and Secretary Lane had his assistant and best man there, and he helped us. It is easy for some one to come along and say this is public plunder. I could assail the purest man or purest woman in the world by one word like that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I just wanted to suggest that it has taken the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma some time to discover that fact.

Mr. FERRIS. I know, and I may be in error about the discovery I have made. I want to give men in and out of the House full credit for honest effort, and I am not upbraiding anybody here or elsewhere that opposes the bill. But it seems to me when we leave it all to the Government, it seems to me when everybody knows the old law is defective and you can not operate under it, and when everybody knows that this bill has passed three or four times, we ought to trust men like Secretary Lane, a bureau like our Geological Survey, and a committee like our Committee on the Public Lands, every one of whom agrees with this bill except the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], I believe; and I think he agrees with the major portion of it. Of course, I do not want to misquote him.

I think this bill ought to pass and the subject be put to rest and out of the way, and I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I make a point of order that there is no quorum present on that question.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the conference report will, when their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay"; and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 78, answered "present" 4, not voting 124, as follows:

The Clerk read the conference report and the accompanying statement, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into, in good faith during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, by any officer or agent acting under his authority, direction, or instruction, or that of the President, with any person, firm, or corporation for the acquisition of lands, or the use thereof, or for damages resulting from notice by the Government of its intention to acquire or use said lands, or for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition or control of equipment, materials or supplies, or for services, or for facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, when such agreement has been performed in whole or in part, or expenditures have been made or obligations incurred upon the faith of the same by any such person, firm, or corporation prior to November 12, 1918, and such agreement has not been executed in the manner prescribed by law: Provided, That in no case shall any award either by the Secretary of War, or the Court of Claims include prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States and a reasonable remuneration for expenditures and obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order: Provided further, That this act shall not authorize payment to be made of any claim not presented before June 30, 1919: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall report to Congress at the beginning of its next session following June 30, 1919, a detailed statement showing the nature, terms, and conditions of every such agreement and the payment or adjustment thereof: And provided further, That no settlement of any claim arising under any such agreement shall bar the United States Government through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of recovery of any money paid by the Government to any party under any settlement entered into, or payment made under the provisions of this act, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall exist against the executors, administrators, heirs, successors, and assigns, of any party or parties: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any officer or agent of the United States from criminal prosecution under the provisions of any statute of the United States for any fraud or criminal conduct: And provided further, That this act shall in no way relieve or excuse any officer or his agent from such criminal prosecution because of any irregularity or illegality in the manner of the execution of such agreement: And provided further, That in all proceedings hereunder witnesses may be compelled to attend, appear, and testify, and produce books, papers and letters, or other documents; and the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving the same shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in the trial of any criminal proceeding.

"SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction on petition of any individual, firm, company or corporation referred to in section 1 hereof, to find and award fair and just compensation in the cases specified in said section in the event that such individual, firm, company or corporation shall not be willing to accept the adjustment, payment or compensation offered by the Secretary of War as hereinbefore provided, or in the event that the Secretary of War shall fail or refuse to offer a satisfactory adjustment, payment or compensation as provided for in said section.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War, through such agency as he may designate or establish is empowered, upon such terms as he or it may determine to be in the interest of the United States, to make equitable and fair adjustments and agreements, upon the termination or in settlement or readjustment of agreements or arrangements entered into with any foreign government or governments or nationals thereof, prior to November 12, 1918, for the furnishing to the American Expeditionary Forces or otherwise for war purposes of supplies, materials, facilities, services or the use of property, or for the furnishing of any thereof by the United States to any foreign government or governments, whether or not such agreements or arrangements have been entered into in accordance with applicable statutory provisions; and the other provisions of this act shall not be applicable to such adjustments.

"SEC. 4. That whenever, under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War shall make an award to any prime contractor with respect to any portion of his contract which he shall have sublet to any other person, firm, or corporation who has in good faith made expenditures, incurred obligations, rendered service, or furnished material, equipment, or supplies to such prime contractor, with the knowledge and approval of any agent of the Secretary of War duly authorized thereunto, before payments of said award the Secretary of War shall require such prime contractor to present satisfactory evidence of having paid said subcontractor or of the consent of said subcontractor to look for his compensation to said prime contractor only; and in the case of the failure of said prime contractor to present such evidence or such consent the Secretary of War shall pay directly to said subcontractor the amount found to be due under said award; and in case of the insolvency of any prime contractor the subcontractor of said prime contractor shall have a lien upon the funds arising from said award prior and superior to the lien of any general creditor of said prime contractor.

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to adjust, liquidate, and pay such net losses as have been suffered by any person, firm, or corporation, by reason of producing or preparing to produce, either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in compliance with the request or demand of the Department of the Interior, the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Shipping Board, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation to supply the urgent needs of the Nation in the prosecution of the war; said minerals being enumerated in the act of Congress approved October 5, 1918, entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply.'

"The said Secretary shall make such adjustments and payments in each case as he shall determine to be just and equitable; that the decision of said Secretary shall be conclusive and final, subject to the limitation hereinafter provided; that all payments and expenses incurred by said Secretary, including personal services, traveling and subsistence expenses, supplies, postage, printing, and all other expenses incident to the proper prosecution of this work, both in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem essential and proper, shall be paid from the funds appropriated by the said act of October 5, 1918, and that said funds and appropriations shall continue to be available for said purpose until such time as the said Secretary shall have fully exercised the authority herein granted and performed and completed the duties hereby provided and imposed: Provided, however, That the payments and disbursements made under the provisions of this section for and in connection with the payments and settlements of the claims herein described, and the said expenses of administration shall in no event exceed the sum of $8,500,000: And provided further, That said Secretary shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the Department of the Interior within three months from and after the approval of this act: And provided further, That no claim shall be allowed or paid by said Secretary unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the said Secretary that the expenditures so made or obligations so incurred by the claimant were made in good faith for or upon property which contained either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in sufficient quantities to be of commercial importance: And provided further, That no claims shall be paid unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said Secretary that moneys were invested or obligations were incurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, and prior to November 12, 1918, in a legitimate attempt to produce either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten for the needs of the Nation for the prosecution of the war, and that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of said claims, and that no investment for merely speculative purposes shall be recognized in any manner by said Secretary: And provided further, That the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right to recover any money paid by the Government to any party under and by virtue of the provisions of this section, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend to the executors, administrators, heirs, and assigns of any party.

"That a report of all operations under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year.

"That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States: Provided further, That in determining the net losses of any claimant the Secretary of the Interior shall, among other things, take into consideration and charge to the claimant the then market value of any ores or minerals on hand belonging to the claimant, and also the salvage or usable value of any machinery or other appliances which may be claimed was purchased to equip said mine for the purpose of complying with the request or demand of the agencies of the Government above mentioned in the manner aforesaid."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The conferees adopted the report upon this bill made February 11, with the exception of section 5, which provided for the settlement of mining contracts by the Secretary of the Interior. As to section 5, the conferees simply followed the latest instructions of the House authorizing the settlement and liquidation of losses suffered in the production of manganese, chrome, pyrites, and tungsten. The conferees respectfully refer to the report and statement filed February 11, 1919, upon this bill.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this report contains the identical language that the House instructed the conferees to agree to. I therefore consider that it is not necessary to discuss it, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would like to have two or three minutes. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this conference report, and that is saying a good deal, under the circumstances. The contracts that were made in fact, but were not formally executed, ought to be cared for. That is the main object of the bill. But they come along and make a different rule as to contracts under the legislation of October 5, 1918, which I did not approve. They were not contracts. They amended it and cut out everything but four minerals. I believe that was wise. The House reversed itself by agreeing to that proposition for one reason, and one only. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] said the contracts that were made in fact but not formally executed, because in the stress of war they could not be, amounted to $3,000,000,000. That was the statement of the gentleman from California. But as they amended it and confined it to four of the minerals, that was better than to have included everything, because they were "thick as the leaves in Vallombrosa." [Laughter.] I never was there, but they were said to be very thick. People who produced coal, for instance, said, "For God's sake save our sulphur rocks" in the coal they had produced in developed mines on which they had made great fortunes, and so on.

Now, my apprehension is this, and in voting for this matter I want to give notice here and now: God helping me, I will not throw open the door in a future Congress and give that extreme power to the Secretary of the Interior, which means the head of the Bureau of Mines, to hear, to find, to settle—not to send to the courts, because that is cut off, but to settle and use a permanent revolving appropriation to pay. If I live I will be in the next Congress, and if I am in that Congress or any other Congress I shall not vote to throw open the door in that way.

I wanted to say this much. God helping, I hope the next House of Representatives will never listen to sympathetic appeals in cases such as I have referred to. I felt that I ought to say that much. We would not have put in those four minerals had it not been for the fear on both sides of the House that otherwise the situation was in a condition where $3,000,000,000 of contracts were involved, they having been made under the provisions of the bill, with power to settle. If they did not take three-fourths of the settlement when it was made, they were empowered to go to the court. That was a very different proposition.

We will have to take our chances in the future, but I think I shall not live long enough to see the end of such claims, cropping up either by general legislation or by reports from Committees on Claims. They will be with us. I doubt if one-half of the membership of this House will be here—I am sure I will not be—long enough to see the end of those claims. I am sorry the door was opened, but there you are; and this is all that we could do. I believe that the contracts that made this House reverse itself upon the subject of all the minerals that are mentioned in the act of the 5th of October last caused us, from the standpoint of necessity, to vote the other way. I did not vote the other way because it was quite understood how the four items got in, and they excluded the others. But after all, it leaves to future Congresses, I fear, a great amount of trouble.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MANN. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think one provision in this conference report, which I have not heard referred to, is a very dangerous thing. We passed the bill in the House authorizing the Secretary of War to settle certain contracts which were not legally entered into, as far as their form was concerned, and there was some question as to whether we ought to do that or not. We decided to let the executive branch of the Government, which had carried on all of these negotiations, complete the matter and determine what sum was due to the men who had furnished supplies or entered into any arrangement with or for the Government. As I recall, our bill provided that we did not confer any jurisdiction to bring a suit against the Government. Now the conference report, after authorizing the War Department to settle these claims, inserts a provision under which litigation will continue for many, many years.

Section 2 of the conference report gives to the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine any of these claims and award fair and just compensation, and so forth, in case the Secretary of War shall fail or refuse to offer satisfactory adjustment, payment, or compensation, as provided. Of course, that means, first, that if the amount which the Secretary of War, on his facts, and after he has disclosed to the claimant all the information that he has, is not satisfactory to the claimant, the claimant can go into the Court of Claims. Second, if there be no just claim, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the claimant can bring a suit in the Court of Claims 1 year or, so far as this bill is concerned, 25 years from now. There is no limitation even on the length of time within which the suit must be commenced. It confers absolute and unlimited jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims. Now, suppose a case where a man has no legal claim against the Government. We propose to authorize the Secretary of War to settle the matter upon a fair and reasonable basis under the moral conditions and the papers which have been drawn. But this conference report gives to all of these illegal contracts legality. We might as well have passed a short bill stating that so far as contracts were entered into by the War Department during the war all restrictions in the statutes as to form were repealed. That goes too far. We ought not to do it. We ought to make compensation to people who through haste and patriotism have obeyed the requests and demands of the War Department, but we ought not to permit everybody in the country who wishes to do so to commence a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States on what is now an illegal contract, but made legal by this conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] desires five minutes in which to reply, which puts me in an embarrassing position with reference to yielding time.

Mr. KAHN. I do not wish the time if the House is ready to vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. FIELDS. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FIELDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 16187, the third deficiency bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet to ask recognition to call up the conference report upon the water-power bill when the gentleman from Kentucky made his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, but inasmuch as the Speaker has seen fit, and no doubt properly so, to recognize the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of considering the general deficiency bill, I give notice now that I will call up the conference report on the water-power bill just as soon as the deficiency bill has been considered and disposed of. In order to secure the passage of the water-power bill at this session of this Congress it is absolutely necessary to have immediate consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee gives notice that he will call up the conference report as soon as the deficiency appropriation bill is passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Pending my motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 30 minutes, confined to the bill, and that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] control 15 minutes and I control the other 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would not ask to have the general debate confined to the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will modify my request, and ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to 30 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by myself and 15 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be limited to 30 minutes, 15 minutes for himself and 15 minutes for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARD in the chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this deficiency bill carries with it recommendations for appropriations of $26,799,171.24, and is a reduction of the estimates which were submitted of $13,348,404.16. I desire very briefly to call attention to the main items that go to make up the total that is recommended, and then to one or two matters of considerable importance in connection with the recommendations contained in the bill.

The first large item is in connection with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, which carries $7,220,000. Of this sum $4,220,000 is for salaries and operating expenses, and of this latter sum $500,000 is for payment of expenses in connection with the collection of premiums upon soldiers' policies. Three million dollars is for the compensation fund. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance has had for operating expenses $11,171,000 for this year. The amounts carried in this bill in the way of salaries and operating expenses are with the idea of continuing the present force at its present strength through the remaining months of this fiscal year. The situation presented to the committee was that the moneys that had been appropriated would have been exhausted in the very near future. The work of this bureau must be carried on, and therefore there was nothing left, apparently, except to appropriate the moneys that were requisite to carry on the work until the 1st of July.

The $3,000,000 is the estimated deficiency in connection with the compensation fund. Of course, no one can estimate exactly the money to be paid out under the compensation fund; it depends on the casualties and benefits that accrue under the act that Congress has passed. They originally asked $5,000,000, but subsequently agreed that three million would carry them through the balance of the year.

There is carried $559,868 for the temporary buildings in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1920. These buildings have been, or will be, vacated by the various bureaus that have occupied them and which will cease to function in July. Congress has indicated its will—properly so, I think—that the buildings shall be occupied by departments during the fiscal year of 1920, and that the Government should not pay rent for any buildings as long as these were available. The result was that nobody seemed to have made provision for the necessary expense of maintenance of the buildings for the next year. Therefore, while it is not a deficiency for this year, inasmuch as the matter was not taken care of in the legislative bill but was overlooked, it was thought proper to put it in this bill.

In regard to the Navy Department, there is appropriated $6,699,891.30 for the Naval Establishment, of which $5,109,433 is for the expenses in connection with the Engineering Department of the Navy.

The House will recall that when the first deficiency bill was up there was an item of $5,000,000 for this same bureau. It is stricken out as a result of a discussion in connection with the Marconi stations and the taking them over by the Secretary of the Navy. They have come back with the insistence that they need this money, irrespective of the matter of the Marconi stations, as I think I presented to the House. The Marconi stations were bought on December 13 and $1,450,000 was paid, of which the Navy paid $789,500, the Shipping Board $519,300, and the Railway Administration $141,200. This money being asked now is being asked for in connection with steam engineering for repair of ships and bears no relationship whatever to the Marconi stations which, as I stated, were paid for December 13.

There is $1,090,000 for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, estimated deficiency in connection with the bureau, incident to the care of the wounded boys as they are brought back from France.

In the Post Office service there is carried $4,000,000, in round figures, $1,062,967 of which is for special-delivery needs. The fourth-class postmasters are permitted to collect as a part of their compensation the special-delivery fees. They have collected them in connection with their salaries, and the moneys appropriated are made necessary in order to meet the obligation of $1,062,967. They asked $400,000 for the manufacture of 2-cent stamps in connection with the resumption of 2-cent postage.

We have given the estimated sum of $890,000 for the loss of insured postal matter. There has been an increase of something like 32 or 33 per cent in the amount of business that the Postal Service has done. There has been a corresponding increase in the loss of postal matter.

Then there is $125,000 to readjust the envelope contract. There is also in the bill quite a number of deficiencies to pay for the increase in the cost of envelopes. The House will recall that Congress passed an act authorizing the Postmaster General to readjust the contracts entered into with the contractors for furnishing envelopes to the Government. They did readjust them on the basis of envelopes delivered and to be delivered after July 2, 1918. The result was an increase of 100 per cent in the cost of these envelopes. Congress authorized the readjustment, the department made it, and there was nothing for the Committee on Appropriations to do except to appropriate the money necessary to meet the increases of cost.

There is $1,500,000 added to the star-route contracts, which have been readjusted on account of the increased cost of letting them under present conditions.

In the Department of Labor the committee recommend $1,800,000 to continue the employment service until the end of the fiscal year, and the committee also recommends $366,000 for mediation and conciliation in labor disputes.

Now, I shall endeavor when we reach that item under the five-minute rule to go somewhat more into detail touching the view the committee held and the view I hold relative to the Employment Service. I simply desire in this preliminary statement to call the attention of the House to the fact that the recommendation is made. As I recall it, the amount of the estimate was $2,900,000, but after examination the committee became satisfied that this amount recommended was sufficient to continue the organization as it at present exists to the end of the fiscal year, the 1st of July next. In regard to mediation, there were a certain number of disputes pending before these conciliators, of whom ex-President Taft and Mr. Walsh are the chief members, and this will take care of them until finally settled and disposed of. The testimony was that they expected to clean up activities by the end of the fiscal year. But in the meanwhile there are these disputes pending that have to be adjudicated.

We recommend the taking back of $32,700,000 from appropriations that were made for the Housing Bureau of the Labor Department. Gentlemen will recall that we appropriated $100,000,000. They came before the committee and offered a proposal to turn back $30,000,000. On presenting their financial statement it was apparent to the committee that from their showing $32,700,000 should be taken back. They made a recommendation asking that $250,000 be appropriated for the purpose of enabling them to make some studies in connection with the furnishing of information to persons desiring to build homes and to make available the data they had gathered. We did not feel that on a deficiency bill the committee should undertake to make such a recommendation, and we accepted that part of their proposal that turned money back into the Treasury and did not agree to that part of it looking to the enlargement of the bureau for the purpose I have outlined.

There is also a provision in the bill that the departments, in buying supplies and equipment here or elsewhere, shall buy them only after ascertainment that the Government has no such supplies or materials which could be used. A number of bills have gone through the House with such provisions on them, but there is a number that have not. There is a good deal of money that could be used without regard to the requirement. It seemed wise to the committee to have a requirement which would deal with all funds appropriated so as to require the Government, as far as possible, to use materials and supplies it now has before its goes out to accumulate or purchase additional supplies.

There is one other matter to which I desire to call the attention of the House, and I do it not only because of its very great importance but because I think there is due to the Committee on Appropriations a very plain statement of the facts. Gentlemen will find in the bill a provision reducing the amount of money that was covered back into the Treasury in the second deficiency bill in regard to the Quartermaster Corps by $829,- 375,295.10. Gentlemen will recall that in that bill we repealed appropriations for about $7,000,000,000, and also repealed authorizations for incurring obligations of about $8,000,000,000. We did that after very careful examination of the condition of balances and of obligations outstanding, and of the needs of the departments for the rest of the fiscal year. That covers a couple of months, and the committee was so careful about the matter that even within less than 24 hours of reporting the bill we had every one of those figures checked up by the various departments involved, and in presenting the matter to the House I called attention to the fact that if we had made any mistakes I desired that the departments might call them to the attention of the Senate in order that the figures might be checked up there. It turns out that the Quartermaster Department has discovered, according to the present belief, that they tremendously underestimated the amount of outstanding obligations that existed against the Government. That apparently grew out of the fact that there were any number of obligations made by officers out over the country that had not been put upon the books here in Washington so as to be taken into account by the Division of Finance in connection with the matter; and they have also had very much heavier demands from overseas, due apparently to two causes, one the slower demobilization of the troops and the other the fact that over there apparently they did not have any accurate information in regard to the extent of their liabilities. The House will very properly ask as I asked what assurance in the face of these facts we can have in regard to the figures that have been furnished by the War Department touching liabilities. I do not know that any satisfactory answer can be made to that inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have presented their best information to date, and all the committee could do under the circumstances was to take these figures as a revision of the former figures. Of course, this ought to be said, that necessarily there is a good deal of doubt, bound to be, and some speculation as to the exact amounts in connection with activities as huge as the War Department engaged in. I think they ought not to have made any such error as this, and I think that the system ought to have been such as to have had brought on the books here a more full statement of their actual liabilities, but it apparently is a fact. Of the total appropriations at the disposal of the War Department this error represents less than 4 per cent. I feel that the action of the committee and of Congress in repealing these sums has not been valueless, and that it is worth while that we should have covered into the Treasury the huge sums, even if now I must come to the House and ask that the amount in regard to the quartermaster be changed to the extent of over $829,000,000. The moment I heard of this I had requests made of all the other bureaus of the War Department to see if they were prepared to take back the statements they had made, and they have stated that they do not desire to do so.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As I recollect the statement, this error is largely due to the fact of frequent changing of the personnel in the quartermaster service.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is partially true, although this is true: We had before our committee in the other hearing men who had been in charge of the particular divisions during a long period, though not the whole period of time during which these various purchases were made. They ought to have known what they were talking about when they came and gave us tables as to outstanding liabilities. It appears that a great many of those men have left the service, and it has put an exceedingly difficult load upon Gen. Lord, in charge of the Finance Division, to check up these matters and ascertain the true situation now that the men who dealt with the matters have left the service. The gentleman is correct in that regard; but the trouble lies in the fact that in the desire to get a huge production in a hurry and to do away with what the public so frequently characterizes as red tape, a lot of things were done out in the field that did not get here to be recorded, as they should have been to make up these balances.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is an item on page 36 of the bill for $1,800,000 for the Department of Labor. Is that intended to carry on the Employment Bureau?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is intended to carry it up to the 1st of July. This bill deals generally with matters up to the 1st of July next.

Necessarily in preparing a general deficiency bill at the close of a short session it has to be done under great pressure. It can not be done until very near the end of the session, because you can not get the data on which to make it. The result is that the committee has had to work day and night nearly all the time, and I want, in this connection, to take occasion to say that to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations and to his assistants are due the thanks of the committee and of the House. Those boys worked frequently until midnight and past in order to make possible the consideration of the bills that are brought in here in the closing days of the session, and nothing but the loyalty and efficiency of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations makes possible the work that that committee presents to the House. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, 10 minutes, to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, on February 15, in an endeavor to secure some action on the Chamberlain court-martial bill, H. R. 15945, which I introduced on February 14, it was necessary to enter into some discussion of the facts in court-martial procedure. It has been very difficult to secure exact facts and the exact numbers of the cases and the names of the men to whom reference must unavoidably be made. Through the cooperation of some of the finest lawyers in the United States and officers in the United States Army stationed in various parts of the United States I have secured some absolute data which ought to be presented in connection with the consideration of any revision of court-martial laws.

Many of the best lawyers in the United States have also cooperated with me in the legal argument which I am about to present, and at this time I desire to give them credit for the work they have done and to make it clear that the entire argument to be presented is not original with me. There is no Member of Congress who can enter into every detail of law and legislation.

In discussing the question I have no desire to criticize either the Secretary of War or Gen. Crowder. I think both of them realize that they were not altogether responsible for the court-martial system which has grown up through the years in the United States, and I can not believe that either of them do not desire its revision. In many ways the Secretary of War is a man of vision, and I have had and now hold to the opinion that he would like to have exact justice done to every man in the Army, if it were possible to do so. He can not know the administrative details of each division of his bureau, and it may be that he has depended too much in some cases on the advice of others. In my opinion, it is unavoidable that he must do so, and that he must make the same mistakes that the rest of us do. The name of Gen. Crowder must inevitably be brought into any discussion, not to criticize him for things in the past over which he had no control, but to call his attention to the views held by those of us who have not spent a lifetime in the military service and have some knowledge of the rules of law and equity which in civil life govern all men. I assume that he will realize that a discussion of the question does not involve personal criticism of him, and I know that he will respect the views of the 4,000,000 men who have practical knowledge of the court-martial situation which they have gained in the past two years by service in the Army.

Mr. Chairman, I would not inject this discussion at this time into this bill but for the fact that I am informed that General Order No. 84, issued by the War Department in the last few days since the discussion of this question, ordered the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in France to return for revision all cases of men sentenced under court-martial in France in the American Expeditionary Forces, and the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, or the staff, in France has absolutely refused to comply with that order and has refused to send them for revision to the Judge Advocate General's office in Washington on the theory that the Articles of War do not provide that they shall be forced to make the return. I am informed, and believe it to be the fact, that among those cases which they refused to send back for revision in Washington from the American Expeditionary Forces there are about six cases where men are sentenced to death and will die unless some action is taken by this House prior to the next session.

My service in this war I should have regarded as peculiarly barren had I learned no lesson from it or come out of it without the desire and purpose of attempting to do something for the improvement of the Military Establishment. I shall indulge in no criticism for the simple sake of criticizing, and whatever criticism is made will be given with the hope and view of pointing out existing deficiencies and offer what I conceive to be remedial suggestions. I shall devote my observations to-day to the deficiencies of the existing military code and of the existing system of the administration of justice in the Army.

A representative of this body should need offer no explanation of the reasons which impel him to speak upon this subject. Justice is the largest interest of man on earth. It has been the subject of poet, bard, and sage in every era of man's existence. It has figured in every theme of moral and political philosophy. God is the source of justice, and the Son of God came to execute justice on the earth. The preamble of our own Constitution declares that this union exists to establish justice. Justice is essential to national perpetuity, and well did Gladstone say that "National injustice is the surest road to national downfall."

In the national domain justice must be national. It must be coterminous with the extent and as broad as the interests of the Nation. The Nation must not establish it in one place only to deny it in another. The Nation can not establish it in one class and deny it to another class. The Nation can not deal justly with one individual while another suffers unjustly. Justice is an attribute which must be of general scope throughout the Nation and of as nearly as possible uniform and common application to all. There can be no such thing as justice to the citizen and injustice to the soldier.

We lack integrity and wholesomeness of interest if we have a greater interest in and a greater anxiety for the administration of civil justice than we have for the administration of military justice. If, indeed, the national thought and interest should be partial in either way, it should be more acute and anxious to see that justice be done in the Army. For in the military, rather than in civil, administration is there greater opportunity for an oppressive, tyrannical, and unjust exercise of power, greater opportunity for injustice which not only crushes the spirit of a man, but actually takes and destroys his life. I have seen injustice in the Army. The existing military code does not establish and guarantee justice to the enlisted man of the Army. I will speak more strongly than that. If followed, in many cases it does not permit of justice. In many instances it is impossible to do justice under it. This is true not only of the substantive code but also of the departmental procedure prescribed for its administration.

The code and the procedure under it are offensive to any enlightened sense of natural justice, and equally offensive to those fundamental principles of law which are elemental in our institutions and which reflect our civilization.

These deficiencies of the code and proceedings under it which lead to this injustice will, I think, become perfectly obvious as such upon a mere statement of them. As to them and their baneful influence there could not be among lawyers, at least, any variance of views. The slightest examination of the code will reveal that it embodies a system which, in reason and logic and upon principle, must necessarily result in injustice, and the military experience of any man will give abundant proof that the injustice which inheres in the principles of the code becomes even enlarged in the practice thereof.

Mr. Chairman, it will be impossible for me to finish my argument within the time allotted to me, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD before proceeding with some of the actual cases, names, facts, figures, and serial numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That there are deficiencies in the code will, I say, become perfectly obvious upon your examination of it. That there are deficiencies and serious ones—indeed, fundamental ones—is well known to those who have had the most intimate touch with and who have been in immediate charge of the administration of military justice during this war. Many officers who have served in the Judge Advocate General's department during this war and some of those who are still serving therein have no hesitancy in condemning the existing system of military law. If the new officers were free to speak, the great majority of them would unite in the condemnation of the existing system. Deficiencies so patent should be condemned by all officers of the Army, and especially by the Secretary of War and his immediate military advisers, who will, partially at least, admit themselves to be responsible for some of the existing system and for its perpetuation. Unfortunately, the Secretary of War and his immediate advisers seem to see the situation otherwise and to uphold it. Judge Advocate General Crowder, in a speech which he recently made to the Bar Association of the City of Chicago, went to great length in proclaiming the virtues of the existing system and in claiming for it a degree of perfection possessed by few penal codes. The Secretary of War has admitted the unjust judgments of courts-martial during this war, and is resorting now, as he has resorted throughout the war, to partial palliation by the pardoning power, which itself proceeds upon the conclusive presumption that the accused soldier has been fairly and justly tried and convicted. If I may trust the accuracy of the press reports of an address recently delivered by the officer who throughout this war has had most to do with the actual administration of military justice, he has made the authoritative statement that the whole system of courts-martial procedure is archaic, crude, and unjust; that thousands of soldiers during this war have suffered unjust and unlawful punishments, and that there should be immediate revision of the system at the hands of Congress.

If the deficiencies of the present system could be expressed in a single sentence, it could be said to be a failure upon the part of Congress, the War Department, and the Army to appreciate that courts-martial are courts as much so as any other courts in the land, exercising functions which are inherently judicial, which at all times ought to be exercised in a judicial manner. Courts-martial exist under the provisions of the Constitution. Congress shall have the power to make rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces. Under this provision of the Constitution the government of the Army of the United States is intrusted not to the President but to the Congress itself. Congress prescribes the offense, Congress prescribes the penalty, Congress provides for the court that is to try the case. Courts-martial are, furthermore, recognized by the exception of the fifth amendment, whereby cases arising in the land and naval forces are withdrawn from indictment by grand jury and trial by petty jury. It has been said a score of times by the Supreme Court of the United States that courts-martial are courts, and that their judgments, when lawfully rendered, are entitled to the same respect and finality as are the judgments of the courts of the United States, created under the judiciary clause of the Constitution. And it was said in Runkel v. United States (122 U. S.) at page 558:

> The whole proceeding from its inception is judicial. The trial, finding, and sentence are the solemn acts of a court organized and conducted under the authority of, and according to, the prescribed forms of law. It sits to pass upon the most sacred questions of human rights that are ever placed on trial in a court of justice; rights which, in the very nature of things, can never be exposed to danger nor subjected to the uncontrolled will of any man, but which must be judged according to law.

Such is the character of a court-martial and such are its sacred judicial functions. And I say, and I shall attempt to show later on, that the code and the proceeding under it fail to recognize that judicial character.

Again, the code and the proceeding under it have been predicated upon the theory that those great fundamental safeguards which are inherent in our system of jurisprudence, some of which are declared in the Bill of Rights, contained in the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, do not surround and have no application to an accused placed on trial before a court-martial. This may once have been the view which obtained in the judiciary, and it was certainly the view that obtained in the War Department and in the Army, and, unfortunately, it is a view which the department insists upon maintaining, notwithstanding it is a judicial anachronism.

It may have been that in Fourth Wallace the court, especially the dissenting members, were of the opinion that the great principles of the Bill of Rights had no application to courts-martial procedure. But this case was overruled by the Supreme Court in Grafton v. United States (206 U. S.), and that court, once and for all, laid down the rule that an accused before a court-martial is entitled to all the guaranties contained in the Bill of Rights, except where he is expressly excepted from them in the Bill of Rights.

And yet this principle has been absolutely ignored by the War Department and has not been recognized by the legislation enacted by Congress for the government of the Army. Those great principles which are necessary to safeguard the rights of an enlisted man on trial before a general court-martial are not recognized by, or contained in, the present Articles of War.

Why should not a man placed on trial before a court-martial, for murder, for instance, be entitled to just as much protection as he would be entitled to if placed on trial for the same offense before a civil court? The law alleged to be violated is the same, the punishment is the same, and the terrible consequences of the miscarriage of justice are the same. The civil law leaves no stone unturned in building up protection for an accused thus placed in jeopardy. But the military law and the practice under it leave his life to the hazard of what untrained, unskilled, and unadvised Army officers may be disposed to do.

There is much talk about the necessity for supervision of the proceedings after a case has been tried, and of revision of the judgment in case the judgment shall be found to be affected by error prejudicial to the accused. This is necessary. There ought to be revision. There ought to be a method for the correction of errors. No system of jurisprudence, military or civil, is worthy of the name that does not provide some method for the correction of errors. And yet the military law of the United States does not provide for such correction, and in this respect this country is behind every other enlightened and progressive country of the earth. No matter how gross and prejudicial the errors may be, so far as the law is concerned—certainly as the law is construed by the present Secretary of War and the Judge Advocate General of the Army—no matter how invalid the judgment may be when tested by established legal principles universally recognized, the Secretary of War and the Judge Advocate General at the beginning of the war said judgment had to go uncorrected.

Through the insistence of officers, or certain officers at least, in the Judge Advocate General's Department, an insistence that has grown out of a settled conviction based upon the observation of so much injustice, an insistence which has been continuous, and displayed in season and out of season and upon every opportunity, the Secretary of War and the Judge Advocate General have in some flagrant cases discovered a power somewhere to set aside or modify erroneous judgments, notwithstanding their obstinate resistance to the view that they had such power.

It is now known, from testimony that has been given before the Senate Military Committee, that the Secretary of War, the Inspector General of the Army, the Acting Chief of Staff of the Army, and the Judge Advocate General all combined in the early days of this war to resist the ruling made by Gen. Ansell, who was then Acting Judge Advocate General, and supported therein by every officer in his department, that this power of revision does exist in the department and of necessity had to exist if justice was to be done. This ruling was made when Gen. Ansell was the head of the office, with authority to exercise all the power in the office, and was an official ruling upon the subject and entitled to respect as such. But the Army—represented in this case by the Chief of Staff, the Inspector General, and the Judge Advocate General—combined against the ruling and mustered all their strength, as a result of which they induced the Secretary of War to relieve Gen. Ansell from the headship of the office, to relieve him from all participation in the administration of military justice, to reverse his ruling which would have liberalized that administration, and to order the Judge Advocate General back as head of the office, in order that the hard-and-fast illiberal and unjust practices of the War Department might be continued unchallenged.

Gen. Ansell, in a second brief in which he hopelessly pleaded for a reconsideration of the reactionary and oppressive ruling made by the Army authorities, prophetically predicted the injustice that was bound to ensue if that kind of administration was to obtain during this war. I quote from the head notes containing the points of that brief, and I ask the attention of this House to them:

BRIEF FILED BY PERMISSION OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR IN SUPPORT OF MY RECENT OPINION CONCERNING THE REVISORY POWER OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF THE ARMY OVER JUDGMENTS OF MILITARY COURTS.

BEFORE THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

I. The action taken by the Secretary of War on the advice of the Judge Advocate General has been taken under very evident misapprehension. Such action is predicated upon the correctness of conviction, and the acceptance of such an act of grace by these innocent men necessarily implies a confession of guilt of a crime which, upon well-established principles of law and justice, they never committed. Justice is a matter of law and not of executive favor.

II. It is as regrettable as it is obvious that those who oppose my views do not vision in the administration of military justice what the new Army of America will require, nor do they even see what the present is revealing. They are looking backward and taking counsel of a reactionary past whose guidance will prove harmful if not fatal.

1. The views of the Assistant Chief of Staff and the Inspector General savor of professional absolutism.

2. The opposing legal views are anachronistic. They are given a backward slant through undue deference to the theory of an illustrious text writer as to the nature of courts-martial, a theory which civil jurisprudence has never adopted but distinctly denied.

(a) Winthrop's theory was wrong in reason.

(b) Winthrop's theory was wrong in principle and precedent.

3. The teachings which followed upon the premises that courts-martial are executive agencies have all been disproved by the Supreme Court of the United States, though this department still clings to them.

(a) Courts-martial are courts created by Congress, sanctioned by the Constitution, and their judgments are entitled to respect as such.

(b) Courts-martial do not try simply for the crime in its military aspects but for the full and complete offense as recognized by the law of the land.

(c) The judgment of a court-martial, being a complete adjudication by a competent tribunal of the offense as known to the law of the land, is a bar against a second trial in any court of the United States.

(d) The functions of courts-martial are inherently and conclusively judicial, and therefore are not subject to the power of command as such, but only to judicial supervision established by Congress.

(e) Court-martial procedure being judicial from the beginning to the end (Runkle's case, 122 U. S., 588, and all subsequent cases cited), the power of revision, if it exists, is also judicial, and therefore not subject to the power of command.

(f) Such judicial revision is not subject, therefore, to the usual General Staff supervision.

III. The whole argument of the other side is found in the contention that the word "revise" has no substantial meaning, but has reference only to clerical corrections.

One single fact exposes the utter fallacy of that contention, and had it been considered must have prevented an expression of that view.

That fact is this: The word "revise" is an organic word, which solely creates and defines the duties of an entire bureau. Congress went to the great length of creating an independent bureau in the War Department for the sole and declared purpose of having it "revise" the proceedings of all military courts, and made that duty of revision the sole duty of that bureau.

IV. "Revise," in its every sense—ordinary, legal, and technical military sense—means to correct, to alter, and amend.

(a) The ordinary meaning of the word "revise" is not to review for the purpose of corrections, but to perform the act of correction.

(b) In its legal sense the meaning of the word, as evidenced by a multitude of examples of its use, is unmistakable, and if the single example heretofore given of its significance when used in statutes were "persuasive" at all, those to be given now should prove absolutely convincing.

V. The word "revise," as a matter of fact, is in no sense ambiguous and there is no room for construing it. It would have made no difference, therefore, what the administrative practice was or is. The quality of law is not impaired by nonuse. As a matter of fact, Judge Holt did, in form at least, pronounce sentences invalid and did not content himself simply with recommending that pronouncement was by superior authority. His views as to the validity of proceedings were expressed in terms that savor of judicial pronouncement, and the orders of the War Department, so far as examined, seem to respect that quality by confirmance.

VI. The judge advocate general of England certainly did have this power of revision. (I am not advised of his present authority.)

VII. Whence comes the established power to declare proceedings null and void for jurisdictional error? And why should not the larger power include the lesser radical one of correction of legal error?

VIII. The necessity, in the name of justice, of locating this power in this department, and preferably in this office, where logically, and I think legally, it belongs, must be apparent to all who are familiar with the administration of military justice.

It appears from that testimony that Gen. Ansell insisted upon a closer supervision upon courts-martial procedure upon the part of the War Department in a memorandum addressed to the Secretary of War in November, 1917; in another one addressed to the same authority in December, 1917; in another one addressed to the Judge Advocate General in the same month; that between January and the middle of April, 1918, he addressed to the Judge Advocate General of the Army memoranda still insisting upon the necessity for closer supervision of the administration of military justice; and all this in face of the fact that he had been relieved from the administration of military justice because of this insistence.

After four months' study of the systems of military justice obtaining among our allies in Europe, he returned about the middle of July and made a report in which he clearly pointed out many of the elements in which the system of military justice as administered by our allies was far superior to our own. That report was disregarded, ignored, and never reached the Secretary of War.

I care nothing about any individual concerned in this matter of administration further than to say that this officer, who has insisted at all times upon a closer departmental supervision with a view to liberalizing courts-martial procedure, has not only never been given a hearing by the Secretary of War since the question was first agitated, but that he has been, on the other hand, reproved, ignored, and elbowed aside.

But, no matter how much supervision and revision there may be after the judgment of the court-martial has once been made, this could never prove sufficiently effective. The place to prevent error and injustice is at its source. The injustice which at present characterizes the discipline of the Army results largely from this fact: Any officer of the Army may prefer charges against an enlisted man; the charges may be, and frequently are, the result of caprice and petty tyranny; and any officer with court-martial jurisdiction can order that the man shall be tried upon these charges. There is no judicial investigation, no judicial determination, of whether the charges actually allege an offense and whether there is prima facie proof to sustain them. Therefore the current of power which is to result in the taking of a soldier's life or land him in the penitentiary for life or subject him to other punishment can be turned on by any officer of the Army regardless of his rank or experience; and inasmuch as all officers stand together upon the side of so-called discipline, when the current is once turned on it is not likely to be interrupted by the interposition of any officer in authority, and there is no officer of legal or judicial training who is in authority to interpose.

Here, then, at the source is the chief deficiency, an evil which demands immediate remedy and which this bill attempts to do in section 4. Section 4, as drafted, requires that whenever there is an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department present for duty on the staff of an authority appointing a court-martial, no charge shall be referred to a court-martial for trial until such officer shall have given his opinion that the charge is a legal charge and that there is prima facie proof against the accused. I suggest an amendment to this section so as to require that no charge shall be referred to trial until those two questions shall have been passed upon by some officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department in all cases.

I am advised that many officers are now being employed in the office of the Judge Advocate General gathering statistics to show that the present system is good, has not worked badly, and that, notwithstanding the heavy punishments, the records are legal.

Right here is one of the few criticisms of the Judge Advocate General and the Secretary of War, and I make them in all kindness, as they are not responsible for the entire system. They content themselves with a strict technical legality of the proceedings, the law to be applied being not the law of our general jurisprudence, being not the generally established principles designed to secure justice, but the strict letter of an archaic code which systematically belongs to medieval times. I defy any man to make an inspection of the Articles of War, amended or otherwise, and say that they belong to this modern, enlightened period, rather than to the England of 200 years ago, whose criminal code of that time was marked by civil harshness and brutality. Herein lies the chief difficulty: The War Department says that these trials have been legal, but I say they reek of lawlessness when judged by any standard of jurisprudence worthy of the name. I charge that they have not been fair, that they have not been impartial, and that in many instances they have not been tried at all. Can a trial be said to be a fair trial when an enlisted man of the Army, ignorant of his rights, unappreciative of the consequences, is placed on trial before a court-martial for his life, and has assigned to him for his defense a newly joined second lieutenant who stands before the court more like a culprit than the accused himself, frightened, inexperienced, knowing nothing of life, knowing nothing of law, and less than nothing about courts-martial procedure? He stands silent and mute, lifting not a hand nor a voice to save the man whom he is assigned to represent from the penalty of death. And yet this is exactly what has occurred in France and in the United States. Second lieutenants of the kind described have been assigned to the so-called defense of enlisted men charged with capital or other most serious offenses and have advised their clients to plead guilty. And courts-martial have thereupon awarded the penalty of death or other serious punishment. Such were the cases that came from France, in which the commanding general of the American Expeditionary Forces vigorously insisted upon the application of the death penalty, and had he had the power to confirm the sentences of death in those cases, as he has in many others, he would have confirmed these. Such were the cases in which the Judge Advocate General of the Army said it would be unfortunate if the War Department was not of one mind in presenting these cases to the President, so that these sentences of death might be carried into execution and discipline maintained. In the name of a just God, what can be said for a system that permits of such tragedies? What can be said of general officers who display such lust for innocent blood? What can be said of a Judge Advocate General, the highest judicial officer in the system itself, who pleads for a united front upon the part of all interested in the maintenance of discipline, that innocent men may be sent to their doom as sacrifices to discipline?

I have shown that an enlisted man may be sent to his trial through caprice and petty tyranny, and I say that the trial itself is frequently but an empty form, conducted by men who know no law and who frequently, in the name of discipline, are not disposed to do justice to the accused, represented by a young, inexperienced officer who is disposed to let the system take its course, regardless of consequences. Not one single principle of law designed to secure a fair trial is applicable to a court-martial during the trial. There are a few statutory forms which the court follows. The principles of justice are not applied.

What could be more revolting to a sense of fairness and decency than that the judge advocate at the trial, whose very title indicates that he is there to perform sacred judicial functions, should have as his first duty to prosecute in the name of the United States, and if he is to do his duty by the United States he should prosecute and prosecute vigorously? And yet, as an indication of the little regard that the court-martial system has for the sacredness of judicial functions upon the one hand, and the sacred rights of the accused on trial on the other, this same prosecutor is made the judicial adviser of the court, and then, to make the matter worse, he is also enjoined by statute to see that the rights of the accused do not suffer. There could be no better system of injustice prescribed than this. One man is to be a vigorous prosecutor for the Government, the judicial adviser of the court which passes upon his prosecution, and the defender of the accused, whom he prosecutes. A system that permits such a confusion of duties must result in the grossest of injustice, and a system that prescribes and requires such a confusion should be cast into eternal damnation. I have seen this same judge advocate, prosecutor, counsel for the defense use his powers or influence or suggestion, with the results that accused enlisted men have come before courts-martial for their trial not even accompanied by the useless counsel to which I have heretofore adverted, but relying upon the advice and clemency of the court they pleaded guilty to the most serious offenses. The functions of a judge advocate are properly those of a judge in a criminal trial, and they should be restored, as they are attempted to be, by section 1 of this bill, and a prosecutor should be appointed to prosecute in the name of the United States, as is attempted to be done by section 2 of this bill, and the right of the accused to counsel, both civil and military, should be established, as is attempted to be done by said section 2. I shall suggest amendments to that section so that a man may have civil counsel if he so provides, and that in every case he shall have any military counsel he selects, and if he selects none then the proper authorities must furnish him with counsel qualified for such duty by rank, experience, and, wherever possible, by legal learning.

The existing law is a travesty in so far as it attempts to secure a fair court through an exercise of the right of challenge. The court is appointed by the authority that passes upon the charges and decides that they should be tried. And the same authority can refer to that court as many sets of charges as he pleases. But the law does not provide for challenges to the panel, but only to the poll; nor does it provide for peremptory challenges, but only challenges for cause,. The challenges, then, must be made one at a time and to the individual member. The challenge is tried by the remaining members of the court. If, therefore, the challenge lies equally to all, as is frequently the case, the members must try that challenge and pass, therefore, upon their own competency and fitness. There have been a considerable number of cases during this war where several men have been tried, one after the other, for the same or similar offense, and by the same court. Of course, it needs no argument to demonstrate that the court which had convicted one of these men did not come to the trial of a second or subsequent man with a fair and unprejudiced mind. This situation is designed to be cured by section 5 of this bill, to which I shall submit some amendments which are designed to make the question a purely judicial one to be decided by a judicial officer, and especially in the right of objection to be exercised at any time.

Courts-martial, under the present code, are subject to the absolute dictation and domination of their commander who appoints them. Even if they acquit a man he is not advised of it. It is kept secret and is reported to the authority that appointed the court, and he may return, and frequently does return, the proceedings of the court instructing them to change their finding. Or if the court should find a man not guilty of the larger offense charged, but guilty of some lesser included offense, in that case also they may be instructed to reconsider their findings and sentence. How inconsonant such procedure is with all principles of justice. This situation is designed to be changed by section 6 of the bill, to which I shall submit an amendment the purpose of which will be to make that section more efficient for that purpose.

The revisory power in the Judge Advocate General, which the Secretary of War and the present Judge Advocate General do not wish to exercise, is conferred upon that officer in section 7. That power ought to be exercised. There is bound to be error under every system, and before any sentence of death, dismissal, or dishonorable discharge shall be executed it should have been determined to have been legally awarded by the highest judicial officer in the Army.

It is very doubtful, to my mind, if, in view of the reluctance of the present Judge Advocate General to exercise that power, a court of military appeals should not be appointed which would exercise the power. This, of course, Congress can provide for and place it beyond all military dictation. Such a court would have this additional advantage: Power could be conferred upon it to pass upon cases which have been unfairly tried during this war to set aside or modify their judgments. I am sure that legislation which operates prospectively will still be deficient in that it will not reach back and correct the injustices which have been perpetrated through courts-martial during this war. Some functionary must be created for that purpose.

I have in the past criticized those who did not present actual names, dates, and figures in support of legislation or in the making of criticisms, and I therefore will give the record of some of the cases which have forced me to the conviction which I hold. These are only a small portion of the cases that have been considered, but they prove the case not only that the system will never deal even-handed justice, but also prove that an immediate review is necessary of every sentence heretofore made. These are the cases referred to:

A case recently called to my attention presents an appealing instance of the effect on the enlisted man of the absence of legal control of our system of Army punishments.

A boy of 18, who had been rejected for a physical defect when he first sought to enlist, finally after persisting in his effort to get into the Army was accepted and sent to Port Arthur, Tex. While he was doing guard duty on one of the coldest nights last winter he and three other boys on the guard stepped a few feet off their beat to warm their hands at a fire. They were found at the fire by their captain, who emphatically threatened to court-martial them the next morning and to have them shot or sent to prison for life. This boy was so impressed by this threat and by the power of his captain to carry it into effect that he telephoned to his father as soon as he went off guard and told him that he was to be court-martialed and shot and asked his father to come and help him. His father was unable to make himself understood over the telephone, and the boy thought he said that he was sick and could not come. Understanding that his father could not come to his assistance and believing himself at the mercy of the court-martial, that boy, rather than face the disgrace and punishment with which he was threatened, committed suicide in the early morning of that same day.

This case presents to my mind a terrible indictment of our court-martial system. That boy felt helpless in the hands of the military authorities. He believed that his captain could go through with the threat to court-martial and shoot him. If he had been in civil life and a similar threat had been made, he would have known that there were juries, judges, and the law to protect his rights and secure him against the arbitrary will of his superior officers. If the men in our Army knew that before they could be punished by military courts the charges against them must be sifted and tried in accordance with the law, if they knew that the military commander could not dominate the court-martial but would himself be dominated by the law, this unfortunate boy could not have been scared into taking his own life.

It seems to me impossible that any man can think for a moment of the circumstances of this boy's death without immediately demanding that these military injustices which are a disgrace to American jurisprudence be now and forever blotted out. Only in our Army is it still true that a man may be subjected to that tyranny which exists when the superior power of another man is not subjected to the control of the law.

It is my intention to get from the War Department all the facts in connection with this case. So far I know that boy's name was Ira R. Sellers; that he enlisted at Dallas on April 10, 1917; that he was 18 years of age; that he belonged to Company F of the Nineteenth Infantry; that he died under the circumstances which I have narrated on December 14, 1917.

A machine gunner in France had a "run in" with a corporal who had been drinking and wanted to fight. The gunner ran away from him to his billet. The corporal followed and, despite the opposition of another soldier, made his way into the billet. There the gunner defended himself with a knife and stabbed the corporal so that he died. The gunner was brought to trial on a specification that he did "willfully, feloniously, and unlawfully commit involuntary manslaughter," and was sentenced to forfeit $15 a month for three years and to perform hard labor for that period without confinement, which means that his hard labor was to be in addition to his regular military duties. On review by the Judge Advocate General the findings were declared to be void for repugnancy, "willful" involuntary manslaughter being a degree of crime unknown to the law.

A private was sentenced to be shot upon conviction as a deserter under the draft and of refusal to obey orders. Upon review by the Judge Advocate General's office the conviction of desertion was set aside on the ground that it had not been shown that the man had received the needful notification from his State adjutant general. For the conviction of disobedience the sentence was commuted to confinement at hard labor for 15 years. Then, some months later, it was discovered that the man was mentally deficient as a result of dementia præcox, and upon the further recommendation of the Judge Advocate General's office he was discharged into the custody of his father. Case No. 117458.

I do not want to mention that boy's name, because he is in the hospital, but I give the number—117458—and anyone who desires the name of any man to whom I refer can secure it from the War Department.

The one conscientious objector sentenced to death had been convicted of disobedience of orders to drill and of having seditious literature in his possession. The sincerity of his objections was established, as well as the fact that he had not been offered noncombatant service provided for under General Order No. 28. It was also established that while certain passages of books in his possession had been denounced by the Department of Justice, that department had also ruled that they might be retained by sectarians for private study. No evidence having been offered that this man attempted or intended to distribute the books, the Judge Advocate General's recommendation that the findings be disapproved and the man discharged was acted upon by the President. Case No. 116790.

A private of infantry was convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged in the face of a plea of insanity that the prosecution had failed to controvert by evidence. The Judge Advocate General's office disapproved the findings and the man was sent to a Government hospital for the insane. Case No. 116694.

A private at Camp Shelby, Miss., was notified that his regiment was about to proceed overseas and that none might leave the limits of the camp. He waited until the guards were withdrawn and fled, with obvious intention to desert. He was apprehended after his regiment had sailed and sentenced to be shot. This was commuted by the President, on the recommendation of the Judge Advocate General, to 20 years at hard labor. Case No. 118109.

At the near-by Camp Beauregard, La., a private, described by one of his officers on the stand as a "mere boy," was convicted on charges of forgery, escape, and desertion, and was sentenced to 30 years' hard labor. This case, not falling within the category that receives presidential attention, stands as the court left it, and the "mere boy" faces 10 years more in prison than the man thought worthy of death. Case No. 131314.

Still another private at Camp Beauregard, charged with absence without leave for the same period and under the same circumstances, except that he had gone to bid his family farewell, was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for 15 years. Case No. 116800.

Court-martial record No. 108625. The accused was a boy, 17 years old. He was charged with sleeping on post, a capital offense, and he was defended by a second lieutenant and pleaded guilty. The following colloquy took place:

Pvt. So-and-so, do you know that in pleading guilty to that charge, if the court should find you guilty according to your plea, you may be shot to death with musketry?

ACCUSED. No, sir.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Well, you are informed that the maximum penalty for this offense of which you have pleaded guilty is death. Knowing this, do you wish to let your plea of guilty stand.

ACCUSED. Yes, sir; I guess so.

Whereupon the distinguished counsel for the accused made the following plea:

I would like to make a few remarks in behalf of the prisoner. It seems that the sergeant of the guard had given orders for the prisoner to stay on this post and to sit down, and in this warm room, by a fire, it is quite hard for a person to keep awake when he is seated in the dark for a whole hour by himself. It is also generally understood that the Articles of War had never been read to this prisoner, and he knew nothing of the seriousness of the offense of going to sleep. He is only a mere boy, 17 years old, apparently in bad health. Most of his time has been spent in a hospital since joining the Army. I would also state that this is the first post he had ever served on, and he served under very trying circumstances.

Whereupon the court sentenced this boy to be dishonorably discharged from the service, to forfeit all pay and allowances due and to become due, and to be confined at hard labor for two years. He was confined in the disciplinary barracks. On September 9, 1918, the case was brought to the attention of Gen. Ansell, who recommended that the boy be restored to duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent just in this connection for one minute to be yielded to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Have I a minute left?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we start the reading of the first paragraph and then the gentleman can take time.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the gentleman from California be recognized after the reading of the first paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, namely:

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is a most interesting one. The whole country has been greatly stirred by this matter of courts-martial. Now, there undoubtedly has been more or less injustice done in the Army to soldiers, but I desire to have read in my time an editorial from the Chicago Tribune of February 15, 1919, upon this important subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the article in the time of the gentleman from California.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMY DISCIPLINE.

"For I am a man under authority, having under myself soldiers: and I say to this one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it." (St. Matthew, viii, 9.)

When a soldier goes absent without leave, deserts his post of duty to see a dying father, he does so because his own personal desires are stronger than his sense of responsibility to his country. It may be a hard thing to give up seeing a dying father, but it is a harder thing to give up running away in the face of the enemy.

That is what military justice is about. The sole preoccupation of an army, wherever it is, is to train its men and keep them trained to obey the will of the commander under the most trying possible circumstances, and serve the will of the nation. If disobedience had been tolerated in the United States, our Army in Europe would not have captured the St. Mihiel salient nor fought six weeks in the Argonne.

The reason that the National Guard made good in this war and failed in our previous wars was that from the time it was inducted into the Federal service it was subjected to Regular Army discipline. In previous wars it kept its own "discipline."

An army, to be successful in the field, must from the moment it begins to train at home have absolute control of its discipline. The commanding general is everything. He must bear the three keys. He must have final control. He must be the judiciary, the legislature, and the executive. If he were not, he would not have an army. He would have a collection of armed individuals.

Gen. Ansell's testimony before the Senate is based on a fundamental misconception. He thinks the first object of an army is justice. It is not. The first object of an army is victory.

Gen. Ansell is poisoning the public mind against the Army, because he wants his own bureau of the Army—the Judge Advocate General's—to be given more power. He wants to be a supreme court of Army discipline. He is striking at the foundation of the Army—discipline.

There are things that can be done. Young officers, made overnight, as we had to make them, because we had to have officers, make difficult situations. They have to be supported in the interests of discipline. They themselves are frequently disciplined for causing the situation. The solution is to train officers. Young West Pointers who have never served in the ranks are guilty of dangerous absurdities. Make a year in the ranks a prerequisite to West Point, and they will not be so inept.

Our regulations may be bettered and our administration of military law bettered, but it will not be improved by giving appeal powers to a bureau chief in Washington—a place for disgruntled officers, removed for inefficiency, for mutinous soldiers convicted by their commanders to gain sympathy and spread disaffection.

Army discipline is not pleasant. No discipline is pleasant. What seems to be forgotten in this discussion before the Senate is that an Army is no good to the civilian population of this Nation unless it submits to rigorous discipline.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have recognition for just a moment. I hope that gentlemen will forbear as far as possible in connection with debate upon this interesting question at this time. If we are to get the bill through by to-night, it is going to require a certain amount of restraint on the part of all of us, and I trust that gentlemen will not now open up this subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have five minutes under the rule in order to reply to the telegram that has just been inserted by the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the occasion for my rising is the article which has been read from the Clerk's desk presented by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. I think that that article is most unjust; that the statements therein are most uncalled for, and that they are not in keeping with the American spirit of fairness and justice in the Army. [Applause.] And if the gentleman from California, a distinguished Member of this House, were to become, as I understand he is to become, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the next House, and if he believes in the statements contained in that article and would in this House encourage them and speak for them I would hate to see him become the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the next House. [Applause.] There is not any question, Mr. Chairman, but what the greatest injustice to-day in the Army is in the manner of courts-martial. It has been so in the Army for many, many years. I have known some of it from observation myself. I have seen men court-martialed, reprimanded, and disgraced by their officers over them without any justification in fact or in law, and the time ought to be here now in this great American Republic when men, be they in the Military Establishment or in civil life, can receive justice and fairness at the hands of their superior officers and the officers of the law. [Applause.] Gen. Ansell, of the Judge Advocate General's office, has risen head and shoulders above anybody in the Military Establishment during this war [applause], and because he has been the man to stand up and come out and say that injustice has been done; that men have been sent to their death without opportunity to have their cases reviewed by the proper officers, it is said in the papers that Gen. Ansell will be compelled to resign and leave the War Department. Think of that, gentlemen, when an officer charged with responsible duty offers suggestions as to how better to do justice to the soldiers in trials by court-martial he is to be driven from the Army.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if that has become the case in this country we ought to reorganize the Military Establishment from top to bottom. [Applause.] That article just read from the desk is the way some of the high officials at the head of the Armies feel about our private soldiers. Some of them seem to reap great pleasure out of the mistreatment of our men who are in the Armies; and I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the men in the enlisted personnel of our Army are to-day and have been of as high character, as intelligent, and as patriotic as any man in the commissioned personnel of the Army. And because a man gives up certain rights, which he does, to enter the Military Establishment and fight for his country, shall he be denied an opportunity for justice and fairness? I hope that time has not come in this Republic. And it is because of the complaints that we have read about and that we know about, and that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] knows about, a man who has served with honor and credit in France, it is because of what he and others know that we are trying to have a revision of the court-martial law. And, Mr. Chairman, we will have it. It is because of these conditions that the Military Establishment is unpopular and compels them to come here and produce much more than ample evidence for the retention of the Military Establishment in proper strength.

You remember when a few days ago the military bill was here in the House that the Members of this House were willing to vote an Army of only 175,000 men, whereas perhaps they need more, and it is due to the mismanagement of the Army and the fact that we do not receive justice and fairness and square dealing for the men who have fought and are fighting the battles of our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

For expenses of the alien property custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, including personal and other services and expenses incident to the acquiring and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, printing and binding, law books, books of reference and periodicals, supplies and equipment, and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $110,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I neglected during my statement to the committee to say that it was my purpose by authority of the Committee on Appropriations to offer an amendment to the bill providing for a joint commission of the House and Senate in connection with the present methods of the Government relative to financial matters. I have had printed for the information of the House a number of the copies of the amendment in order that Members may familiarize themselves with this proposition, and I call attention to it now in order that the House may be advised, as I desire a little later to offer the amendment. The copies are at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEWERS.

For cleaning and repairing sewers and basins, $25,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and in support of that I ask the Clerk to read the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have the resolution read in his time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the meeting of the Iowa State Grange, held at Des Moines, January 23 and 24, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to the so-called 'daylight-saving plan,' which, instead of saving time, has wasted time and money for the farmer, who works from daylight in the morning to darkness, anyway, and who simply finds an hour of darkness added in the morning to his working day if he conforms to this change. It has proven a serious loss and a continual inconvenience to the farmers of this State and the Nation, and we urge upon our Senators and Representatives in the United States Congress that they use their influence to prevent turning the clocks of the Nation an hour ahead in 1919, as was done last year. We will approve and indorse any resolution introduced in the Iowa State Legislature that will place this State on record as opposing any further tampering with our historic standard method of computing time by the sun."

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For dust prevention, cleaning, and snow removal, including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $60,000.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after line 12, insert the following as a new paragraph: "The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to investigate conditions affecting the existing contract for the collection and disposal of ashes in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation paid, or to be paid, thereunder and to adjust the same if the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment: Provided further, That additional compensation, if any, paid as authorized herein shall not exceed the sum of $22,000 for the year. And the said commissioners are further authorized, if in their opinion such action shall be to the best interests of the District of Columbia, to hereafter conduct any or all of the operations involved in the collection and disposal of city refuse of every kind as municipal functions, and for that purpose to purchase or lease the necessary plants, buildings, and land, to purchase or hire horses and horse-drawn vehicles, passenger-carrying and other motor-propelled vehicles, equipment, and machinery, and to employ expert and other personal services, and labor, and to pay traveling, maintenance, incidental, and contingent expenses: Provided, That products arising from such operations conducted as authorized herein may be sold and the proceeds arising therefrom shall be repaid to the then current appropriation for the collection and disposal of city refuse: Provided further, That any or all operations herein authorized to be conducted as municipal functions may be put into effect as such upon the expiration of any of the existing contracts for the collection and disposal of city refuse or upon the failure of any of the present contractors to properly perform the work covered by their contracts: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any employee of the District of Columbia engaged in the removal of garbage, ashes, miscellaneous refuse, dead animals, or night soil, or for any employee of a contractor doing such work for the District of Columbia, to accept any gift, except from his employer, in money or any other thing of value for any service performed in connection with the removal of city refuse as hereinbefore described; and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation, except such employer, to pay or offer to pay, any money or to make any gift to any such employee for such service; that any person violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum of not less than $5 nor more than $40 for each such offense."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Was not this same amendment inserted in the District bill by the Senate?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How many bills does the gentleman want to put it in?

Mr. SISSON. Well, if the District bill does not pass, this item ought to be taken care of at this session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Well, there are a great many items that ought to be taken care of at this session of Congress. Does not the gentleman think the District bill will be passed? If not, why?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that the District bill has a chance to pass; but this matter is the same matter that was in the deficiency bill before, and a point of order was made at that time on the item. This item is one which is agreeable to the Senate as well as the House conferees. The difference is that under the bill——

Mr. MANN. I know what the item is. The gentleman need not explain. I made a point of order on it in the House before; but what I wanted to get at is, What is the necessity of inserting in this bill an item that is now in the District bill that was reported? The gentleman from Mississippi proposes to defeat the District bill unless the House has its way about changing the law about the half-and-half plan.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman ask that as a question?

Mr. MANN. No; I made it as a statement. It is currently reported to that effect; and I take it, from the offering of the amendment by the gentleman from Mississippi, that he admits that if he can not have his way about changing the law on the appropriation bill he proposes to defeat the whole appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman, I understand, if he will permit me, raised the point of order on this when it was in the District bill.

Mr. MANN. I did.

Mr. DAVIS. And the only alternative left is to put it in the deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not correct about that statement, and no one knows it better than he, because it is in the District bill now as a Senate amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. But the bill has not come out on the floor. It is liable to be stricken out when it gets on the floor. It is only in the subcommittee.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that. The House has disagreed to it frequently and sent the bill to conference. The bill is in conference, and the House has no chance to express any opinion on that separate item separately.

I will not make the point of order on this. I made the point of order when it was before the House before, and afterwards said I was willing to withdraw the point of order after a statement was made to me by the gentleman from Minnesota and other gentlemen. But I must say it is an unfortunate circumstance as to part of this appropriation bill that it is a certainty, apparently, that we are going to have an early extra session—I will not say an early extra session, but an extra session—and every gentleman who is on one of the conference committees thinks that he can stand out, both here and in the Senate, and not yield, but insist upon having his own way, because he says, "Ah, well, this bill can be enacted into law before the 1st day of July by the next Congress."

That is not the case. If the majority side of this House now and the majority side of the Senate now refuse to enact these appropriation bills, and then the President declines to call an extra session of Congress until he returns from Europe in May or June, it will be an impossibility to pass the appropriation bills before the 1st of July, and the responsibility for the failure will be upon the Democrats. If we should endeavor to pass these appropriation bills in the next House under the spur and whip, every Democrat would have the hydrophobia and would froth at the mouth and insist that they ought to have plenty of time for discussion and consideration.

Why do you not get busy and pass the bills that can be passed? The District bill is one. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted would it not make a misdemeanor on the part of any of the employees of the contractor to receive a small Christmas present from some person in the line of his work?

Mr. SISSON. I think if it was given for the purpose of having had some special service performed in removing ashes it would be a violation of this provision.

Mr. VARE. I do not refer to a special service. I refer to the ordinary conduct of business.

Mr. SISSON. If it were not given to the employee by virtue of the fact that he occupied this particular place and rendered you some particular service with reference to the ashes, I do not think it would.

Mr. VARE. Is it not true that the Commissioners of the District have the right to make any kind of reasonable regulations in order that proper order and discipline can be enforced?

Mr. SISSON. I think this would have to be either by direct regulation or controlled by regulation.

Mr. VARE. Is it not true that the commissioners have the right to prepare their specifications and arrange——

Mr. SISSON. I think they would have the right to control by regulations their employees, but I doubt if they would have the right to regulate the employees of the contractor.

Mr. VARE. I think the present District Commissioners have the right to pass upon their qualifications.

Mr. SISSON. No; not if he complies with his contract. I will say to the gentleman frankly that this amendment that he speaks of was put in by the Senate. It was not in the provision as it came from our committee here.

Mr. VARE. Does not the gentleman think that it is rather a small work for the American Congress to pass a law making it a misdemeanor for some minor employee to receive a Christmas present? Does not the gentleman think that is a rather small business for the American Congress to engage in?

Mr. SISSON. The conferees agreed to it because we were making an effort to agree with the Senate as nearly as possible, and they insisted on this, and it is a matter of minor importance, and we thought we ought not to let the measure fail, but ought to make some concession to the other body, although it is contended sometimes that we ought to make all concessions to them.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that it is within the province of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia so to arrange their specifications in order that the citizens of the District of Columbia shall receive efficient service, and that they have a perfect right to make any regulations they care to which would be an improvement to the service. They have the right to inspect the equipment furnished by the contractor and they have a right to pass upon the efficiency of the employees, and it seems to me that the American Congress is devoting time which might be used to much greater advantage when they want to make a criminal out of a hard-working man if he receives a minor Christmas present while coming in contact with the housekeepers of the city during the year.

Mr. SISSON. This provision was put in the bill in the present form by the Senate, and they added a provision which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred to in his remarks. I could see no objection to this, because the ashes of everybody ought to be removed just alike. Those people who happen to be fortunate in having plenty of money could very easily afford to give an extraordinary tip at the end of each month or an extraordinary Christmas present, whereas the poorer people of the city might not be able to do it. I care very little about it, but the Senate put it on and we allowed it to stay.

Mr. VARE. But the contractor is already paid for efficient service. If the commissioners do not force the contractor to do his work, that ought to be a matter for the commissioners, for I assume they are well paid for the service rendered.

Mr. SISSON. That may be true.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the District bill the House has not only once, but many times, not only by majorities but by overwhelming majorities, decided against the half-and-half principle. We have insisted that the Senate should take this matter up and discuss it.

We have insisted that the Senate take this matter up and discuss it. They have declined to do it. The House twice by a two-thirds vote has declared against the half-and-half principle. Your conferees feel that the House ought to receive more consideration at the hands of the Senate. When this bill passed there were not enough Members in opposition to get a roll call on the proposition. Not only that, this provision which we put in the bill does not change the rate of taxation nor does it change the valuation of property. It simply provides that the amount of money collected in the District of Columbia as taxes shall first be used to pay the District expenses and that the balance shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury. That action of the House is most liberal toward the District; because I have a report from some 40 different cities, and, without going into details, I state to you that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia pay, according to these reports, less than half what taxpayers in other cities have to pay. But we are not trying to change that. We simply want to provide that the money collected out of the District of Columbia shall first be applied to the payment of District expenses, and then whatever may be appropriated over and above that shall be paid by Congress. That is the simple provision. Now, we have marched up the hill and marched down again, and your conferees have labored with the Senate conferees on this matter, but the Senate conferees have up to date declined to discuss it. It is not in the mouth of the Senate to complain of the House for putting a legislative provision on a bill, which is in order under the rules of the House, when the Senate is the greatest offender in this matter. I will not stop to enumerate the many cases, but they are well known to Members. Your conferees will labor with the conferees of the Senate in an effort to get together on the bill; but the Senate have three times, in spite of the report of a commission, declined to adopt the report of that commission. This commission was composed of three Members from the House and three from the Senate. Every member of the House commission had voted in favor of the half-and-half, and every member of the Senate commission had prior to that time voted in favor of the half-and-half. Yet, after a summer's investigation, that commission unanimously reported to this House and to the Senate that the arbitrary half-and-half provision was wrong; that it was unjust and unfair to the Federal Treasury.

Notwithstanding the commission made that report, the Senate declined to take any action to remove what their commission appointed by them said was an unjust arrangement. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] was on that commission. When we brought in the bill last year that provision was not in it, but the gentleman offered it and it passed the House by an overwhelming majority. Your conferees, acting upon the repeated vote of this House, feel that the Senate ought at least to discuss this matter and give to the House that consideration which I am sure every Member of this House would want to give to every provision that might be put upon a bill by the Senate. That is the attitude of the House conferees.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For additional employees in the Department of State, $25,000: Provided, That not more than six persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is it proposed by the authorization carried in the proviso to grant them authority to employ six additional persons at more than $1,800 under the authority that they now possess under the legislative bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. It is my understanding that this simply continues the permission to employ six people at salaries in excess of $1,800. It was not meant to give them six additional people.

Mr. STAFFORD. They have authority under existing law to employ them out of their lump-sum fund?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. This is simply to permit them to continue that. I will say to the gentleman that I had the same thought that the gentleman has, but I took it up and examined the question, and my opinion is that this, being a deficiency for the other fund, simply permits six people, as the other fund did, and not more than that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engravers' and printers' materials and other materials except distinctive paper, miscellaneous expenses, including paper for internal-revenue stamps, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of necessary motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, when in writing ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury, $400,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I wish to inquire what is the necessity in this deficiency bill of authorizing the purchase of automobiles for the use of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, as carried in this item at the top of page 17?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is simply the exact language in which the original appropriation was made. It is not carried with the idea of buying any horse-drawn or motor-propelled vehicles. They had $1,335,000 as their annual appropriation, and this is simply an appropriation to supply a deficiency due to the increased cost in materials and other supplies in connection with the work of the bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the number of passenger autos that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has for its use?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recall. I may be able to find it for the gentleman, but we had no testimony about that when we were considering this bill, because, as I say, the sole purpose of this $400,000 is to give them money to supply deficiencies in the cost of these materials.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not see much need for authorizing the purchase of passenger-carrying automobiles.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is not the slightest need for it; but it was not for that purpose. It was simply in the same language as the original appropriation. The clerk of the committee calls my attention to the fact that they have one horse-drawn rockaway carriage that is used by the director, assistant director, and other officials, and to convey to their homes employees who are injured or who become ill while at work. They have one electric wagonette.

Mr. STAFFORD. Both of these conveyances are old and ancient. I think they should get a modern conveyance. Perhaps this might be used to get an up-to-date Dodge car from the War Department that are now being sold, as I understand, for $250, and they are worth $1,000. So I will not interpose further objection to their purchasing automobiles.

Mr. SHERLEY. This is not to purchase an automobile; it is to use for materials in connection with their work.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope sometime they will get a modern conveyance and have a little speed. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of marine hospitals, including subsistence, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under special heads, $200,000: Provided, That there may be admitted into said hospitals for study persons with infectious or other diseases affecting the public health, and not to exceed 10 cases in any one hospital at one time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. This may be the identical language carried in the act authorizing the expenditure. What is the policy of the Public Health Service in inviting into the hospitals persons who are afflicted with infectious or other diseases affecting the public health generally?

Mr. SHERLEY. Some years ago the Public Health Service desired to make a study of a special character of diseases about which the profession did not have as much information as they desired, and they wanted to start the practice of taking these people into the hospitals. They had no authority at law for doing it, and this proviso was put on to enable them to do it. The Committee on Appropriations, in order that the matter might be under control and not left simply to the notion of some one in charge of the particular hospital, put on a limitation of this kind so as to permit a legitimate investigation to go forward without letting it lead to abuse.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not a new proposal to carry out the ambitious policy of the Bureau of Public Health?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it has been running three or four years, at least.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

RIVER AND HARBOR WORK.

For payment of claims adjusted and settled under section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved June 25, 1910, and certified to Congress in House Documents Nos. 1756 and 1819 of the present session, $774.31.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to make a statement in reference to the river and harbor item for the RECORD. The Secretary of Commerce is required by law to send to the Speaker of the House annually a statement of the accidents caused by barges in tow through the open sea.

He has just forwarded his statement for the fiscal year 1918. It shows that a number of accidents have occurred during the year between Boston and Norfolk, all on the outside. The practice of having barges in tow is a dangerous one to navigators and is more or less fraught with loss to the shippers. It involves the general problem of transportation, and barges that go into the open sea generally carry fuel from southern points to New England. So that in time of storm, or when vessels come in contact with barges in tow, there is necessarily much delay and heavy loss.

The river and harbor bill just agreed to carries provision for certain inside passages along the Atlantic coast. I am hoping that an improvement of some of these inside waterways may lead to a lessening of the risk of loss that is incurred by the outside route. It is almost absurd in these modern times, when nature has provided an inside passage, that vessels not intended to be sent into the open sea, are obliged to do so in order that the people may obtain fuel. That the practice has been unfortunate, and that there should be a remedy, is apparent from this record of loss in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. During the year no less than 35 accidents have occurred. We might call them disasters. Some involve a loss of life on the outside of the Atlantic coast between Norfolk and Boston. The list of barges involved is in hand, and the causes leading to the accidents or disasters are stated. Most of them arise from storms, some from darkness, and some from bad navigation.

The causes include springing a leak, foundering, breaking adrift, dragging anchor, stranding, colliding with other vessels, foundering in the gale, seams opened by the ice, and losing rudder in heavy weather. All of these things are incident to the sending of these fragile vessels into the open sea. The money loss on barges alone is upward of $1,000,000.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the list of accidents along the Atlantic coast for the last fiscal year between the points I have mentioned, as forwarded by the Secretary of Commerce to the Speaker of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the chairman of the committee whether this is new legislation?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is legislation in so far as it relates to the care of these buildings for the next fiscal year, this being a deficiency bill for this year; but it is to take care of a lot of buildings that are here in the city of Washington, provision for which has not been made for the next fiscal year. Ordinarily a good deal of this would have been taken care of in the legislative appropriation bill, but in some way or other the matter was overlooked in that bill.

Mr. LONDON. These are employees ordinarily employed, and I suppose provision would have been made for them.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are employees in this sense, that these departments had their employees under funds that had been voted for them. Those departments are going out of existence. They are departments that came up in connection with the prosecution of the war, and now as they disappear the buildings are to be occupied by other establishments, and it seemed wise to make some provision for next year, for their care and upkeep. Col. Ridley went into the matter and studied it at considerable length. He submitted some tables, which gentlemen will find on page 339, and subsequently of the hearings touching the whole matter. He seems to have made a very exhaustive study. I am frank to say to the gentleman that I do not know just the number of carpenters, plumbers, painters, and engineers there ought to be for these buildings. I am equally frank in saying that I have not had the time to go into the details of these positions, but Col. Ridley is an efficient engineer officer. He has made a study and an elaborate report about the matter, and in the absence of better information, if there be any, I have accepted his view as to the needs for these buildings. The amounts do not seem excessive when you consider the area.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are one or two things that I would like to inquire about, and it is possible that the gentleman has explained them, but owing to the unusual quiet on the Democratic side of the House he did not lift his voice so that we could hear all of his explanation. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I will do anything I can within reasonable bounds to have any of the buildings on Potomac Park torn down and thrown away and have the park resume its normal functions of being a park for the benefit of the people. How far this has a tendency to reserve these buildings and force their use by the Government I do not know. I have frequently heard gentlemen say here—and I do not know but that it is the prevalent opinion in the House—that wherever the Government has a building of its own which it can use it has no right to lease a building from a private person. I think that so far as the Government has temporarily stolen the use of the parks to put up temporary buildings, it ought, wherever it can, to use private leased quarters, to use them, and tear down the buildings put in Potomac Park. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I am not nearly so much in opposition to his view as perhaps he thinks I am.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Kentucky and I would come probably about as near to agreeing about the proposition of public parks as any two men in the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think particularly in regard to these temporary buildings that are of frame construction their life ought to be very limited, but right now we are in a transition state in which we can not at once jolt down into the normal activities of the Government, and we can not tell just what space on ground elsewhere ought to be used. In the meantime there has been considerable congestion in respect to property in the city of Washington, with very high rents. For the present it seemed wise to continue the use of these buildings until we had reached a point where the departments shrink, as I hope they are going to shrink, to something like former conditions; but I will say to the gentleman that touching these particular ones, nearly all of them are on leased ground. In the hearings, on page 344, there is a list of the buildings. The Council of National Defense, Food Administration Buildings 1 and 2, Fuel Administration Buildings 1 and 2, Fuel Administration Building 3, War Trade Building, the Quartermaster Pettus Building, the Quartermaster Butt Building, and the Corcoran Courts Building are all on rented ground, and they constitute the majority portion of these buildings.

Mr. MANN. I have not been through any of the buildings either on the Mall or in Potomac Park. The fact is that I have not been inside any of them, either while under construction or since they were constructed, while they were occupied or since they have been unoccupied. I am told by gentlemen who have been to a number of these buildings that a large share of the space is now unoccupied, wholly unoccupied. It does seem to me, if that is the case, and a portion of two buildings is occupied and a large portion of two buildings is unoccupied, it is desirable to consolidate the parts that are occupied and tear down the building that is not occupied and for which there is no need.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true; if there is no need—but I am inclined to think that in order to get rid of very expensive leased property that is not particularly satisfactory, for some part of the next fiscal year most of these will have to be pretty fully occupied.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I do not speak with knowledge about that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am frank to say to the gentleman that I know of nothing more difficult than to undertake to follow the matter of housing with respect to a lot of these departments. In the first place, the departments quarrel like a lot of children as to where they will be housed, the space they ought to occupy; and unless some special authority is created to control the matter Congress is constantly going to be asked to go into a lot of details that it can not know very much about and which take a great deal of time that ought to be done as a matter of administration.

Mr. MANN. Of course, we have covered that now in the legislative appropriation bill by the provision for a commission.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I am not familiar with these buildings. It struck me, among other things, that 200 policemen is quite a bunch of men to take care of the few buildings that are occupied a few hours in the daytime and possibly occasionally at night.

The people of Washington want more policemen in the city. They have to have policemen on duty, quite a number of them, all the time. If we provided policemen in the city of Washington in proportion to the police we provide for these buildings I do not know how many thousands or tens of thousands there would be.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the whole matter was on the basis of the cost of guarding per square foot, and those buildings, some of them, rather all of them, probably, are frame buildings, where the fire risk is greater than normal.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well——

Mr. SHERLEY. I am perfectly frank in saying to the gentleman I am neither prepared to condemn nor to support the details of this matter. I just could not go into the question within the time at my disposal, and I took Col. Ridley's statement. He has worked out the proposition in a good deal of detail. Now, it is possible that he may be overstocked with policemen. There are nine buildings here, and that looks to a day and night force——

Mr. MANN. They do not need very many men on duty at night, and I do not know but they need fewer on duty in the daytime. A lot of these Government buildings have so many men in them that you fall over them when you go in and stumble against them when you come out. It is absolutely ridiculous, it would seem to me, without very much knowledge——

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. MANN (continuing). To propose a police force of 200 men to take care of, did the gentleman say 11 buildings?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman desires and wants to make the point of order, I will be glad to try to take the matter up and let the Senate put it in or put it on in conference.

Mr. MANN. I do not propose to make the point of order. I thought in the first place that these buildings might be in the Mall, and I might accomplish the destruction of some of them if I made the point of order, and if I thought I could destroy all of them I would. I do not propose to make a point of order because it contains a lot of superfluous policemen, but there is no sense in it. We have a police force in Washington that takes just as good care of these buildings as it does of the house the gentleman from Kentucky lives in or the apartment where I put up, or am put up, and if the Highlands Apartment had a dozen or fifteen policemen to watch it it would not be any more in proportion than these buildings will be, and they do not need as many as the Highlands do. Some officer in charge gets perfectly crazy about the number of men he wants under him in the police force, not to arrest anybody, but just to draw pay and look on. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $5,109,433: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the acquisition of radio stations in whole or in part used for the transmission or reception of commercial messages.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When this item was up in the consideration of the former deficiency bill it was stricken out by a vote of the House in the hope that the Navy Department might give some information concerning it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am told, though not by him, shortly thereafter inserted in the RECORD under leave a letter from the Secretary of the Navy replying to my speech on the floor of the House. It is usual where such things are done for the Member inserting such a letter to call it to the attention of the gentleman whom the letter endeavors to criticize, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] inadvertently did not give me any notice he was inserting such a matter in the RECORD, and in the midst of the work of this session I did not happen to pick up the letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because I rarely attempt to read the fine print of the RECORD. The gentleman the other day told me there was such a letter in the RECORD, though I have not yet read it. He told me that the Secretary said in his letter that my statement on the floor that he had asked authority from Congress to purchase the wireless outfits, or whatever they are called, was not correct; that he had never made such a request of Congress. It seems to me rather remarkably odd for the Secretary of the Navy with considerable naïveté to send a letter to Congress admitting that he has expended some millions of dollars for which he had never asked any authority. It is rather peculiar that any gentleman occupying an office so high and exalted a place as a Cabinet officer, permitted to be gazed at and to gaze upon the President of the United States, to admit that he holds Congress in such contempt that he will not even ask for money to put the Government in a new line of business at the expense of millions of dollars.

But I am told the Secretary of the Navy said he did not need to ask Congress for the authority because the Solicitor of the Navy informed him that he already had the authority. I read on the previous occasion the item of appropriation out of which this money had been expended, which did not in a single syllable intimate any authority to purchase these wireless lines, but the Secretary of the Navy says, in effect, "I appointed a man Solicitor of the Navy who told me I had the authority." I suppose the Secretary of the Navy told his appointee, "You tell me that I have the authority or I will find some other solicitor who will." The solicitor of so many of the departments is attached to the Attorney General's office, and it ought to be the case in all of the departments—appointed by the Attorney General, under control of the Attorney General, and assigned to a department. I believe the Solicitor of the Navy is attached to the Navy Department. I do not think he is appointed by the President or confirmed by the Senate. I may be in error. I have only examined the appropriation bill to find out how he is appropriated for. He is appropriated for as an employee of the Navy Department. I never heard of him before.

But it is easy for the Secretary of the Navy, if he wants to expend money improperly and illegally, to direct that employee named by him to tell him he has the authority to do it out of an appropriation which does not hint at the expenditure of money. I hope it will be investigated. And if the next House of Representatives has any nerve left—and I am not sure it will have; we have got a lot of spineless men in it and coming in it—they will investigate this transaction and hold somebody responsible for the wanton misapplication of millions of dollars. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF.

For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, books and illustrative apparatus, and general repairs and improvements, $3,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 27, line 20, after the figures "$3,000," insert as a new paragraph:

"The sum of $40,000,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the disposition of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply,' approved October 5, 1918, shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state just what information he has as to the balance that he has proposed to cover in? I am in harmony with the purpose of covering in these unnecessary and unused funds, but I have tried as far as I could to ascertain the actual situation as to balances before undertaking to cover in any particular amount.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I may say that this balance is from the appropriation of $50,000,000 made in the act referred to, which is the mining and minerals bill passed last October. And by the validation-of-contracts bill, the conference report on which was agreed to to-day, the sum of $8,500,000 was made available for the settlement of these mining, mineral, and ore claims. And there would be further, from the appropriation of $50,000,000 the sum of $1,500,000 left, which I think would be ample to cover all the activities of the Interior Department under that act in administration and investigation. I am advised by the gentlemen who have been intimately related to that association that the Secretary of the Interior shortly after the signing of the armistice discontinued operations under the authority granted by that act, and that they were so advised by him at a conference which they held in connection with this phase of the validation-of-contracts act.

And I think I may state that it is their view that the sum of $1,500,000 would be sufficient to cover the activities outside of that necessary for the settlement of these claims. And so it would make this situation: Fifty million dollars was available by the act of October 5, 1918; $8,500,000 is available for the settlement of these mining and mineral claims, and $1,500,000 is available for other activities which may have been conducted or begun and which are not included in the settlement of claims, leaving a balance of $40,000,000, which is covered into the Treasury by this amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to agree with the gentleman that the million and a half over and beyond what is the maximum fixed for the settlement of any of these claims ought to be sufficient to take care of their needs. I only want to say now that in taking back this sum I think it ought not to be construed as an indication to the department that we expect them to spend the $1,500,000 or the $8,500,000 on the claim, but, as I stated before, the covering back of money is simply an evidence that that certainly is not needed, but not an evidence that the Congress thinks the balance needs to be expended in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, McNeil Island (Wash.) Penitentiary, $22,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, we have just passed a deficiency item in regard to McNeil Island Penitentiary. I want to say it and make it a matter of record that I am much surprised to note that in the sundry civil appropriation bill the warden of that penitentiary is to receive for another year a salary of only $2,000 a year. I have been hoping that among the increases given to employees, and particularly penitentiary employees, this warden would be increased.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that Congress has shown a great liberality in increasing the salary of the permanent physician at this island from $1,200 to $1,600. That is an instance of great liberality and a great concession. They expect to employ probably one of the most expert physicians in the country to live on McNeils Island at $1,600 a year. We have been paying him heretofore $1,200.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If they pay that salary to a physician in a regular penitentiary, it is more than the Government pays to some physicians on Indian reservations in the far Northwest. But I see we are a little too far away to get in on these increases of salaries for fully competent men long in Government service.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of limited indemnity for the injury or loss of pieces of domestic registered matter, insured, and collect-on-delivery mail, $890,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do so in order to ask if the gentleman in charge of the bill can state whether there is any deficiency in the payment for indemnity for injury and loss on registered mail which has been sent to the soldiers abroad?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is quite a deficiency in regard to payment for insured mail, and the item carried here is what is estimated will be necessary to take care of that situation. As I stated in general debate, there has been an increase of something like 32 or 33 per cent in volume and about that increase in the expense due to loss of mail.

The gentleman will find in the hearings the testimony giving some reasons for it. Part of it was due to the fact that for a while people were employed who were less competent than the old employees, due to the large expansion of this work and the fact that a great many people had gone into the Army and Navy. The increase of loss bears relationship very largely to the increased volume of business. There was a considerable loss of mail at some of the cantonments, due to various causes, among others the fact that there were inexperienced clerks in many instances dealing with the mail.

Mr. WALSH. But this item is restricted to domestic mail. Would it include mail that was sent from this country to the soldiers in France?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not sure that we insure that mail, but I think there is a separate fund for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. But this also applies to registered matter?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And $10,000 is appropriated——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, there is a separate item of appropriation for registered foreign mail. There are different regulations pertaining to the registration of foreign mail. That is controlled by the Universal Postal Union, and the rates and amounts are different——

Mr. WALSH. Ten thousand dollars is appropriated for that purpose——

Mr. STAFFORD. As compared with the registration and insurance of domestic mail.

Mr. RANDALL. The mail sent to our forces in Europe is sent as domestic mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question about that. The gentleman was inquiring as to the foreign mail. There is a different appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman say that the mail sent to soldiers abroad is sent as domestic mail?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not answer that definitely.

Mr. WALSH. Ten thousand dollars will not cover that.

Mr. SHERLEY. This is all they asked, and the committee does not usually anticipate requests.

Mr. WALSH. It may be that the department might have construed it as an admission of serious inefficiency if they had at this time asked for an amount that would be sufficient to take care of the loss of mail that has been sent abroad to soldiers. This sum, $890,000, for payment of limited indemnities for the injury or loss of pieces of domestic registered matter, insured and collect-on-delivery mail, I do not believe will begin to pay those losses.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. It is generally known that the War Department has declined to sanction the sending of any parcel-post packages to our soldier boys abroad unless they first had the approval of a commanding officer above the rank of captain. Of late there has not been much parcel-post mail sent to our soldier boys because of that restrictive order.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. The War Department has not prevented the sending of registered letters abroad, has it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; not registered letters, but the sending of anything by parcel post.

Mr. WALSH. I am talking about registered mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman a few minutes ago talked about insured packages.

Mr. WALSH. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not say anything about insured packages. I said there had been a vast quantity of registered mail sent abroad and lost.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to refer to the insurance feature of mail sent from this country to our soldier boys abroad. I was calling attention to the fact that that was extremely limited by reason of the order of the War Department, which has been in force for nearly a year past.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $200,000 of the appropriation for expenses of the Fourteenth Census, contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, shall be made available from and after the passage of this act for preliminary expenses in preparation for the Fourteenth Decennial Census, including alteration and repairs to buildings, the strengthening of floors, the purchase and installation of freight elevators, the construction of fireproof vaults, the rental or construction of a garage in the District of Columbia, and printing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Are we to understand, from the incorporation of this provisional appropriation, that the census bill which has been in conference for nearly a month or more is going to fail, and that it is necessary to have an appropriation of $200,000 to carry on this work before the beginning of the next fiscal year?

Mr. EAGAN. The purpose of this appropriation is to enable the Census Bureau to begin preparations for the taking of the Fourteenth Census. The money appropriated under the other bill would not be available anyhow until the beginning of the fiscal year, and this is to be made available in the meantime.

Mr. STAFFORD. This appropriation has direct reference to putting into condition for the use of the Census Bureau one of the temporary buildings in Henry Park.

Mr. EAGAN. Yes; and certain other expenditures necessary for the bureau in preparing for the next census.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is intended to shore up that building and construct some firmer foundations for the machines that it will be necessary to use in the taking of the next census?

Mr. EAGAN. The Building at Missouri Avenue and Four-and-a-half Street SW., which is to house the temporary force of the Census Bureau, will need some small alterations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire, because it has been called to the attention of the legislative subcommittee, as to the reason for the authorization of the construction of a garage? The legislative committee denied the Director of the Census authority to purchase an automobile. I was in sympathy with the idea that he should be granted that privilege. Here you provide not only for the rental of a garage but for the construction of a garage. Certainly I should not like to see a temporary garage erected in Henry Park. While I am not entirely in accord with the position taken by the distinguished leader of the minority as to the abandonment of these temporary buildings while they are serviceable for Government purposes, nevertheless I am not in favor of authorizing any Government official to erect a garage on the Mall, as this would give him authority to do.

Mr. EAGAN. I do not think there is any intention to erect a garage if a garage can be rented in the neighborhood. This provides for rental or construction.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language directly provides for the erection of a garage.

Mr. EAGAN. Rental or construction of a garage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; construction. I am directing attention to the authorization for the construction of a garage. We have not heretofore authorized any Cabinet officer or the like to construct a garage. This is merely for the use of the Director of the Census. All he wants is authorization to purchase a Ford or other inexpensive car, with which I am in sympathy. But now he comes and asks for authority to construct a garage. The automobile is to enable him to go expeditiously between his headquarters in the Department of Commerce and the temporary building on the Mall.

Mr. EAGAN. As I recall the hearings, it is for the purpose of providing for two motor trucks. If they are unable to rent a garage in the immediate neighborhood, it makes other provision. One plan suggested was the utilization of a portion of the building itself for the trucks. The suggestion, as I recall it, was made that they might be able to tear out a small part of the building, and put in doors, and run the trucks in and store them there at night. I do not know whether the construction of the building is such that that could be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hardly think the Mall should be used for the storage of automobile trucks and have the temporary buildings changed so that they can be utilized for that purpose. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the words on line 2, page 34, "or construction," not being authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. EAGAN. No; I think it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for the purchase or construction of a wooden power lighter for use at the Pribilof Islands, and for equipment thereof, $7,500.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I take it, by the language, that this wooden power lighter has been authorized for the fishery service. Will the gentleman state how much was originally authorized for this craft?

Mr. EAGAN. I think $20,000.

Mr. WALSH. And now they need one-third more than the original appropriation. How far completed is the lighter?

Mr. EAGAN. I understand it has not been started. The lowest bid was twenty-six thousand eight hundred or nine hundred dollars.

Mr. WALSH. What is the lighter to be used for?

Mr. EAGAN. The islands are 40 miles apart, and this lighter is to be used to go between the islands and the mainland. It is to be used for the purpose of loading onto and unloading from the larger vessels that are unable to get in there. The islands are mere rocks rising out of the sea, and a wharf there is not possible.

Mr. WALSH. Are these islands very thickly settled?

Mr. EAGAN. The employees and a few natives.

Mr. WALSH. I was wondering what cargoes the vessels had to unload which required the use of a lighter.

Mr. EAGAN. They send supplies for the natives and employees that are there.

Mr. DYER. And they use it for the transportation of furs. They kill a good many seals there, do they not?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the lighter is used for transportation between the Pribilof Islands and the mainland.

Mr. EAGAN. I read from page 303 of the hearings:

There are no means of transportation now provided between the islands, which are 40 miles apart, and there are no means of communication between the islands and the nearest Alaskan mainland. It is only when our steamer goes up there that there is any communication possible, but at other times of the year it is highly desirable that the islands should be able to communicate with one another.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For amount required during the fiscal year 1919 to meet the increased cost of envelopes in accordance with the adjustment made by the Postmaster General under section 4 of the Post Office appropriation act approved July 2, 1918, $5,496.79.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Congressmen have been advised by numerous telegrams, letters, petitions, and messages that it will be desirable to make a very large appropriation for the continuance of the so-called Employment Service in the Department of Labor.

Mr. EAGAN. That is the next paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But I want to discuss it at this time. I question whether a more successful propaganda has been carried on for many years than has been inaugurated through attachés of the Department of Labor for the purpose of sustaining an appropriation which will amount to $14,000,000 and which would be capable of keeping in the service of the Government anywhere from 5,000 to 15,000 men if the money was properly distributed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask him a question about that. Are these men who are in charge of the employment offices throughout the country brought in through the civil service?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Can they take active part in politics?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think they can. I have heard that some of them have done so. But what I wanted to speak about is this propaganda.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman knows that a very large part of the activities and energy of the departments of the Government are devoted to building up efforts to make it appear that their particular bureau is a very important one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did not intend to discuss that matter with the gentleman, although the gentleman is right. I understand the tendency is for all departments to utilize the newspapers and their friends everywhere to impress upon Congress the importance of increased appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In regard to that matter the Interior Department can give the other departments cards and spades.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is another propaganda to which I want to call attention. The President has returned from abroad with a desire to impress on the American people the importance of establishing a league of nations, in which the people of the United States are to bear the laboring oar. They have borne it in the matter of finance and the number of men they have given to the accomplishment of a world democracy, so far as that has been brought about. But it is rather a new thing to undertake to win the people in the manner in which it is now proposed to convince the people of the United States, even against their will, perhaps, that the President is right. I have in my hand an interesting pamphlet, that has just come to my desk, as I suppose it has come to the desks of all Members of this Congress. It provides suggestions for league speakers. I do not know why it should come to Congressmen, unless it is intended to give notice of the methods to be employed to influence Congress. It contains what is frankly declared to be "speech material for league of nations addresses." If the departments of the Government have been responsible for giving the league of nations and its advocates an idea that Congress can be influenced in this way, perhaps we can give credit to the departments. I do not know where the idea originated.

It has come to pass, however, that when you want to obtain an appropriation from Congress, you start the fires burning under the Congressmen back home. Maybe this is something of that kind. Here is the interesting pamphlet. It contains 70 pages, labeled "Suggestions for league speakers," and it is issued from some headquarters in New York.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is intended evidently to post young men who may not be thoroughly posted upon the question of the league of nations as to what they should say in support of the President or in support of this foreign proposal of a league of nations.

Mr. LONDON. Is not that issued by the league of which Mr. Taft is the president?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be. Mr. Taft is very active in the movement. I find in the "Foreword" this admonition: "That those who exercise the power of spoken word in favor of the league of nations are among the great contributors to the final success of the cause," and that "only by arousing public opinion can a ratification by the Senate of the treaties creating a league of nation be made certain."

In other words, this pamphlet proposed to start the fires burning under the people of the United States to compel the Senate to ratify the league of nations or any treaty of peace that may be made with respect thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have agreed, in order to accommodate the other side, to move that the committee rise at half past 5 o'clock, and I hope the gentleman will permit the reading of a couple of paragraphs more within the remaining time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. SHERLEY. I should very much like to read to a given point, and then I am going to move that the committee rise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to go on with this to show how propagandists——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will have indefinite opportunities to do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This idea comes from very respectable sources—eminently respectable.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, surely, that is true. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the remainder of the fiscal year 1919, to maintin the organization established under appropriations contained in the suadry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1918, for the furnishing of information and the rendering of assistance to wage earners throughout the United States during the present emergency, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rental, and maintenance of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, heat and light, telegraph and telephone service, supplies and equipment, and printing and binding, $1,800,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Recurring to the matter of the propaganda which the Department of Labor is accused of encouraging for the purpose of obtaining large appropriations from Congress and to the eminent respectability of the gentlemen who are proposing to influence the Senate and the House by speeches and "speech material" in the form of "suggestions to league speakers," I desire to say that this pamphlet of 70 pages, gotten out under these auspices, contains many terse paragraphs from messages and speeches of the President of the United States, some of them pertaining to his 14 points, some of them quoting excerpts from his speeches and writings with regard to the desirability of having peace on earth and to the avoidance of wars in the future, and to establishing leagues that would carry out his high ideals. But I find that about half of the pamphlet is made up of opinions in favor of the league of peace under the heading "Public opinion overseas," and that much stress is laid upon expressions by statesmen and national leaders from the other side of the water who favor the United States coming into the league of nations. The burden of the song of this pamphlet seems to be that our friends on the other side of the water are very anxious that we should come in; that they are extremely anxious that we shall support our President, who desires us to come into this league of peace. It makes no difference how much it costs the people of the United States nor how many lives may be sacrificed on foreign battle fields, or what burdens may be created in this country to be imposed upon generations to come, these gentlemen on the other side of the water are still very anxious that the voters of the United States shall support President Wilson in his desire to have the United States bear a part, if not the major part, of the burdens of the effort to establish a world democracy.

Among those quoted, and rather extensively quoted, in favor of the people of America voting in favor of this league of peace are David Lloyd George, Prime Minister of Great Britain. He may be quoted as rather earnest in the desire that our constituents should instruct us to encourage the President to go on with his league of peace——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is Prof. George Herron quoted?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Prof. Herron is not quoted in this pamphlet, so far as I have observed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Fortunately.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was quoting eminently respectable men.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, he ran a school of social education, I believe, and is a pioneer internationalist.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Herbert Asquith, former Prime Minister of Great Britain, is quoted. He would be pleased to have our constituents instruct us to vote as the President would have us vote. Arthur James Balfour, the distinguished statesman, who addressed us once from the rostrum there, the British secretary for foreign affairs, is in favor of our constituents instructing us and is perfectly willing that this campaign of education shall go on.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I find that other representatives of His Majesty's Government are quoted. Sir Cecil Spring Rice is quoted in a letter.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Viscount Gray, of Fallodon, a former British secretary for foreign affairs, also is quoted as indicating that we should go into a league of nations. Arthur Henderson, former member of the British War Council; also Lord Shaw. They are quoted in support of the thought that it would be well for these speakers to go forth and encourage the idea of a league of nations that we may participate in the responsibilities of keeping the world at peace. Gen. Smuts is also quoted—Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, who is quite active on the other side in bringing about a league of nations, a league that would probably add to our already heavy burdens—he is very much in favor of our going in.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Who, in fact, wrote the text.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Gen. Smuts is responsible for much that is in the draft of the proposed league of nations, as I understand it. The Right Rev. Charles Gore, Lord Bishop of Oxford, is another who thinks that it would be a good thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There are quite a number of other eminent persons I would like to quote, Mr. Chairman, but they are mostly from overseas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, probably to offer an amendment, but I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the question whether this item of $1,800,000 is to carry this employment service beyond the 1st day of July?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not.

Mr. BLANTON. And any part of it remaining could not, of course, be spent after the 1st day of July?

Mr. SHERLEY. Without further legislation it will be covered back into the Treasury.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the remainder of the fiscal year 1919, to carry on the work of mediation and conciliation in labor disputes, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and in the field, per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, supplies, and equipment, contingent and miscellaneous expenses, and printing and binding, $366,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 16187, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the same privilege.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13462. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13034. An act to validate and confirm certain erroneously allowed entries in the State of Minnesota.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of the bill (S. 2124) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney of the eastern district of New York, which was inadvertently referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, whereas it should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's statement as to the correct reference is not correct. The bill is properly referred, and I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I had a talk with the chairman of this committee, and he is perfectly agreeable and recognizes the fact that it was inadvertently referred. The bill passed the Senate and was referred to the House on the 14th of February. I hope there is no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Did the gentleman talk with the chairman of the committee?

Mr. HASKELL. I talked with the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and he has no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Did he have the committee together?

Mr. HASKELL. I talked with him, and he was apparently willing that the change should be made, and thought it was inadvertently referred to his committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. I still object. I am surprised that the chairman of the committee did not read the rule.

LEGISLATIVE DRAFTSMAN.

The SPEAKER. In the revenue bill lately passed there is an authorization to the Speaker to appoint a legislative draftsman, and the Chair accordingly appoints for that place Mr. Middleton Beaman, at the request of all the Members of the Ways and Means Committee.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Friday, February 28, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 16.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring) respectfully represent this, that—

Whereas Congressman SINNOTT, of the third congressional district of the State of Oregon, has introduced a bill, which is now pending in the Congress of the United States, having for its purpose, among other things, the appropriating of $1,000,000,000 for reclamation and drainage of lands in the western portion of the United States; and

Whereas there is located in Baker County, Oreg., an irrigation project consisting of approximately 63,000 acres of irrigable land lying in a compact body in what is commonly known as Lower Powder River Valley; and

Whereas there is lying adjacent to said Powder River project another irrigation project, commonly called the Sparta irrigation district, consisting of approximately 15,000 acres of irrigable land; and

Whereas all preliminary engineering and investigation work has been done on each of these said projects, and the same have been found to be entirely feasible; and

Whereas the said House bill for the appropriation of $1,000,000,000 for reconstruction work is intended to aid in furnishing employment and homes for returned and returning soldiers and sailors; and

Whereas the said Powder River and Sparta projects will furnish work and homes for said soldiers and sailors forthwith: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Representative Assembly of the State of Oregon favors the passage by Congress of the said House bill, and to that end the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States from the State of Oregon are hereby urged to use their influence in behalf of the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to W. P. Davis, Director General of the United States Reclamation Service, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

Adopted by the house February 21, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 15, 1919.

W. I. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Senate joint resolution 24.

Whereas retirement on annuities has for many years been a vital issue with all organizations of Federal civil-service employees, for the reason that a large number of men and women over 68 years of age have served the United States for a lifetime at such comparatively low wages that it has been impossible for them to accumulate a sum of money sufficient to enable them to voluntarily retire; and

Whereas these men and women know that either demotion or dismissal awaits them if a retirement bill is not passed by the Congress, as the efficiency of employees rapidly declines after the age of 68 years; and

Whereas the United States Civil Service Commission in its last annual report strongly recommended a system of retirement, as follows:

"It is too costly to continue the aged and infirm in positions requiring alertness and vigor, and a retirement system is possible which would be alike in the interest of the Government and the worker.

"While inefficiency is a just cause for removal, appointing officers naturally hesitate to dismiss old employees who have become incapacitated after rendering long and efficient service, and a virtual pension system thus exists.

"A retirement system would give stability to the service, create an inducement for capable men to continue in it, contribute to improve administrative methods, and make possible a standardization of salaries and other needed reforms"; and

Whereas there is now before the Congress a bill known as the McKellar-Keating bill, which has for its object the retirement on annuities of all superannuated and disabled civil-service employees of the United States, at a cost to be borne equally by the Government and the employees; and

Whereas the McKellar-Keating bill, which is known in the Senate as S. 4637 and in the House of Representatives as H. R. 12352, has received the unanimous indorsement of all organizations of Federal civil employees as being the most comprehensive and satisfactory retirement bill that has been submitted to the Congress for its consideration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and the house of representatives jointly concurring, That the Legislature of the State of Oregon declares itself to be in full sympathy and accord with the McKellar-Keating bill, known in the Senate as S. 4637 and in the House of Representatives as H. R. 12352; and be it further

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use all honorable means to secure the passage of said act; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the senate be, and he hereby is, directed to forward copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of Oregon's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the house February 21, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 15, 1919.

W. I. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. COLT. I present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1919.

Resolution by the general assembly urging upon Congress the passage of legislation granting additional pay to soldiers and sailors.

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill which will permit the payment of six months' additional pay to all soldiers and sailors who have participated in the war with Germany; and

Whereas the payment of an additional sum to all soldiers and sailors will be of great benefit to these men during the period of unemployment which, in many cases, may occur during the transition from military to civil life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island urges upon Congress the passage of legislation which will permit additional payments to all soldiers and sailors who have served in the war with Germany; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of War and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Rhode Island.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved February 27, 1919.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 230) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

"Article —.

"SECTION 1. That the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"SEC. 2. The several States shall have the authority to enforce this article by necessary legislation, but if any State shall enforce or enact any law in conflict therewith, then Congress shall not be excluded from enacting appropriate legislation to enforce it."

FIFTH LIBERTY BOND BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to combat the influenza in Alaska and to afford relief to indigent natives thereof, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOHN CLOPHINE.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying the bill S. 3859, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, granting an increase of pension to John Clophine, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SHIPMENT OF DAMAGED WHEAT TO BELGIUM.

Mr. CALDER. I submit a Senate resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 480) was read, as follows:

Whereas in sworn testimony, taken before Chief City Magistrate McAdoo in New York County, State of New York, in a John Doe inquiry on February 13, 1919, it was stated as facts:

First, that a large quantity of moldy, musty, and immature American wheat was shipped from the United States to Belgium in 1917 for the purpose of Belgian relief, and that this wheat was milled into flour and distributed among the Belgian sufferers, causing the death of more than a thousand such persons;

Second, that one George W. Moench, of Logan, Utah, admitted that he "sold a large quantity of rotten wheat, some 240,000 bushels, at a pretty good price to the buyers, who shipped to the Belgian Relief," and that he "sold 17,000 bushels of that wheat, getting a good price for it, although it was not fit for poultry food";

Third, that certain St. Louis mills had ground a quantity of rotten wheat and sent the flour to Belgium direct, which was distributed among the Belgian sufferers with disastrous results; and

Whereas these sworn statements and charges have been printed repeatedly in the public press and have not been officially denied; and

Whereas if the statements and charges above made are true, they constitute a reflection on the United States Government and make it appear possible that wholesale quantities of food unfit for human consumption was dumped into Belgium and there given to sufferers, who had no choice but to eat or perish: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the said charges to ascertain whether unwholesome food was shipped to Belgium, and, if so, by whom and the profits made by each and every shipper of moldy wheat or flour made from moldy wheat, and to investigate any other charges and allegations made concerning the Commission for Relief in Belgium, and to make a report of the result of such investigation to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, is the resolution before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a request for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to be heard upon it.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me the resolution ought to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to speak to it, I gave notice that I would address the Senate this morning. In my absence from the Senate an agreement was made in regard to the calendar, of which I wholly approve; but I ask the indulgence of the Senate, before the morning hour concludes, as the resolution is now before us, to speak at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not yet before the Senate. Unanimous consent has not been given for its consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is now before the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, there are very few Senators here, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ADMONITION TO THE OCCUPANTS OF THE GALLERIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before the Senator from Massachusetts proceeds, in order to take time by the forelock and avoid trouble, the Chair desires again to call the attention of the occupants of the galleries to the fact that there is a rule of the Senate which prevents either applauding or hissing in the galleries or any other manifestation of approval or disapproval. It was not a rule that appealed to the Chair, but it is one which the Senate forced upon the Chair and compels the Chair to see that it is observed.

There has been a great deal of trouble in the discussion of the questions about which the Senator from Massachusetts is going to proceed, and the occupants of the galleries have not obeyed the rule of the Senate. If kept up it will lead to both cheering and hissing and disorder in the galleries. There is only one way to enforce the rule that the Chair knows of, and that is if the occupants of the galleries will not obey the rule of the Senate and will not keep quiet to clear the galleries.

The Chair does not like to make this statement, because occasionally, as the Chair thinks, nothing is less disorderly than to be cheered, but the Senate thinks otherwise. So the occupants of the galleries will be kind enough to observe the rule, with the assurance that if they do not there will be a desperate effort to clear the galleries upon the first manifestation of approval or disapproval.

CONSTITUTION OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, all people, men and women alike, who are capable of connected thought abhor war and desire nothing so much as to make secure the future peace of the world. Everybody hates war. Everyone longs to make it impossible. We ought to lay aside once and for all the unfounded and really evil suggestion that because men may differ as to the best method of assuring the world's peace in the future, anyone is against permanent peace, if it can be obtained, among all the nations of mankind. Because one man goes to the Capitol in Washington by one street and another man by a different street it does not follow that they are not both going to the Capitol. We all earnestly desire to advance toward the preservation of the world's peace, and difference in method makes no distinction in purpose. It is almost needless to say that the question now before us is so momentous that it transcends all party lines. Party considerations and party interests disappear in dealing with such a question as this. I will follow any man and vote for any measure which in my honest opinion will make for the maintenance of the world's peace. I will follow no man and vote for no measures which, however well intended, seem in my best judgment to lead to dissensions rather than to harmony among the nations or to injury, peril, or injustice to my country. No question has ever confronted the United States Senate which equals in importance that which is involved in the league of nations intended to secure the future peace of the world. There should be no undue haste in considering it. My one desire is that not only the Senate, which is charged with responsibility, but that the press and the people of the country should investigate every proposal with the utmost thoroughness and weigh them all carefully before they make up their minds. If there is any proposition or any plan which will not bear, which will not court the most thorough and most public discussion, that fact makes it an object of suspicion at the very outset. Beware of it; be on your guard against it. Demand that those who oppose the plan now offered present arguments and reasons, based on facts and history, and that those who favor it meet objections with something more relative than rhetoric, personal denunciation, and shrill shrieks that virtue is to be preferred to vice and that peace is better than war. Glittering and enticing generalities will not serve. We must have facts, details, and sharp, clear-cut definitions. The American people can not give too much thought to this subject, and that they shall look into it with considerate eyes is all that I desire.

In the first place, the terms of the league—the agreements which we make—must be so plain and so explicit that no man can misunderstand them. We must, so far as it can be done by human ingenuity, have every agreement which we make so stated that it will not give rise to different interpretations and to consequent argument. Misunderstandings as to terms are not a good foundation for a treaty to promote peace. We now have before us the draft of a constitution for a league of nations, prepared by a commission or committee, which is to be submitted to the representatives of the nations. The nations, through their delegates, have not agreed to it. It has not passed beyond the stage of a committee report. It is open to amendment and change in the peace conference. The Senate can take no action upon it, but it lies open before us for criticism and discussion. What is said in the Senate ought to be placed before the peace conference and published in Paris, so that the foreign Governments may be informed as to the various views expressed here.

In this draft prepared for a constitution of a league of nations, which is now before the world, there is hardly a clause about the interpretation of which men do not already differ. As it stands there is serious danger that the very nations which sign the constitution of the league will quarrel about the meaning of the various articles before a twelvemonth has passed. It seems to have been very hastily drafted, and the result is crudeness and looseness of expression, unintentional, I hope. There are certainly many doubtful passages and open questions obvious in the articles which can not be settled by individual inference, but which must be made so clear and so distinct that we may all understand the exact meaning of the instrument to which we are to be asked to set our hands. The language of these articles does not appear to me to have the precision and unmistakable character which a constitution, a treaty, or a law ought to present. The language only too frequently is not the language of laws or statutes. The article concerning mandatories, for example, contains an argument and a statement of existing conditions. Arguments and historical facts have no place in a statute or a treaty. Statutory and legal language must assert and command, not argue and describe. I press this point because there is nothing so vital to the peace of the world as the sanctity of treaties. The suggestion that we can safely sign because we can always violate or abrogate is fatal not only to any league but to peace itself. You can not found world peace upon the cynical "scrap of paper" doctrine so dear to Germany. To whatever instrument the United States sets its hand it must carry out the provisions of that instrument to the last jot and tittle, and observe it absolutely both in letter and in spirit. If this is not done the instrument will become a source of controversy instead of agreement, of dissension instead of harmony. This is all the more essential because it is evident, although not expressly stated, that this league is intended to be indissoluble, for there is no provision for its termination or for the withdrawal of any signatory. We are left to infer that any nation withdrawing from the league exposes itself to penalties and probably to war. Therefore, before we ratify, the terms and the language in which the terms are stated must be as exact and as precise, as free from any possibility of conflicting interpretations, as it is possible to make them.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask if the Senator from Massachusetts remembers that when Napoleon's prime minister called his attention to the treaty affecting the Louisiana Purchase he observed that he was afraid one article of the treaty was a little obscure. Napoleon told him to scrutinize the article again, and, if it was not obscure, to make it so.

Mr. LODGE. The explanation or interpretation of any of these doubtful passages is not sufficient if made by one man, whether that man be the President of the United States, or a Senator, or anyone else. These questions and doubts must be answered and removed by the instrument itself.

It is to be remembered that if there is any dispute about the terms of this constitution there is no court provided that I can find to pass upon differences of opinion as to the terms of the constitution itself. There is no court to fill the function which our Supreme Court fills. There is provision for tribunals to decide questions submitted for arbitration, but there is no authority to decide differing interpretations as to the terms of the instrument itself.

What I have just said indicates the vast importance of the form and the manner in which the agreements which we are to sign shall be stated. I now come to questions of substance, which seem to me to demand the most careful thought of the entire American people, and particularly of those charged with the responsibility of ratification. We abandon entirely by the proposed constitution the policy laid down by Washington in his Farewell Address and the Monroe doctrine. It is worse than idle, it is not honest, to evade or deny this fact, and every fair-minded supporter of this draft plan for a league admits it. I know that some of the ardent advocates of the plan submitted to us regard any suggestion of the importance of the Washington policy as foolish and irrelevant. Perhaps it is. Perhaps the time has come when the policies of Washington should be abandoned; but if we are to cast them aside I think that at least it should be done respectfully and with a sense of gratitude to the great man who formulated them. For nearly a century and a quarter the policies laid down in the Farewell Address have been followed and adhered to by the Government of the United States and by the American people. I doubt if any purely political declaration has ever been observed by any people for so long a time. The principles of the Farewell Address in regard to our foreign relations have been sustained and acted upon by the American people down to the present moment. Washington declared against permanent alliances. He did not close the door on temporary alliances for particular purposes. Our entry into the great war just closed was entirely in accord with and violated in no respect the policy laid down by Washington. When we went to war with Germany we made no treaties with the nations engaged in the war against the German Government. The President was so careful in this direction that he did not permit himself ever to refer to the nations by whose side we fought as "allies," but always as "nations associated with us in the war." The attitude recommended by Washington was scrupulously maintained even under the pressure of the great conflict. Now, in the twinkling of an eye, while passion and emotion reign, the Washington policy is to be entirely laid aside and we are to enter upon a permanent and indissoluble alliance. That which we refuse to do in war we are to do in peace deliberately, coolly, and with no war exigency. Let us not overlook the profound gravity of this step.

Washington was not only a very great man but he was also a very wise man. He looked far into the future and he never omitted human nature from his calculations. He knew well that human nature had not changed fundamentally since mankind had a history. Moreover, he was destitute of any personal ambitions to a degree never equaled by any other very great man known to us. In all the vital questions with which he dealt it was not merely that he thought of his country first and of himself second. He thought of his country first and never thought of himself at all. He was so great a man that the fact that this country had produced him was enough of itself to justify the Revolution and our existence as a Nation. Do not think that I overstate this in the fondness of patriotism and with the partiality of one of his countrymen. The opinion I have expressed is the opinion of the world. Fifteen years after Washington's death Byron wrote the famous and familiar lines:

Where may the wearied eye repose
When gazing on the Great,
Where neither guilty glory glows,
Nor despicable state?
Yes, One—the first—the last—the best—
The Cincinnatus of the West,
Whom Envy dared not hate—
Bequeathed the name of Washington,
To make man blush there was but one!

That was the opinion of mankind then, and it is the opinion of mankind to-day, when his statue has been erected in Paris and is about to be erected in London. If we throw aside the political testament of such a man, which has been of living force down to the present instant, because altered circumstances demand it, it is a subject for deep regret and not for rejoicing. When Washington prepared the Farewell Address he consulted Hamilton, perhaps the greatest constructive mind among modern statesmen, who prepared a large part of the draft; Madison, one of the chief framers of the Constitution and President of the United States; John Jay, Chief Justice and one of the great lawyers in our history. Following them came Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, and John Quincy Adams, bringing the Monroe doctrine to complete and round out the principles of Washington to which they were all alike devoted. If we are to be driven by modern exigencies to dismiss Washington and his counselors and the men who declared the Monroe doctrine from our consideration, we ought, at least, as these stately figures pass off the stage of guiding influence, to pay our homage to them and not relegate them to the shades of the past with jeers and laughter directed against their teachings.

But if we put aside forever the Washington policy in regard to our foreign relations, we must always remember that it carries with it the corollary known as the Monroe doctrine. Under the terms of this league draft reported by the committee to the peace conference the Monroe doctrine disappears. It has been our cherished guide and guard for nearly a century. The Monroe doctrine is based on the principle of self-preservation. To say that it is a question of protecting the boundaries, the political integrity, of the American States is not to state the Monroe doctrine. Boundaries have been changed among American States since the Monroe doctrine was enunciated. That is not the kernel of the doctrine. The real essence of that doctrine is that American questions shall be settled by Americans alone; that the Americas shall be separated from Europe and from the interference of Europe in purely American questions. That is the vital principle of the doctrine.

I have seen it said that the Monroe doctrine is preserved under article 10; that we do not abandon the Monroe doctrine, we merely extend it to all the world. How anyone can say this passes my comprehension. The Monroe doctrine exists solely for the protection of the American Hemisphere, and to that hemisphere it was limited. If you extend it to all the world, it ceases to exist, because it rests on nothing but the differentiation of the American Hemisphere from the rest of the world. Under this draft of the constitution of the league of nations American questions and European questions and Asian and African questions are all alike put within the control and jurisdiction of the league. Europe will have the right to take part in the settlement of all American questions, and we, of course, shall have the right to share in the settlement of all questions in Europe and Asia and Africa. Europe and Asia are to take part in policing the American Continent and the Panama Canal, and in return we are to have, by way of compensation, the right to police the Balkans and Asia Minor when we are asked to do so. Perhaps the time has come when it is necessary to do this, but it is a very grave step, and I wish now merely to point out that the American people ought never to abandon the Washington policy and the Monroe doctrine without being perfectly certain that they earnestly wish to do so. Standing always firmly by these great policies, we have thriven and prospered and have done more to preserve the world's peace than any nation, league, or alliance which ever existed. For this reason I ask the press and the public and, of course, the Senate to consider well the gravity of this proposition before it takes the heavy responsibility of finally casting aside these policies which we have adhered to for a century and more and under which we have greatly served the cause of peace both at home and abroad.

Very complete proof must be offered of the superiority of any new system before we reject the policies of Washington and Monroe, which have been in our foreign relations the Palladium of the Republic. Within the memory of those to whom I now speak the Monroe doctrine stopped the incursions of England upon the territory of Venezuela and settled the boundary question finally by arbitration. Under the Monroe doctrine we arrested the attempt of Germany to take Venezuelan territory on another occasion. In these two instances the doctrine was enforced by a Democratic President and by a Republican President, and they were supported in so doing by all the people of the United States without regard to party. I mention these cases merely to show that we are not cutting away dead limbs from the body politic, but that we are abandoning two cardinal principles of American government, which, until the presentation of this draft for the constitution of the league of nations, were as vital as on the day when Washington addressed the people of the United States for the last time or when President Monroe announced his policy to the world. What has happened since November 11, 1918, to make them so suddenly valueless, to cause them to be regarded as injurious obstacles to be cast out upon the dust heaps of history? It seems to me that that is a question which at least deserves our consideration before we take action upon it.

Two other general propositions, and I shall proceed to examine these league articles in detail. In article 10 we, in common, of course, with the other signatories and members of the projected league, guarantee the territorial integrity and the political independence of every member of the league. That means that we ultimately guarantee the independence and the boundaries, as now settled or as they may be settled by the treaty with Germany, of every nation on earth. If the United States agrees to guaranties of that sort we must maintain them. The word of the United States, her promise to guarantee the independence and the boundaries of any country, whether she does it alone or in company with other nations, whether she guarantees one country or all the countries of the world, is just as sacred as her honor—far more important than the maintenance of every financial pledge, which the people of this country would never consent to break.

I do not now say the time has not come when, in the interest of future peace, the American people may not decide that we ought to guarantee the territorial integrity of the far-flung British Empire, including her self-governing dominions and colonies, of the Balkan States, of China or Japan, or of the French, Italian, and Portuguese colonies in Africa; but I do suggest that it is a very grave, a very perilous promise to make, because there is but one way by which such guaranties, if ever invoked, can be maintained, and that way is the way of force—whether military or economic force, it matters not. If we guarantee any country on the earth, no matter how small or how large, in its independence or its boundaries, that guarantee we must maintain at any cost when our word is once given, and we must be in constant possession of fleets and armies capable of enforcing these guaranties at a moment's notice. There is no need of arguing whether there is to be compulsive force behind this league. It is there in article 10 absolutely and entirely by the mere fact of these guaranties. The ranks of the armies and the fleets of the navy made necessary by such pledges are to be filled and manned by the sons, husbands, and brothers of the people of America. I wish them carefully to consider, therefore, whether they are willing to have the youth of America ordered to war by other nations without regard to what they or their representatives desire. I would have them determine after much reflection whether they are willing to have the United States forced into war by other nations against her own will. They must bear in mind constantly that we have only one vote in the executive council, only one vote in the body of delegates, and a majority of the votes rules and is decisive.

I am not here to discuss the constitutional question of the sole right of Congress to declare war. That is a detail, as it relates only to the Constitution, which we may decide later. In my own opinion, we shall be obliged to modify the Constitution. I do not think, and I never can admit, that we can change or modify the Constitution by a treaty negotiated by the President and ratified by the Senate. I think that must be done, and can only be done, in the way prescribed by the Constitution itself, and to promise to amend our Constitution is a serious task and a doubtful undertaking.

I hope the American people will take time to consider this promise before they make it—because when it is once made it can not be broken—and ask themselves whether this is the best way of assuring perfect peace throughout the future years, which is what we are aiming at, for we all are aiming at the same object. A world's peace which requires at the outset preparations for war—for war either economic or military—in order to maintain that peace presents questions and awakens thoughts which certainly ought to be soberly and discreetly considered.

The second general proposition to which I would call attention is this: We now in this draft bind ourselves to submit every possible international dispute or difference either to the league court or to the control of the executive council of the league. That includes immigration, a very live question, to take a single example. Are we ready to give to other nations the power to say who shall come into the United States and become citizens of the Republic? If we are ready to do this, we are prepared to part with the most precious of sovereign rights, that which guards our existence and our character as a Nation. Are we ready to leave it to other nations to determine whether we shall admit to the United States a flood of Japanese, Chinese, and Hindu labor? If we accept this plan for a league, this is precisely what we promise to do. I know that by following out all the windings of the provision for referring to the council or allowing the council to take charge of what has been called hitherto a nonjusticiable question, we shall probably reach a point where it would not be possible to secure unanimous action by the league upon the question of immigration. But, Mr. President, I start with the proposition that there should be no jurisdiction in the league at all over that question; that it should be separated absolutely and entirely from any jurisdiction of the league. Are we prepared to have a league of nations—in which the United States has only one vote, which she could not cast on a dispute to which she was a party—open our doors, if they see fit, to any and all immigration from all parts of the world?

Mr. Taft has announced, in an article which appeared in the National Geographic Magazine, that the question of immigration will go before the international tribunal, and he says now that all organized labor is for the league. If American labor favors putting the restriction of immigration in the control of other nations they must have radically changed their minds and abandoned their most cherished policy. Certainly the gravity of such promises as are involved in the points I have suggested is sufficient to forbid haste. If such promises are to be given they must be given in cold blood with a full realization of what they mean and after the American people and those who represent them here have considered all that is involved with a serious care such as we have never been called upon to exercise before. We are asked to abandon the policies which we have adhered to during all our life as a Nation. We are asked to guarantee the political independence and the territorial integrity of every nation which chooses to join the league—and that means all nations, as the President stated in his speech at Manchester. We are asked to leave to the decision of other nations, or to the jurisdiction of other nations, the question of what immigrants shall come to the United States. We are asked also to give up in part our sovereignty and our independence and to subject our own will to the will of other nations, if there is a majority against our desires. We are asked, therefore, in a large and important degree to substitute internationalism for nationalism and an international state for pure Americanism. Certainly such things as these deserve reflection, discussion, and earnest thought.

I am not contending now that these things must not be done. I have no intention of opposing a blank negative to propositions which concern the peace of the world, which I am as anxious to see promoted as any living man can be; but I do say, in the strongest terms, that these things I have pointed out are of vast importance not only to us but to the entire world, and a mistake now in making the league of nations might result in more war and trouble than the old system in its worst days. What I ask, and all I ask, is consideration, time, and thought.

The first and most practical question for us to consider and decide is whether the terms of this committee draft of a constitution for the league of nations really make for harmony, among the nations or will tend to produce dissension and controversy. We all desire peace, but in our zeal for peace we must be careful not to create new obligations and new and untried conditions, which may lead to fostering war rather than peace. For this reason I am going now to examine the articles in the draft of the constitution for the league of nations one by one.

Upon the preamble we need not pause. It states purposes and objects with which everybody, of course, is in sympathy.

Article 1 deals with the officers and the delegates, and they are sufficiently and clearly provided for, and also that there shall be an international secretariat. I think nothing is omitted so far as the creation of offices goes.

Nothing is said about how the delegates shall be chosen. That, of course, is a matter which is left to each nation to determine, but I venture, with all respect, to suggest that delegates representing the United States in what is to be a world state, to which we are to give a portion of our sovereignty and independence, ought to represent the United States; they ought to be selected by the people of the United States or appointed as ambassadors and consuls are appointed. I think these delegates, who are certainly as important as ambassadors or consuls, should be appointed by the usual method of the President and the Senate, and not ever be allowed to be irresponsible personal agents. That, however, is something we can attend to here, I think, when the league of nations is submitted to us in treaty form.

Article 2 refers to the meetings of the body of delegates, and also provides that "each of the high contracting parties shall have one vote but may not have more than three representatives." Therefore the voting in the body of delegates proceeds on the well-settled principle of international law that each national sovereignty is equal to every other national sovereignty, and the United States will have one vote and so will Siam.

In article 3 we come to the executive council, which is of the greatest possible importance, for it is in the provision stated here—and also, I am sure, as practice will show—the controlling force of the entire league:

The executive council shall consist of representatives of the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, together with representatives of four other States members of the league.

What other States shall be selected has not yet been disclosed to us, but there must be four other States. The executive council now has five members—three from Europe, one from Asia, and one from America. Ultimately it will have nine members. I assume, and I think I have the right to assume, on the best authority, that there is no intention of making Germany one of the four nations to be added to the existing five which will compose the nine members of the executive council. I think it is probable that Germany will have a period of probation before she is even admitted to the league, and that seems to me to be eminently wise.

Then the article provides for the meeting of the council, and then says in the last paragraph:

Invitations shall be sent to any power to attend a meeting of the council at which matters directly affecting its interests are to be discussed, and no decision taken at any meeting will be binding on such powers unless so invited.

This, of course, looks to having the executive council consider the affairs of every country in the world, whether they are members of the league or not, and all the council has to do in order to make its action binding on such powers is to invite them to be present. It is a paragraph not without importance.

ART. 4. All matter of procedure at meetings of the body of delegates or the executive council, including the appointment of the committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the body of delegates or the executive council, and may be decided by a majority of the States represented at the meeting.

It is to be decided by the executive council, where we shall have one vote in five, or, when the council is enlarged, one vote in nine, and in the body of delegates, of course, only one vote.

Then comes article 5, which provides for the secretariat and concerns only offices and provisions for expenses. The words creating offices and providing for salaries leave no room for doubts or questionings.

Article 6 is a matter of course. It simply gives the delegates diplomatic immunities and privileges.

Article 7 covers the admission to the league of States and, when a State is invited to adhere, "requires the assent of not less than two-thirds of the States represented in the body of delegates, and shall be limited to fully self-governing countries, including dominions and colonies."

The inclusion of dominions and colonies, of course, covers the four great self-governing dominions of Great Britain. I have no fault to find with the arrangement. Canada, New Zealand, South Africa, and Australia are far more worthy and more valuable members of a league of nations than some of the nations which I think will find their way into the body. But the fact remains that in the body of delegates England has five votes to one vote of any other country.

The next paragraph says:

No State shall be admitted to the league unless it is able to give effective guaranties of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations.

I do not wish to seem hypercritical, but I think that in a document of this kind we should know a little better what an "effective guaranty of a sincere intention" is.

How can we have an effective guaranty of a sincere intention? I merely throw this out as one of the points which it seems to me ought to be made clear. Let us know what it means. How are we to test the sincerity of the intention? How are we to get a guaranty for the sincerity of the intention in advance? I think it would be well to have that more precisely defined.

We now come to article 8, which refers to disarmament, a most important question, one of the most important in the constitution of the league, with the purpose of which everybody must be in the keenest sympathy. The reduction of armaments, if it can be brought about successfully, will be of the greatest value to the world and relieve the people of all countries from a burden of taxation which has become intolerable. But its very importance makes it necessary, in my opinion, to express what is to be done with the utmost clearness. The article says:

The high contracting parties recognize the principle that the maintenance of peace will require the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations—

That is, the reduction must be consistent with the "enforcement by common action of international obligations," words to be considered and which the instrument itself must explain.

Here we are dealing solely with military force which we are seeking to reduce, and it is recognized that in disarmament one of the elements to be considered is the "enforcement by common action of international obligations," which, I assume—we have to assume more or less as we pass along through these articles—refers to the obligations of the league. We certainly owe no international obligation to anybody else to-day as to what fleets and armies we shall have. Yet this article contemplates as one of the tests of disarmament the amount of force which will be needed to carry out the purposes of the league. The article continues:

having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State, and the executive council shall formulate plans for effecting such reduction.

I do not know how far the formulation has a binding effect, but the article goes on to say:

The executive council shall also determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament—

"Laid down." Again I have to interpret. Laid down, I assume, by the executive council itself, because it is they who make the program—and these limits, when adopted, shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council.

There comes in an absolutely binding provision. It says "when adopted." Adopted by whom? The natural inference is, adopted by the several governments, if you trace it back through the wording of the previous paragraphs. Ought not an instrument of this vital character to be drafted with the ordinary care which a clerk gives in drafting a clause in an appropriation bill for a Senate committee? Ought it not to be stated clearly, "thus adopted by the several governments," and then there can be no question that each government will decide on the program itself and its own share before it is put in a position where it can never exceed that program without the permission of the executive council—I assume the majority of the executive council. That is another thing which apparently it has not been thought worth while to state, but I do not think you can be too clear when you are exacting from nations these great promises and laying upon them these heavy burdens.

The high contracting parties agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war lends itself to grave objections, and direct the executive council to advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented.

That, I take it, is mere advice to be laid before the body of delegates, but it is not explained how far the advice goes.

The high contracting parties—

The last paragraph says—

undertake in no way to conceal from each other the condition of such of their industries as are capable of being adapted to warlike purposes or the scale of their armaments, and agree that there shall be full and frank interchange of information as to their military and naval program.

An admirable proposition! Certainly it can not but add to the prospect of the peace of the world if every nation shall explain to every other nation just what military and naval program it has; but there seems to be no method expressed here by which they can be compelled to give that information, except by saying that if they do not do it they fail in a moral obligation and will be guilty of what some people might define as "moral obliquity."

Article 9 says:

A permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the league on the execution of the provisions of article 8 and on military and naval questions generally.

A very useful body, but constituted by whom? There is not one syllable in the article to show by whom it shall be constituted. It may be unnecessary to do it; we may be able to infer it; but when you get into the misty region of inferences by individuals you must have some tribunal established like our Supreme Court, who can declare whether the inference is correct or not.

Article 10 is probably the most important article in the whole constitution—I have already referred to it—because to me it is graver than anything else with perhaps one exception in this entire treaty. It is also perfectly clear:

The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

The executive council is to have the power of advice, which I do not suppose is binding at all, but the guaranty remains, and, as I have already said—it can not be too often repeated—that when one nation guarantees the political independence and the territorial integrity of another, that guaranty must be maintained, and guaranties can only be maintained by the exercise in the last resort of the force of the nation. If we were to guarantee the political independence and territorial integrity of Mexico or Guatamala, or any of those States, we should have to stand behind them with our armies and our fleets when the guaranty was invoked, and there is no escape from that obligation. Those plain words demand it. I am not now arguing whether we should give the guaranty or whether we should not give the guaranty, but I beg my fellow countrymen to consider well before they give this promise to invoke the mighty power of the United States in order to enforce a guaranty which extends to the boundaries of every State on the face of the earth. It is a tremendous promise, and if we give it this country must carry it out. The United States must never be guilty of in any way impairing the sanctity of treaties. But let us think well before we do it. Let us consider it. In the presence of such promises as that is it unreasonable to ask that the American people should have time to consider, to realize, just what it means before they give the promise? If they decide coolly and deliberately, there is nothing more to be said; we bow to it, and Congress will fulfill it; but that is too weighty a promise to make by simply saying, "I am in favor of a league of nations and of the eternal peace of the world." We are all in favor of the peace of the world. A mere title does not carry with it any explanation of the responsibility which is undertaken.

Article 11. Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations—

"Any action" covers war—

It is hereby also declared and agreed to be the friendly right of each of the high contracting parties to draw the attention of the body of delegates—

Which I suppose means the five who are now assigned and the four who are to join with them, making nine in all—

to draw the attention of the body of delegates or of the executive council to any circumstances affecting international intercourse which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

Everyone must agree to that, except for the slight uncertainties of statement, but it embodies in practice one of the paragraphs of The Hague convention.

Now we come to the disputes. Those articles relating to the settlement of disputes would require a long time by themselves, if we touched nothing else, to discuss, and also to understand. I merely wish to call attention to a few points which occur on a casual reading. It says in article 12 "disputes." It says in article 13 "any disputes." That means any dispute that may arise among nations, of any kind, whether involving domestic or internal matters or foreign relations. The words "any disputes" cover everything. On that point I wish to reiterate what I have already said. I am not going further into it.

It is no reply to the point that is made about immigration to say that, if you follow it through all the windings of the provisions here for justiciable and nonjusticiable questions you will find it reaches a point where the league could do nothing about immigration into the United States unless it was unanimous, and that it is very unlikely they would ever be unanimous. Grant it; it is unlikely that the league will ever be unanimous about anything, but the possibility is there. I deny the jurisdiction. I do not think we should leave to the league any question as to immigration, because immigration lies at the very root of national character and national economy; it ought to be made plain that the league has no jurisdiction whatever over such questions in any way. We do not want a narrow alley of escape from the jurisdiction of the league. We want to prevent any jurisdiction whatever. As we stand to-day no nation or nations can say who shall come into the United States. There is only one rule as to that, and that is the rule of the United States. It should so remain. What I say for the United States I mean for every other nation. No nation should be compelled to admit anyone within its borders whom it does not choose to admit.

Some of these points I think it might be well for those who prepared this draft to consider. Perhaps I do not regard the drafting committee with the veneration which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] feels toward them; I know some of them, and, without reflecting upon them in any way, I do not think their intellect or position in the world are so overpowering that we can not suggest amendments to this league. I can not say I know them all; I do not believe anybody here could get up and say who the 14 members of that commission are.

But there is a practical question to which I was about to call attention. This constitution here says until three months there shall be "no resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council and until three months after award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council."

That binds the members of the league; but there have been outlaws among the nations before now. As a matter of history, the sudden manner in which Frederick the Great threw aside all his most solemn promises and poured his armies over Silesia, which Prussia has held ever since he tore it from Austria. How was this present war begun? By the sudden precipitation of an enormous war machine on the unprepared lands of Belgium and the nearly unprepared territory of France.

Suppose we had a Mexican raid across our border. It has happened. Perhaps Mexican nature has changed and it will never happen again, but it may happen. We are members of the league, we will suppose, and mean to carry out, as we must, every provision in absolute good faith. Mexico does not happen, we will say, to be a member of the league, or she is a member and breaks her covenants; she has not yet given "effective guaranties of sincere intention"; she breaks across our border, and under this article we have got to wait three months before we do anything. That, I think, would be a little hard on the people who live on the border.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, it is three months after the decision, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. Three months after the award.

Mr. REED. And the award might be made 30 years after the occurrence?

Mr. LODGE. No; the award of the arbitrators must "be made within a reasonable time."

Mr. REED. Oh, yes. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The galleries will be cleared, except the senatorial gallery. We might as well settle this question first as last.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not sit here and not enforce the rule. Either repeal the rule or the Chair must enforce it. The Chair does not care anything about the rule.

Mr. REED. Perhaps I am to blame for the disturbance. I will apologize for having made the remark; and I hope the Chair, having admonished the galleries, will not have them cleared.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is admonishing the galleries every 15 minutes. The Chair does not care anything about the rule—he wishes it were repealed—but unless the rule can be repealed it is going in some way to be observed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, such disturbance as there was came chiefly, I think, from Senators themselves.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Absolutely.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Absolutely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask, in view of the fact that this is the first infraction of the rule, that for the time being the rule be not enforced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senate does not desire the rule enforced, the Chair will not enforce it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think some provision ought to be made by which any country which is a member of the league and carrying out its principles, as it must, in good faith, should have some right reserved to protect itself against sudden inroad or invasion. We may say that is never going to occur. That is the answer which is usually made to most of these things; that it is inconceivable. It is not inconceivable, for it has happened before, and it may happen again. There ought to be some provision to cover it. That is all I venture to suggest.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. LODGE. I will; yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts, in giving an illustration, used Mexico, and said he assumed that Mexico would not be a member of the league.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. I was only assuming that for purposes of illustration. I suppose Mexico will be a member of the league. It does not make any difference whether she disregard her obligations as a member or have none.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to take the Senator's assumption as he gave it. Where is the language in article 12 or 13, which the Senator was discussing that, at least, would apply to that kind of a case? As I read the language there, it applies only between members of the league. It would not apply at all in the case the Senator from Massachusetts has put.

Mr. LODGE. I assume that as to members of the league it will cover it, but I think later on the Senator will find the proposition there about putting nations outside of the league who are not members of the league within the control of the league.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, I think so.

Mr. LODGE. It comes pretty near to it.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator was discussing articles 12 and 13, and got that kind of a construction out of them.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to leave it to Mexico as a member of the league. I do not think that being a member of the league is going to alter Mexican character materially, although it may.

Mr. NORRIS. But it would alter the Senator's assumption materially.

Mr. LODGE. No; not at all, because Mexico may break out. I say again there might be an outlaw among nations.

Mr. NORRIS. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he assumed, in the illustration he gave, that Mexico was not in the league; that we were, and that articles 12 and 13, which he was discussing, would apply to his suggeston.

Mr. LODGE. I specifically said let us assume that for the purpose of argument. I am perfectly willing to drop the assumption and confine it to the exact language of the article, which suits me just as well for illustration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. I can not yield further, Mr. President. I wish to finish. Article 13 reads:

> The high contracting parties agree that whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration—

That is, disputes which a majority of the high contracting parties recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration—> and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole matter to arbitration.

Of course, the only people who can submit a matter to arbitration are the people who are parties to the dispute. Those who have no dispute can not submit anything to arbitration, because they have nothing to submit.

The reason I bring this apparently trivial point up at this time is that it will be well to differentiate these "theys" and show that in one case the reference is to the high contracting parties who agree that any dispute that arises among them suitable for submission shall be submitted, and, in the other that those between whom the dispute arises will submit it. This is clearly the meaning, I think, but it might be expressed a little more luminously.

The executive council "proposes," I suppose, by a majority, although it does not say so; and how binding the proposal is does not appear. I think it ought to be explicitly stated that a majority of the executive council shall have the power to propose and declare whether the proposal is binding or not. The word "propose" does not imply a binding character, I am well aware; but I should like to get rid of one of the implications of which this document is full.

Article 14 provides that "the executive council shall formulate plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice."

Then comes article 15, which is very important, and which provides for those disputes "likely to lead to rupture," which are not submitted to arbitration, but which the high contracting parties agree they will refer to the executive council through the secretary general. They are to make their statements of the case there and such recommendations are to be made as the executive council thinks just and proper for the settlement of the dispute, and "if the report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the council other than the parties to the dispute the high contracting parties agree that they will not go to war with any party which complies with the recommendations."

Unless the council is unanimous, I take it, they are at liberty to go to war. And "if any party shall refuse so to comply the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the recommendation." There is no explanation of what measures. I presume we must take it to mean all measures. I will not follow the referred dispute through all its tortuous pathway, but it comes eventually to the body of delegates, and in that connection the proposed constitution says:

> All the provisions of this article and of article 12 relating to the action of the executive council shall apply to the action and powers of the body of delegates.

This means that the body of delegates, as I take it, must unanimously agree, and if they do not unanimously agree it appears to me to leave the whole matter open. This may be a protection in certain cases, but in other cases, it seems to me, it does not offer a very strong resistance or create a very serious obstacle to war.

Now we come to article 16, which says that—

> Should any of the high contracting parties break or disregard its covenants under article 12 it shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not.

There can be no doubt, under the conditions given, that we shall be called upon to enter on an economic war with any State on earth, whether a member of the league or not, if that State breaks or disregards any of the covenants relating to arbitration. I merely call attention to it because I venture to think that cutting off our intercourse with another nation and opening our territory to the passage of troops is a very serious promise to make; and I think it ought to be honored with more consideration than perhaps it has yet received.

Article 16 contemplates also the duties of the executive council in such cases "to recommend what effective military or naval forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league."

Here it is apparent that there can be no question that the armed forces of the United States are to be called upon for work of this kind; and if we are to act in good faith, it seems to me we are morally bound by this clause to contribute what the executive council recommends to the armed forces called forth to protect the covenants of this league. We may say their recommendation does not bind, but it certainly binds us morally if we agree to it; and I do not think that we can afford to enter a league of nations for the preservation of the peace of the world with any misunderstanding on a point of this kind. It seems to me that, in any event, this is a direct interference with the power of Congress to raise armies and maintain navies, and we shall be compelled to have a constitutional amendment in order that this provision may be carried out. However, I am not going at this time to enter upon constitutional questions, which are regarded by most advocates of the league as either humorous or academic.

Article 17 refers to the case of disputes between members of the league and other States not members, and makes various provisions raising many of the questions which are raised by the preceding article.

Article 19 is one of the great articles of the proposed constitution. It provides for the States of the league being mandatories and taking charge of other States classified under various descriptions in the article, which I will not read. Oddly enough, it does not say who is to select the mandatories; at least, I can find nothing in the article stating who is to choose the mandatories, whether the body of the delegates or the executive council; nor does it appear whether a mandatory is bound if once selected. I presume not; but it is not stated. I do not think it is hypercriticism to suggest that when a mandatory is to be selected to take charge of the fortunes of another people, or of another State, there should be some provision for the selection of the mandatory, and it should be made clear, at least, whether the nation so selected is bound.

I am not going into the general question of taking up the work of the mandatories and holding States in tutelage. That was so thoroughly covered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that it is not necessary for me to take the time of the Senate to discuss it further; but I suggest this thought—and I shall keep on suggesting it—that before the United States binds itself in any way it should be made clear to what extent it is bound, for I have no sympathy with the proposition that we can refuse this and refuse that; in other words, that we can violate the principles of the treaty whenever we feel like it. I think that idea ought to be finally dismissed. What we are bound to in honor we are bound to do, and I think whether we should be prepared to take charge of other countries and of other peoples is an important question for the American people to decide. I am not speaking now of States which we are to establish as a result of the war. We must help in the establishment of such States. But that belongs to the German peace. The peace with Germany will settle the boundaries of Poland and the Jugo-Slav and the Czecho-Slovak States and the rest. That is part of the German peace which we are bound to see through; but this article 19 is a promise to enter upon the work of trusteeship for all time, and I venture to think it is very serious and deserves much thoughtful consideration.

Of course article 20, for securing or maintaining fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children, is an article in which everyone must sympathize.

Now, article 21:

> The high contracting parties agree that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league—

"Freedom of transit." Does that mean transit by land alone, or does it mean transit by land and water? If it means transit by land and water we shall have to repeal our coastwise laws.

"Equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league." Under that phrase, every tariff duty which any other nation thought was inequitable the league of nations could take hold of, and "recommend" or "advise," or "decide," whatever the word may be. If we leave this loose language there the tariff and all import duties of every nation will come before the league. If we think that there is an unjust discrimination against some American goods by any country we have a right to take it before the league and see if we can not get equitable treatment. I think this opens up a wide field of dispute. It does not seem to me, moreover, that to throw all questions of tariff or of import duties into the jurisdiction of the league can do anything to promote peace. I think, on the contrary, it will be a breeder of dissension. I do not see how it can be anything else.

That is the first very vital objection to it in my mind; but I also have a feeling—and, of course, I am aware it is an old-fashioned one—that the Constitution gives to the House of Representatives the right to originate all bills to raise revenue; and this meddling of the league with tariff rates, of course, would affect revenue very seriously.

Next come the international bureaus, in article 22, to which no one would object.

Then comes article 23, which provides that no such treaty or international engagement, when once made, shall be binding until it has been registered by the secretary general. Our Constitution says that it shall become binding after it has been ratified by the Senate and ratifications have been exchanged; and this seems to add a new condition to the constitutional conditions. I am told by friends of this treaty that we can hold back ratification until the registry has taken place, but while this ingenious scheme undoubtedly slips by the Constitution, it seems to me that it would be just as well to make it plain and avoid a constitutional objection which would get into our courts if nowhere else.

Article 24 is not very clear, but it says:

> It shall be the right of the body of delegates from time to time to advise the reconsideration by State members of the league of treaties which shall become inapplicable and of international conditions of which the continuance may endanger the peace of the world.

I confess I do not clearly understand what is meant by this. I have no doubt that there are Senators, who like the league just as it is printed, who perhaps can explain that thoroughly; but "international conditions of which the continuance may endanger the peace of the world" and "the league of treaties"—I think it must be misprinted; but, at all events, it needs some examination.

Article 25 provides that we solemnly engage not to enter hereafter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms of the league of nations. Now, that is a distinct limitation upon the treaty-making power of the Constitution. That is a new provision which must be added, in my judgment, by constitutional amendment if this article remains unchanged. The Constitution gives us very well-defined powers as to treaty making, and here we promise that we will not enter upon any engagement inconsistent with the terms of the league of nations. The object is excellent, of course, but it nevertheless raises a very obvious constitutional difficulty.

The provision for amendments to the constitution of the league makes amendment very difficult, if not practically impossible. That is another reason why I am anxious, perhaps unduly anxious, as to the importance of getting this article clear and precise now, before we are asked to approve it. When our Constitution was formed we had in the convention some 50 of the ablest men in the country, and some of the ablest men, I believe, in the world. They took some three months, as I recall, in their work. They had a committee on style, headed by Gouverneur Morris, and that is the reason the language of the Constitution of the United States is so extremely clear, precise, and excellent; and yet, precise and clear as those articles are, under them, and especially under the grant in regard to commerce between the States, have arisen questions the decisions of which by the Supreme Court would fill volumes, showing the extreme difficulty and also the need of extreme care in phraseology. I think a committee on style in this league, to redraft the proposed constitution and put it in legal language, would not have been amiss.

Finally, as I come to the end, the Senate will observe that there is no provision for withdrawal. That is very important. We are making an indissoluble treaty. The old fashion of treaties, always beginning by swearing eternal friendship, common certainly as late as the seventeenth century, has been abandoned in modern times entirely. Almost all treaties now contain provisions for terminating the treaty on due notice. Others limit the life of the treaty. An indissoluble treaty, without the right of withdrawal, is very unusual.

It has been pointed out to me—not once but many times—that we can abrogate, that we can violate, that we can overrule any treaty by the action of Congress. I know that. We can denounce it. I know that. I think, however, that to form a league of this kind and leave it in such a form that no nation can get out of it except by abrogation, by violation, or by denunciation—action which usually in the intercourse of nations means war—is very serious. If the right of withdrawal were preserved, a nation could withdraw—on due notice, of course—without shattering the league or impairing in any way the sanctity of treaties. It seems to me there ought to be some such provision. If you leave a country—I am not speaking merely of the United States—tied hard and fast, so that they can not get out of this league without tearing everything to pieces by denouncing it or by abrogating it or violating it, you create a situation which in my mind does not promote the peace of nations, but the very reverse.

I have seen here not so many years ago an occasion when, in a burst of passion, the House of Representatives swept away a treaty with a friendly nation, which contained provisions for notice and withdrawal, without any regard for the terms of the treaty. The resolution was modified here so as to avoid insult and offense; but that was the way it passed the House in a moment of anger and excitement. Passion and emotion are not going to perish or die out of men because we sign an agreement for a league of nations. They will remain. The case to which I have referred, which was with Russia, involved the good relations of the United States with one nation; but such treatment of the provisions of the league would involve a similar feeling on the part of all nations of the earth, practically all members of the league. I think this is a very serious danger, a danger to the peace of the world which we are all seeking to promote. It must be avoided by a simple amendment.

Thus, very imperfectly, I have reviewed these articles. I have stated some of the doubts and questionings which have arisen in my own mind, and I could print in the RECORD letters which I have received showing other points and questions which have occurred to other minds. This demonstrates the uncertainties which cloud this instrument from beginning to end. When the United States enters into an indissoluble permanent alliance there ought to be, as I have said, no uncertainties in the terms of the agreement. I earnestly desire to do everything that can be done to secure the peace of the world, but these articles as they stand in this proposed constitution seem to give a rich promise of being fertile in producing controversies and misunderstandings. They also make some demands which I do not believe any nation would submit to in a time of stress. Therefore this machinery would not promote the peace of the world, but would have a directly opposite effect. It would tend to increase the subjects of misunderstanding and dispute among the nations. Is it not possible to draft a better, more explicit, less dangerous scheme than the one here and now presented? Surely we are not to be shut up to this as the last and only word to take or leave.

To those who object that the criticism of this tentative draft plan of the committee of the peace conference must be not only destructive but constructive it might be said that the burden of proof lies upon those who propose, in order to establish the future peace of the world, that the United States must curtail its independence, part with a portion of its sovereignty, and abandon all the international policies which have been so successful for more than a hundred years. Those who support the present draft of the constitution for the league must demonstrate that it is an improvement before they can expect its general acceptance. But the Senate can not at this time undertake to make plans for a league, because we are in the process of negotiation, and the Senate does not begin to act until the stage of ratification is reached. At the same time there are certain constructive propositions which it would be well, I think, for the peace conference to consider. If it is said that you can preserve the Monroe doctrine by extending it, which appears to me clearly to mean its destruction and to be a contradiction in terms, then let us put three lines into the draft for the league which will preserve the Monroe doctrine beyond any possibility of doubt or question. It is easily done. Let us also have, if we enter the league, a complete exclusion from the league's jurisdiction of such questions as are involved in immigration and the right of each country to say who shall come within its borders and become citizens. This and certain other questions vital to national existence ought to be exempted from any control or jurisdiction by the league or its officials by a very few words, such as can be found in the arbitration treaties of 1907. There should be some definite provision for peaceful withdrawal from the league if any nation desires to withdraw. Lastly, let us have a definite statement in the constitution of the league as to whether the league is to have an international force of its own or is to have the power to summon the armed forces of the different members of the league. Let it be stated in plain language whether the "measures," the "recommendations," or the suggestions of the executive council are to be binding upon the members of the league and are to compel them, technically or morally, to do what the league delegates and the executive council determine to be necessary. On the question of the use of force we should not proceed in the dark. If those who support the league decline to make such simple statements as these—I mean statements in the body of the instrument, not individual statements—it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that they are seeking to do by indirection and the use of nebulous phrases what they are not willing to do directly, and nothing could be more fatal to the preservation of the world's peace than this, for every exercise of power by the executive council which the signatories to the league might fairly consider to be doubtful would lead to very perilous controversies and to menacing quarrels.

Unless some better constitution for a league than this can be drawn, it seems to me, after such examination as I have been able to give, that the world's peace would be much better, much more surely promoted, by allowing the United States to go on under the Monroe doctrine, responsible for the peace of this hemisphere, without any danger of collision with Europe as to questions among the various American States, and if a league is desired it might be made up by the European nations whose interests are chiefly concerned, and with which the United States could cooperate fully and at any time, whenever cooperation was needed. I suppose I shall make myself the subject of derision for quoting from the Farewell Address, but it states a momentous truth so admirably that I can not refrain from giving it, for I think it ought to be borne in mind. Washington says:

> Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

It must also be remembered that if the United States enters any league of nations it does so for the benefit of the world at large, and not for its own benefit. The people of the United States are a peace-loving people. We have no boundaries to rectify, no schemes, and no desires for the acquisition or conquest of territory. We have in the main kept the peace in the American hemisphere. The States of South America have grown constantly more stable, and revolutions have well-nigh disappeared in the States south of those bordering on the Caribbean. No one questions that the United States is able to prevent any conflicts in the American hemisphere which would involve the world in any way or be more than passing difficulties, which in most cases could be settled by arbitration. If we join a league, therefore, it must be with a view to maintaining peace in Europe, where all the greatest wars have originated, and where there is always danger of war, and in Asia, where serious conflicts may arise at any moment. If we join a league, of course, we have in mind the danger of European conflicts springing up in such a way as to involve us in the defense of civilization, as has just happened in the war with Germany. But such wars as that are, fortunately, rare; so rare that one has never before occurred, and when the time came we took our part; but in the main our share in any league must be almost wholly for the benefit of others. We have the right, therefore, to demand that there shall be nothing in any agreement for the maintenance of the world's peace which is likely to produce new causes of difference and dissension, or which is calculated to injure the United States, or compel from us undue sacrifice, or put us in a position where we may be forced to serve the ambitions of others. There is no gain for peace in the Americas to be found by annexing the Americas to the European system. Whatever we do there we do from almost purely altruistic motives, and therefore we are entitled to consider every proposition with the utmost care in order to make sure that it does not do us injustice or render future conditions worse instead of better than they are at present.

To me the whole subject is one of enormous difficulties. We are all striving for a like result; but to make any real advances toward the future preservation of the world's peace will take time, care, and long consideration. We can not reach our objects by a world constitution hastily constructed in a few weeks in Paris in the midst of the excitement of a war not yet ended. The one thing to do, as I said in the Senate some time ago, and that which I now wish above all others, is to make the peace with Germany—to make a peace which by its terms will prevent her from breaking out again upon the world; to exclude Turkey from Europe, strengthen Greece, and give freedom and independence to the Armenians and to the Jewish and Christian populations of Asia Minor; to erect the barrier States for the Poles, Czecho-Slovaks, and Jugo-Slavs; to take possession of the Kiel Canal; to establish the Baltic States and free them from Russia and restore Danish Schleswig to Denmark. Provision must be made for indemnities or reparation, or by whatever name we choose to call the damages to be exacted from Germany. We ought, in my judgment, to receive indemnities which would enable us to provide for the Lusitania claims and for the destruction of our ships by submarines—to go no further. But the enormous losses of England and Italy in shipping should be made good, either in money or in kind. Belgium must be restored and fully compensated for her terrible injuries.

Finally there is France, and the indemnities to France ought to be ample and complete. The machinery taken from her factories should be restored. The cattle driven from her fields should be brought back. The debt of the free and civilized world to France is inestimable. Our own debt to her is very large. France has been our outpost and our bulwark. She has bared her breast to the storm and stood between us and the advancing hordes of Germany in the darkest days. It was France, aided by the small but gallant army of England, which checked the onrush of the Germans at the first battle of the Marne. It is her land which has been desolated and her villages and cities which have been destroyed. She should have compensation to the utmost limit in every way. Eternal justice demands it. But it is also to our immediate and selfish interest as a Nation that France should be made as strong as possible. Alsace and Lorraine she must have without question and without reduction, and other barriers if necessary to make her impregnable to German assault, for on the strength of France more than anything else, because she is the neighbor of Germany, rests the future peace of the world. We ought then to make this peace with Germany and make it at once. Much time has been wasted. The delays have bred restlessness and confusion everywhere. Germany is lifting her head again. The whining after defeat is changing to threats. She is seeking to annex nine millions of Germans in German Austria. She is reaching out in Russia and reviving her financial and commercial penetration everywhere. Her fields have not been desolated nor her factories destroyed. Germany is again threatening, and the only source of a great war is to be found in the future as in the past in Germany. She could be chained and fettered now and this menace to the world's peace should be removed at once. Whatever else we fought for certainly our first and paramount purpose was to defeat Germany. The victory over Germany is not yet complete. Let it be made so without delay.

That which I desire above everything else, that which is nearest to my heart, is to bring our soldiers home. The making of a league of nations will not do that. We can only bring our soldiers home, entirely and completely, when the peace with Germany is made and proclaimed. Let that peace be made and I can assure the world that when the treaty of peace with Germany comes to this Chamber there will be no delay in the Senate of the United States. We must bring our men back from France—the men who fought the war, the men who made the personal sacrifice. Let us get them back at once, and to that end let us have the peace made with Germany, made now, and not delay it until the complicated questions of the league of nations can be settled with the care and consideration which they demand. What is it that delays the peace with Germany? Discussions over the league of nations; nothing else. Let us have peace now, in this year of grace 1919. That is the first step to the future peace of the world. The next step will be to make sure if we can that the world shall have peace in the year 1950 or 2000. Let us have the peace with Germany and bring our boys home.

This is the immediate thing to do toward the establishment of the world's peace, but there is an issue involved in the league constitution presented to us which far overshadows all others. We are asked to depart now for the first time from the foreign policies of Washington. We are invited to move away from George Washington toward the other end of the line at which stands the sinister figure of Trotzky, the champion of internationalism.

We have in this country a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, the freest and best Government in the world, and we are the great rampart to-day against the anarchy and disorder which have taken possession of Russia and are trying to invade every peaceful country in the world. For Lincoln's Government of the people, for the people, and by the people we are asked to substitute in the United States on many vital points government of, for, and by other people. Pause and consider well before you take this fateful step. I do not say that agreements may not be made among the nations which stand for ordered freedom and civilization, which will do much to secure and preserve the peace of the world; but no such agreement has yet been presented to us. We must beware of the dangers which beset our path. We must not lose by an improvident attempt to reach eternal peace all that we have won by war and sacrifice. We must build no bridges across the chasm which now separates American freedom and order from Russian anarchy and destruction. We must see to it that the democracy of the United States, which has prospered so mightily in the past, is not drawn by any hasty error or by any glittering delusions, through specious devices of supernational government, within the toils of international socialism and anarchy. I wish nothing but good to all the races of men. I hope and pray that peace, unbroken peace, may reign everywhere on earth. But America and the American people are first in my heart now and always. I can never assent to any scheme no matter how fair its outward seeming which is not for the welfare and for the highest and best interest of my own beloved people of whom I am one—the American people—the people of the United States.

Before the conclusion of Mr. LODGE's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts will suspend for a moment. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

After the conclusion of Mr. LODGE's speech,

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I rise particularly for the purpose of referring to what appears to me a scandalous article in one of the great papers this morning. Before I take it up, however, and while the idea is fresh in my mind——

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator from Nebraska say I referred to it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I do not.

Mr. LODGE. I have seen no paper this morning.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not charging the Senator with anything. I am going to exonerate him.

While the idea is fresh in my mind, however, and before it gets out of the minds of those present, I desire to repudiate the suggestion contained in the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that this league will in the slightest degree limit the privilege and the duty of any nation—the United States or any other—to defend itself when attacked, to protect its territory and protect its rights when invaded either by a member of the league or one not a member of the league. That suggestion struck me as so preposterous that I can not allow it to remain in the mind of anyone as a possibility.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if the Senator will allow me, I only want to say it may have struck the Senator from Nebraska as preposterous, but there are other minds, and my point is only emphasized by what he says. He takes one view, honestly, I am sure, and I take another, honestly, I am sure. Let us have it stated in the instrument what it does mean.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The whole league is for the purpose of preventing wars from starting. When war starts against a nation its supreme right of self-defense supersedes everything else, as the Senator knows.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has no right to say I know. It does not appear under this instrument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have yielded, and the Senator from Massachusetts has spoken.

What I rose particularly to take up is an article in this morning's New York Sun, which specifically mentions the names of a number of Senators now present, most of whom attended a conference and dinner at the White House as guests of the President night before last. Let me read a part of the article:

> At midnight last night and early this morning Senators and Representatives who had labored to penetrate Mr. Wilson's mind and to understand his policies were themselves so weary and mind muddled that they were unable to discuss coherently what had taken place.
> This afternoon when they had opportunity to get together to compare notes and to check up one another's recollections they were able to present a clear account of the conversation. The result of this symposium is indeed amazing.

Before I read some of these alleged statements of Senators, permit me to call attention to the fact that there has been a strong desire in Congress, and particularly in the Senate, that the President should take into his confidence the Members of this body; that, responding to that natural desire and doing it as soon as he could after a draft had been made of the proposed constitution, he invited by cable the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the members of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs to dine with him in Washington almost immediately upon his arrival. Senators went there as his guests. Senators were treated as his guests, and I am sure that there is not a Senator here who will question my statement when I say the hospitality and the reception, the treatment and the conversation on the part of the President, were generous, frank, and sincere. He took the Members present into his confidence fully. He answered all questions specifically and definitely and candidly. He allowed himself to be cross-examined, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests to me. Now, is it possible that any Senator coming from such hospitality could use language which has been attributed to Senators in this body? I say it is not; and on behalf of the Senators who are quoted here I here and now specifically deny that they made the statements attributed to them.

First I quote how the paper says Senator BRANDEGEE, of Connecticut, expressed himself:

> I feel as if I had been wandering with Alice in Wonderland and had tea with the Mad Hatter. When I awakened this morning I expected the White Rabbit waiting to go to breakfast with me.

The article continues:

> Senators and Representatives who went to the dinner and heard Mr. Wilson deliver a prose poem eulogizing the British-Wilson league-of-nations plan and who tried by persistent questioning to get detailed information about the plan declare they marveled at Mr. Wilson's apparent ignorance about some parts of the league's constitution. This astonished and embarrassed most of the men, who, pressing question after question upon the President, finally became aware of his lack of precise knowledge concerning all of the 26 articles.

Nothing more preposterously false could be stated, and I aver now that there is not a Senator or Representative who will indorse such a statement, let alone originate it. The President was frank and candid. He opened his heart on international questions, and without having a copy of the constitution before him he talked freely and fluently to the Senators and Representatives, who had copies from which they were reading.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He made no speech.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As the Senator from Mississippi suggests, the President made no speech. He put himself voluntarily in the witness box and said he was ready to answer questions and be cross-examined. There could not have been more complete, candid, and generous treatment afforded to those who were his guests and who are interested in this subject and who have responsibilities as the President has.

But let me continue to quote from the article:

One Senator said to the Sun correspondent: "Believe me, I felt the same blushing embarrassment that used to come over me as a small boy when some boy friend with a balky memory forgot the piece he was bidden to recite and broke down in the middle of it."

Think of attributing such language to a Senator of the United States—"believe me."

Touching on this matter, the impressions of several Senators may be found interesting.

Senator KNOX of Pennsylvania remarked to a group of friends: "The President displayed amazing lack of familiarity with the proposed league constitution."

Senator LODGE of Massachusetts, putting the thought another way, said: "The President seemed actually befuddled about many most important points."

Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH of Michigan confided: "The President's ignorance of the terms of the covenant was amazing."

Senator BRANDEGEE of Connecticut said: "With the wide-open eyes of an ingénue, the President met every legal constitutional or commonsense question with glittering generalities. Even more interesting were totally unexpected admissions the President was induced to make. It is the opinion of a number of Senators that unwittingly, perhaps, he has slain the infant of his dreams by these confessions."

I renew my statement on behalf of the Senators named and deny that they used any such language in reference to the President of the United States, the host of the evening.

Pressed by men eager for scraps of information, prominent among whom were Senator BRANDEGEE, Representative HENRY W. TEMPLE of Pennsylvania, and WILLARD RAGSDALE of South Carolina, the President stated with finality that—

I shall not read all the statements the President is charged with stating with finality, but I will read those that are absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

One of the statements was that he was charged with stating with finality:

The United States must surrender vital points of sovereignty.

The President made no statement which by any possible stretch of the imagination could be distorted into such a statement.

Ireland is to be left to the mercies of England.

The President made no statement that by any possibility could be stretched or interpreted to mean anything of that sort,

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would it be permissible for the Senator to state what the President did say with reference to Ireland.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The President practically stated nothing with reference to Ireland. The Irish question was not under consideration.

Mr. BORAH. But there were questions asked?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was a question asked which was greeted with laughter, and there was nothing more said about it. It was not an issue in the conversation and had nothing to do with it. We were not discussing internal questions but international questions.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator say the President made no response to the question which was presented to him with reference to the independence of Ireland?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was not a serious question presented; it was not presented in a serious way.

Mr. BORAH. Pardon me. Does the Senator say the President made no response to it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do. However, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] corrects me. He says the President stated that the league had nothing to do with domestic and internal questions. He did state that; he stated it several times during the evening; and in stating it he said the league had nothing to do with the immigration question. This question has been raised here as a great bugaboo against the league of nations, the attempt being made to arouse prejudice against the league of nations by construing it to bring the Japanese immigration question into the realm of arbitration.

Mr. BORAH. Then, if I understand the Senator correctly, what the President said with reference to the question, since he has raised the question himself with reference to Ireland, was that the league had nothing to do with it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] recollected that.

Mr. BORAH. And that was a matter, therefore, with which the league had nothing to do, but which must necessarily be settled by Ireland and England?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator can draw his own conclusion. It evidently and obviously is not an international question at this time with which the league has to do.

Mr. BORAH. Then, if the league has nothing to do with it, of course it must be left where it was before, between Ireland and England?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator can draw his own conclusion. I am dealing with facts. I am dealing with the fact that one of the great papers of the country has arraigned Senators of the United States as guilty of the grossest violation of a decent respect for an intimate conference at a hospitable entertainment.

Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President, the Senator is attacking an article in a paper and, indirectly, Senators.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I am defending Senators; I am not attacking Senators.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I observe. The Senator now admits that the question which the paper discusses was brought up, and that the President did make an answer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] corrected me when I said the President made no answer. It passed so momentarily that I did not recall that he made any answer. The Senator from Mississippi states that he made the answer that domestic and internal questions were not subjects of the league's jurisdiction; and, of course, he did state that. He stated it repeatedly during the evening when domestic questions were presented.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] are at a difference as to what the President said upon that important matter, other Senators might have understood it in a different way.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I accept the recollection of the Senator from Mississippi, as it is very definite.

I come, now, to another——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Nebraska, as I understood him, stated a moment ago that the President, in this conference, stated that the league of nations would have nothing to do with the question of Japanese immigration. I wish to ask the Senator, if I understood him correctly, how the President could make that statement in view of article 12 of the constitution of the league of nations, which provides that:

The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy, they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council; and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can not take the time of the Senate just now to enter into a discussion with the Senator from Washington of the merits of the league of nations. I did not rise for that purpose, but I will say to him that it is very obvious from the reading of the constitution, and it was very obvious from conversation with the President, that the league is intended only for the purpose of assisting in the settlement of disputes which may arise on international questions; and questions like immigration and marriage and divorce and the voting franchise and all other domestic questions remain solely and only in the keeping of every nation member of the league.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not press his interruptions.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator deny that the dispute between the United States and Japan over Japanese immigration, which was particularly of concern on the Pacific coast, was an international question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I affirm that immigration to this country or emigration from this country is purely a domestic question; that every country has the right to protect its citizenship; that every country has the right to say what aliens shall be allowed to come to its shores. It is sometimes provided by treaty with various countries who will be allowed to come.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, what effect the constitution of the league would have upon this question must be determined by the language of the proposed constitution, which I just read, and not by what the President says about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Japan evidently realizes the utter impossibility of bringing the Japanese question under the jurisdiction of the league. The mighty effort which Japan made in Paris to secure a declaration of the conference that race equality should be recognized and no discrimination made because of race was voted down unanimously by the members of the conference. When Japan failed in that she lost the last shred of hope of bringing the immigration question within the jurisdiction of the league, if she desired to do so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Notwithstanding that, here is a provision which covers every question which can be conceived of, absolutely without limitation or exception.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, that is where the Senator and I differ.

Now, I come to the next statement which the President is charged with having made with finality:

Chinese and Japanese exclusion goes out of American control into the hands of league control.

The exact opposite of that was the unqualified declaration of the President in answer to definite questions, because the President stated with finality and energy that the immigration question was a question purely and entirely domestic and wholly within the control of the United States. The statement was unqualified. That is one reason why I do not think this correspondent got this incorrect quotation from a Senator. I can not conceive of any Senator willing to misrepresent the matter or with not having intelligence enough to understand what the President said.

This is another statement which the President is said to have made with finality:

American troops would be compelled at need to participate in purely European wars.

The President made no such statement. That might be concluded by some Senator in reading the constitution, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has concluded, but the President did not make it.

In conclusion, I desire to say that one of the paragraphs reads as follows:

Every Senator, KNOX, LODGE, BRANDEGEE, MCCUMBER, HITCHCOCK, and naming a few who discussed the dinner to-day, agreed that the President actually made these statements or admissions.

I have not seen this article until a few minutes ago. I had not any knowledge that anybody pretended that the President had made such statements. I certainly made no admission of the sort, and I deny, on behalf of my colleagues, that they made any such statements.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the unanimous order entered last night.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order under that agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 4396 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 27 occurs the following:

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that at the close of morning business to-morrow morning the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar for unobjected bills, and continue the call until the calendar is called once in its entirety for unobjected bills only.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The attention of the present occupant of the chair, who was not in the Senate at the time of the entry of this order and who did not personally know of it, was not called to the unanimous-consent agreement at the expiration of the morning hour. At 12 o'clock, when the morning hour expired, that automatically closed the unfinished business, and it was in order, under the unanimous-consent agreement which the Chair has just quoted, to proceed to the call of the calendar. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was occupying the floor, and the Chair, not having his attention called to the order, laid down the unfinished business, which was the conference report on the census bill. The Chair holds that it is in order, under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore quoted, only to proceed with the call of the calendar for unobjected bills. The Secretary will therefore call the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the call of the calendar shall have been finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will now state the first business on the calendar.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 39) to appropriate $3,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to prosecute the work of eradicating the southern cattle tick was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 53) authorizing the President to appoint two additional Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 1725) to stimulate the production of food upon private and public lands within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. SWANSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 91) extending the authority of and provision for the committee appointed under S. Res. 92, Sixty-third Congress, first session, to investigate the charges of alleged attempts to influence legislation was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

The bill (S. 23) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let that bill go over.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, has that bill been objected to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Who made the objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

The bill (S. 3311) to increase and expedite the supply of munitions of war was announced as next in order.

Mr. SWANSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1795) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 951) to provide for the sinking of artesian wells, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 758) to increase the productive agricultural area of the United States by the reclamation of arid and swamp lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, while that bill is before the Senate I desire to offer some amendments to it, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be received and ordered to be printed. The Chair hears none.

The amendments referred to are as follows:

On page 2, in line 20, section 2, following the words "swamp lands" insert "in any of the States of the Union."

On page 4, in line 11, section 3, strike out the word "voted" and insert in lieu thereof "authorized in accordance with State irrigation or drainage laws."

On page 4, in lines 12 and 13, strike out the words, "not to exceed 4 per cent per annum."

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to amend section 14 of the food-control act by increasing the guaranteed minimum price of wheat for the crop of 1918 from $2 to $2.50 per bushel was announced as next in order.

Mr. SWANSON. Let that joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over.

The bill (S. 3899) to repeal the sixth section of an act approved July 12, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the bills from Order of Business 332 down to Order of Business 368 were reported from the Banking and Currency Committee. They have been repeatedly objected to; and it is so late now in the session that it would be impossible to get any action of the House upon them. While some of them are of importance, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate to simply have them objected to one by one. I therefore object to the present consideration of the bills from Order of Business 332 down to and including Order of Business 368.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma being objected to by him go over.

The bill (S. 3260) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wilbur F. Lawton was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 4459) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 249) to print the article entitled "The Electoral College and Presidential Suffrage" as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over.

The bill (S. 4221) for the relief of private owners of lands within or near the Bitter Root National Forest, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The bill (S. 4366) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1913 (38 Stat. L., pp. 4, 75), was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that that bill only relates to the distribution of public documents to public libraries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request to proceed with the consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought probably if I merely called attention to the character of the bill the objection to it would be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that debate is not in order, and the Chair is compelled to enforce the rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But there may be debate of five minutes under the regular rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not under this unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought if I merely called the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the character of the bill he might withdraw his objection. That is all I desired to do. I do not want to discuss the bill. This bill relates to the distribution of public documents to public libraries.

Mr. OVERMAN. The only objection I have to it is that it proposes an amendment to a bill that has not yet come over to us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This relates to a bill which has already passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then I will withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill, I will say to the Chair.

Mr. KENYON. May I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KENYON. As suggested by the Senator from Washington, if a Senator objects to a bill, is there not opportunity afforded to those who favor the bill to call attention to what the bill is, when possibly the Senator objecting may withdraw his objection, as has been done in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Iowa that that could be done privately, but under the rule governing this unanimous-consent agreement, and under that agreement itself, debate is not in order.

Mr. KENYON. If a Senator had to go to every other Senator privately to explain a bill in order to get him to withdraw his objection to its consideration, it seems to me it would not work very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator, of course, understands that the right to debate a measure at all is the right of unlimited debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, has it not been the custom to recognize a Senator long enough to ask the Senator objecting if he would not withdraw his objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When no objection is made; but when an objection is made, it is, of course, the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When objection has been made, has not the custom been that a Senator could ask if the Senator making the objection would not withhold the objection for a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In this case objection was made and repeated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know; but, if my recollection serves me, I have seen Senators always given an opportunity to ask the Senator objecting if he would not withhold the objection for a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That may be done by unanimous consent, and debate may be had with unanimous consent; but when an objection is made, the Chair must enforce the rule.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think a query like that would be debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, of course, is compelled to hold that it does constitute debate. Any remarks upon a bill of whatever nature constitutes debate under the well-known rules of parliamentary law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course; but in this case the remarks, not being upon the bill, but an appeal to the courtesy of the Senator to withdraw his objection, I thought it might be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is held to be debate by all of the precedents with which the present occupant of the chair is familiar.

The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Washington to the pending bill and inquires whether amendments are to be presented?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no amendment to present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this is Calendar No. 449, is it not?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It makes a slight amendment in a sundry civil act heretofore passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was informed by the Secretary that there were notations on the bill to the effect that amendments were to be made. Of course, that does not constitute a formal amendment, and perhaps should not be presented to the Senate, but, at the suggestion of the Secretary, the matter is called to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that I called attention to the proposed amendments when the bill was up once before, and I now move to strike out the word "depositories," in line 2, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the word "depositaries."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Also in line 4, where it reads "may be made when librarians," I move to strike out "librarians," and insert "libraries."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3379) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange public coal lands for private coal lands in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2898) to provide for the erection of a public building at Knoxville, Knox County, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ELIZABETH T. WELLS.

The bill (S. 1930) for the relief of Elizabeth T. Wells was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado to kindly explain the bill. It is a bill for the relief of Elizabeth T. Wells.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mrs. Wells is the widow of Charles Wells, who enlisted in the service, as I understand, under the first call of President Lincoln for 90 days, obtained a furlough, and did not return to duty, thinking his contract with the Government had expired. For that reason it seems to me that the relief ought to be granted.

Mr. SMOOT. The only way in which a pension can be secured for Mrs. Wells is to first pass a bill removing the charge of desertion from her late husband, and then the question of whether or not she shall receive a pension should go to the Committee on Pensions and not to the Committee on Military Affairs. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This bill does not grant any pension.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what it is designed to do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It simply seeks to remove a charge of desertion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to debate the bill, and, under objection, it goes over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1857) for the relief of Patrick McMahon was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) creating a commission to report a plan for the adoption of a national budget system was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, on page 4, line 5, after the word "resolution," it is proposed to insert the words "within the limit of the amount appropriated in section 5," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That said commission is authorized to employ such experts and such clerical assistance as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution within the limit of the amount appropriated in section 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to say that some of the bills which have recently been called and passed over have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. I am making no question about their going over, because the House can not possibly act on them at this session, although many of them are meritorious measures.

The bill (S. 4523) to transfer the tract of land known as the Lighthouse Reservation, at North Point, Md., from the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce to the jurisdiction of the War Department, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That bill might go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3219) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

LOAD LINES FOR VESSELS IN FOREIGN TRADE.

The bill (S. 4991) to establish load lines for vessels in foreign trade was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment in section 4, on page 2, line 19, after the word "Act," to insert:

Provided further, That this exception shall not apply in the case of ships of any foreign country in which it appears to the Secretary of Commerce that corresponding provisions are not extended to vessels of the United States.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized and directed to establish by regulations from time to time in respect of vessels of 1,000 gross tons or over the load lines and marks thereof beyond which it shall not be lawful to load such ships in salt water for the foreign trade, and such regulations when duly published shall have the effect of law.

SEC. 2. That collectors of customs shall refuse clearance to any vessel subject to such regulations until such regulations have been complied with unless waived by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Commerce shall appoint a committee of the American Bureau of Shipping or, at the option of the owner of the ship, a committee of any other corporation or association for the survey or registry of shipping, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, or any officer of the Government specially designated by him for the purpose, to approve and certify the position of marks of load lines on ships subject to the regulations herein provided.

SEC. 4. That this act and the regulations herein provided for shall apply to vessels of the United States and, after due notice, to like vessels of foreign countries: Provided, That whenever the Secretary of Commerce shall certify that the laws and regulations in force in any foreign country relating to safe loading are equally effective with the regulations established under this act, the Secretary of Commerce may direct, on proof that a ship of that country has complied with such foreign laws and regulations, that such ship shall not be refused clearance for failure to comply with the regulations provided for by this act: Provided further, That this exception shall not apply in the case of ships of any foreign country in which it appears to the Secretary of Commerce that corresponding provisions are not extended to vessels of the United States.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect 60 days after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY J. DAVIS.

The bill (S. 923) for the relief of Henry J. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Henry J. Davis, who served under the name of Henry Davis, and who was a private of Company K, Seventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that company and regiment on the 29th of November, 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COST-PLUS CONTRACTS.

The bill (S. 4726) to prohibit "cost-plus" governmental contracts, and to prohibit the payment of commission for the awarding of Government contracts, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Let that bill go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does any Senator object to that bill?

Mr. KING. I should be glad if the Senator from Montana would allow this bill to be considered. It was considered by the Judiciary Committee and favorably acted upon.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but I object to it simply because it will be impossible to give the proper consideration to a measure of this kind at this time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I regret very much that the Senator objects to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

CLAIMS OF CHEROKEE NATION.

The bill (S. 10) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of that bill. The Cherokee Nation is about to expire, and it ought to be wound up; its affairs ought to be closed. This is just a question of interest due to the nation on an investment fund. It ought to be disposed of. It has to be disposed of at some time, and I hope the Senator will withdraw the objection.

Mr. GRONNA. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine the claim of the Cherokee Nation against the United States for interest, in addition to all other interests heretofore allowed and paid, alleged to be owing from the United States to the Cherokee Nation on the funds arising from the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905 (40 Ct. Cls., p. 252), in favor of the Cherokee Nation. The said court is authorized, empowered, and directed to carefully examine all laws, treaties, or agreements, and especially the agreement between the United States and the Cherokee Nation of December 19, 1891, ratified by the United States March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., p. 640, sec. 10), in any manner affecting or relating to the question of interest on said funds, as the same shall be brought to the attention of the court by the Cherokee Nation under this act. And if it shall be found that under any of the said treaties, laws, or agreements interest on one or more of the said funds, either in whole or in part, has not been paid and is rightfully owing from the United States to the Cherokee Nation, the court shall render final judgment therefor against the United States and in favor of the Cherokee Nation, either party to have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases. The said claim shall be presented within one year after the passage of this act by petition in the Court of Claims by the Cherokee Nation as plaintiff against the United States as defendant, and the petition shall be verified by the attorney employed to prosecute said claim by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief. A copy of the petition shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in said cause. The law and practice and rules of procedure in said courts shall be the practice and law in this case. The attorney for the Cherokee Nation shall be paid the fee as stipulated in his contract of employment, not to exceed 15 per cent on the gross amount, if any, that shall be recovered for said Cherokee Nation. The amounts recovered for said Cherokee Nation, if any, except the fee to said attorney, shal be disbursed under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior to the parties entitled thereto in the manner prescribed by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5025) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5026) to amend an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 336) directing the War Trade Board to report to the Senate to what extent the export of cotton is being restricted, the reasons for such course, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 358) to create a committee of eight Senators, which shall be charged with the duty of proceeding to Paris at the proper time in order to be present during the peace conference, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5052) to make section 5 of the Post Office appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, as amended by section 1110, war-revenue act of October 3, 1917, applicable to the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, fortunately this bill is already out of the way, having been embodied in the new revenue act, and I therefore move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

PURCHASE OF MILITARY SUPPLIES.

The resolution (S. Res. 346) directing the Secretary of War to transmit to the Senate the names of all commissioned officers in the Army and other persons who have been since April 6, 1917, authorized by the War Department to purchase ordnance, quartermaster, or other supplies for the military departments, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have that resolution considered, if there is no objection. It merely asks for certain information.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read. It is not long.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War transmit to the Senate the names of all commissioned officers in the Army, and of all other persons who, since the 6th day of April, 1917, have been authorized by the War Department to purchase ordnance, quartermaster, medical, and other supplies for the use of the Military Establishment of the United States, and to inform the Senate as to what interest as shareholders, partners, employees, or security holders such officers or persons may have, directly or indirectly, so far as the Secretary may be advised, in any corporation, company, partnership, firm, or business which has been awarded contracts for the furnishing of ordnance, quartermaster, medical, or other supplies for the Military Establishment.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 358) authorizing and directing the payment of the usual compensation of Representatives in Congress to those Members of the House who have been discharged from their military or naval duties was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives to pay to those Members of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-fifth Congress who have been serving with the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war with Germany and her allies, compensation from and after the day of their discharge from military or naval duty at the rate provided by law for Representatives in Congress, upon the resumption and during the continuance of their duties as Representatives in Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, Senate joint resolution 121, with relation to a budget system, was passed. That joint resolution provided that the commission should report by the 1st day of March, 1919. The joint resolution was drawn some time ago. Of course that is impossible; and I should like to recur to that measure in order that I may offer an amendment to change it so that the commission shall report on January 1, 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to recur to Senate joint resolution 121. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection. Without objection, the vote by which the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the privilege of amending the joint resolution by striking out "March 1, 1919," and inserting "January 1, 1920," where it appears on lines 2 and 3, and the same amendment on lines 23 and 24 of section 2.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The preamble was stricken out.

PAY TO ARMY AND NAVY NURSE CORPS.

The bill (H. R. 12860) granting to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female), Army field clerks, field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and civil employees of the Army pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to give to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female), Army field clerks, field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and civil employees of the Army full pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States; and their right to such full pay and allowances shall not be abridged or lost by reason of absence from duty when that absence is caused by involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States. Any captivity by the enemy shall be construed to be involuntary until the contrary shall be affirmatively established.

All rights and privileges hereunder shall be in force from April 6, 1917, to the end of the existing war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COPIES OF CONTRACTS.

The bill (S. 4733) requiring the filing of copies of all contracts for services rendered or materials furnished to the United States, or certain contractors and agencies of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that bill was included in one of the appropriation bills, or in the revenue bill, and in part has now been enacted into law. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PROMOTIONS IN OVERSEAS SERVICE.

The resolution (S. Res. 359) requesting the Secretary of War to furnish the Senate full information in reference to promotions in overseas service, and also of officers who have not seen overseas service, etc., was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to furnish to the Senate full information in reference to promotions in overseas service.

Also full information as to promotions already made of officers who have not seen overseas service.

Also any plans he may have of equalizing promotions, to the end that those who have become entitled to promotions by reason of service abroad or at home shall be accorded such promotion.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4922) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

D. C. DARROCH.

The bill (S. 4773) for the relief of D. C. Darroch was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that D. C. Darroch, former private Company B, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, and that no pension, pay, bounty, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas explain the bill briefly?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This soldier voluntarily enlisted in the Union Army when he was under 16 years of age. He served for three years, made a gallant soldier, was captured, sent to a parole camp, and paroled for the rest of the war. While in the parole camp he violated one of the rules, and was subjected to what he considered very severe treatment, and went home. He could not be considered as a deserter in the ordinary sense, and I trust that the bill granting this relief will be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALIDATION OF CONTRACTS.

The bill (S. 5261) to legalize informal or defective orders for war supplies and materials, to provide for the cancellation of orders and contracts, for the reimbursement of contractors and manufacturers, for the adjustment of claims or canceled or partially filled contracts and orders, and to provide relief for contractors pending final determination, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that bill, I think, has received consideration. I shall not ask for its indefinite postponement, but I ask to have it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture certain war material suitable for improvement of highways, to be distributed among the several States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments, in line 4, to strike out "and directed" and insert "at his discretion," and on line 5, after the word "available," to insert "and suitable," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized at his discretion to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available and suitable war material not needed for the purposes of the War Department, but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same be distributed among the highway departments of the several States upon the same basis of distribution as provided by the Federal-aid road act, approved July 11, 1916.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed, because its provisions are included in the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5191) for the relief of private owners of lands within or near the Bitter Root, Lolo, or Missoula National Forests, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4603) to protect interstate and foreign commerce against bribery and other corrupt trade practices was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4261) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NAVAL BRIG "NIAGARA."

The bill (S. 3063) for the repair, preservation, care, and future maintenance of the restored historical naval brig Niagara, Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's flagship in the Battle of Lake Erie, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I should like the Senate to give consideration to this bill, and I am sure no one can have any objection to it. Very briefly, it is for the preservation of the flagship Niagara, of Perry's victorious fleet at the Battle of Put in Bay.

I do not believe that the bill requires any explanation on my part. This historic vessel was rescued from the bottom of Lake Erie some years ago and restored, and it has been a difficult matter to preserve it for the view of Americans of the present day. It is proposed to devote the modest sum of $15,000 to its complete assignment in the waters of the harbor of Erie, Pa., and, under Government regulation and control, to maintain it for all time as an object of veneration and interest to visiting Americans.

I think it is a fine thing to do, and there ought to be no objection whatever to the passage of the measure. One could speak at length upon the subject, uttering pleasing thoughts, but I forbear if the Senate will do the more practical thing and consider and pass the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I had not intended saying anything on this measure. It happens that by accident I introduced it. It is not a sectional matter in any way. All the States on the Great Lakes have made contributions by their State legislatures and have erected a magnificent memorial, costing several million dollars, I think, on the shores of Lake Erie, in the State of Ohio. This old flagship is one of the most remarkable and striking historical relics in connection with the American Navy and in connection with a wonderful sea fight. This memorial——

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PENROSE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not hear that he withdrew it. Sometimes one gets so accustomed to hearing his own voice that he fails to hear the voices of others. I apologize for detaining the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates the sum of $15,000, to be used for the repair, preservation, care, and maintenance of the restored historical naval brig Niagara, Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's flagship, in which he won the Battle of Lake Erie, and which is now fast going to decay in the harbor of Erie, Pa., and provides that said restored historical naval vessel shall become the property of the United States, and the city of Erie, Pa., shall provide free of charge a suitable site to be selected in said city or at the public docks of said city, where a concrete basin shall be built and the vessel set therein with running water around it that can be shut off or on and a gangway built leading from the ship to the shore giving the appearance of the vessel being afloat, historical relics of said battle to be collected and arranged on board and all placed on exhibition free of cost to the public, and a portable deck house shall be built to cover the vessel during the winter months: Provided further, That said sum of $15,000 shall be expended under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Navy under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and who shall see that the provisions of this act are carried out at the earliest practicable time to prevent the total decay of said historical old naval vessel; and shall include in the estimates he recommends for the naval appropriation act each year a sum sufficient to provide a competent ship keeper for said vessel, who shall be paid a fixed monthly salary and be provided with quarters, heat, and light, and shall reside on board said vessel, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy from applicants who have been honorably discharged or retired from the naval service and of good character, and for the repair, preservation, care, and maintenance of said historical naval vessel: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a local commission of five prominent citizens of the city of Erie, Pa., who, under his direction, shall assist in carrying out the provisions of this act at the earliest practicable time, and who, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, shall have local charge of said vessel, the historical relics of the naval battle kept on board, and the ship keeper; and who shall report semiannually to the Secretary of the Navy the condition of said vessel and the site on which it sets and make any recommendations necessary for the repair, preservation, care, and maintenance of said historical naval vessel; and the site shall be selected and recommended by said local commission and approved by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That said naval vessel may be used for a local Navy recruiting station in the city of Erie, Pa., whenever it may be required for that purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE COLORADO AND CANYON DIABLO RIVERS BRIDGES.

The bill (S. 5277) reappropriating and making immediately available the $42,500 appropriated for the construction of two bridges over the Little Colorado and Canyon Diablo Rivers, near the Leupp Agency, Ariz., by the act approved March 2, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that has been included in the Indian appropriation bill. I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

LANDS IN OREGON.

The bill (H. R. 13042) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, within his discretion, to continue to not beyond January 12, 1929, the segregation of the lands embraced in approved Oregon segregation list No. 13, under the Carey Act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon explain what the bill provides and what the result of it will be, just in a few words? I do not find any report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this is a bill extending the time for the completion of a Carey Act project under the State of Oregon. The time has been extended once until January, 1919, and unless it is extended for another term it can not be completed. The State asks for it, and the Secretary of the Interior recommends it.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER RIGHTS IN IDAHO.

The bill (H. R. 12579) to grant to citizens of Malheur County, Oreg., the right to cut timber in the State of Idaho for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Malheur County, Oreg., was announced as next in order.

Mr. NUGENT. Let that go over.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of that bill. It is favorably reported from the Public Lands Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that section 8 of an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, chapter 561, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1891, chapter 559, page 1093, volume 26, United States Statutes at Large, be amended by adding thereto the following:

That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits, under the provisions of the eighth section of the act of March 3, 1891, to citizens of Malheur County, Oreg., to cut timber in the State of Idaho for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove the timber so cut to Malheur County, State of Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINAM NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, on July 8, 1918, when I was absent from the Senate in the Military Affairs Committee, Order of Business 457, being Senate bill 3864, to add certain lands to the Minam National Forest, Oreg., was passed by the Senate and was sent over to the House. In the meantime the House passed a bill identical in its provisions. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I ask that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of that bill and that the bill as it came to the Senate be passed, because it is exactly similar to the bill which the Senate passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oregon will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. The Committee on Public Lands is discharged from the further consideration of House bill 10394, and the Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10394) to add certain lands to the Minam National Forest, Oreg. It provides that the following-described lands shall be included in and made a part of the Minam National Forest, subject to all prior valid adverse rights, and that the lands shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting national forests: Sections 34 and 35, the north half of section 36, township 7 south, range 43 east, and sections 2 and 3, township 8 south, range 43 east, all of Willamette meridian, in Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 127) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870, authorizing the Postmaster General to continue in use in the Postal Service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand stamp patents, or otherwise, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF CHARLES BOCKMAN, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 978) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Bockman, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, the sum of $5,335.71, the said payment being a refund of taxes erroneously exacted and paid on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by him from United States bonded warehouse, which spirits had been manufactured and bonded prior to July 20, 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was stricken out.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is there anyone here who can explain in detail why this amount should be paid?

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5065) amending section 4904 of the Revised Statutes was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5066) amending chapter 143 of the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stats., p. 625), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order. It proposes to amend chapter 143 of the act of March 3, 1883, to read as follows:

CLAIMS OF CHEROKEE NATION.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to Senate bill 10, which was passed over a few minutes ago. The House, by House bill 357, passed the same substantial matter. I should like to ask the reconsideration of the action of the Senate on that bill and the substitution of House bill 357, and I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to it.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Oklahoma please state his request again?

Mr. OWEN. I ask to substitute H. R. 357 for Senate bill 10, which was passed. It is on the calendar, Order of Business No. 555, and the Senate passed it a few minutes ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 10. Without objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 10 was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of H. R. 357, and that the bill be considered by the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 357) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States. It confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine the claim of the Cherokee Nation against the United States for interest, in addition to all other interest heretofore allowed and paid, alleged to be owing from the United States to the Cherokee Nation on the funds arising from the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905 (40th Court of Claims Rept., p. 252), in favor of the Cherokee Nation. The said court is authorized, empowered, and directed to carefully examine all laws, treaties, or agreements, and especially the agreement between the United States and the Cherokee Nation of December 19, 1891, ratified by the United States March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., p. 640, sec. 10), in any manner affecting or relating to the question of interest on said funds, as the same shall be brought to the attention of the court by the Cherokee Nation under this act. And if it shall be found that under any of the said treaties, laws, or agreements interest on one or more of the said funds, either in whole or in part, has not been paid and is rightfully owing from the United States to the Cherokee Nation, the court shall render final judgment therefor against the United States and in favor of the Cherokee Nation, either party to have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases. The said claim shall be presented within one year after the passage of this act by petition in the Court of Claims by the Cherokee Nation as plaintiff against the United States as defendant, and the petition shall be verified by the attorney employed to prosecute said claim by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief. A copy of the petition shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in said cause. The law and practice and rules of procedure in said courts shall be the practice and law in this case.

The attorney for the Cherokee Nation shall be paid such fee as the Court of Claims may find reasonable, the same to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amount stipulated in his contract of employment, nor amount to more than 10 per cent of the sum, if any, to which the Cherokee Nation shall be found entitled. The amount recovered, if any, for the Cherokee Nation shall be disbursed under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior to the parties entitled thereto in the manner prescribed by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESIGNATIONS OF OFFICERS AND DISCHARGES OF ENLISTED MEN.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 196) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept resignations of officers and to grant discharges to enlisted men in the Army under certain conditions was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War, in demobilizing the armed forces within the United States, to accept resignations of officers who were commissioned for the present emergency under act of May 18, 1917, and preceding acts, and to grant discharges to enlisted men enlisted under the act of May 18, 1917, and under preceding acts, upon their offer of resignation or application for discharge immediately in the following classes of cases:

First. Where the officer or enlisted man has dependents drawing an allowance from the Government because of the applicant's service.

Second. Where the officer or enlisted man presents an affidavit from a person or officer of a corporation making a bona fide offer of a civil position to such officer or enlisted man.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, since this joint resolution was reported out by the Military Affairs Committee that committee has had the same matter under consideration again and has amended the joint resolution. I ask that the amendment which

I send up to the desk be used as substitute for the original resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 it is proposed to strike out lines 1 to 10 and to insert:

First. Where the officer or enlisted man has dependents drawing an allowance from the Government because of the applicant's service.

Second. Where the officer or enlisted man presents an affidavit from any person, firm, partnership, or officer of a corporation making a bona fide offer of a civil position to such officer or enlisted man.

Third. Where the officer or enlisted man submits affidavits showing that he is needed on a farm upon which he proposes to work during the current year.

Fourth. Those who present affidavits showing that their education has been interrupted by their Army service and that if discharged they will continue their studies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMBASSADOR TO REPUBLIC OF PERU.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 197) authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to the Republic of Peru was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill which passed the other day contained a provision for the salary of the new ambassador. I had the impression that this bill had also passed, but if it has not passed it should be passed at the present time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, as the representative of the United States, an ambassador to the Republic of Peru, who shall receive as his compensation the sum of $17,500 per annum.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. CROIX CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 4699) for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, to be expended under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the purchase of subsistence supplies in relieving cases of actual distress and suffering among those needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin whose cases are referred to in report of January 13, 1915, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives March 3, 1915, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., pp. 582-605), and printed as House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $141,000, in full settlement of the claims against the United States of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin whose names appear upon the final roll prepared by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the said act of August 1, 1914, and which final roll is contained in the said report of the Secretary of the Interior, March 3, 1915, and in said House Document No. 1663.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to distribute said fund of $141,000 per capita among said Indians appearing upon said final roll, or, in his discretion, the per capita share of each of said Indians may be credited to him and expended by said Secretary for his benefit in such manner, including the purchase of land, as he may deem proper: Provided, That no part of the funds hereby appropriated shall be paid to any person or persons as attorney's fees: Provided further, That where any of said enrolled Indians have died since enrollment the Secretary shall ascertain and pay their pro rata shares to their proper distributees, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further, That one-half of said sum shall be expended in the purchase of land in northern Wisconsin for agricultural purposes, such land to be allotted to said St. Croix Chippewa Indians, each Indian to receive land to the value of one-half of his distributive share in the fund appropriated by this act, patents therefor to be issued in accordance with the general allotment laws of the United States. The land so selected shall be situated in organized school districts, and not be purchased in bodies of more than one section, and said bodies shall not adjoin each other. Such land shall be selected by an agent of the Indian Office familiar with lands in northern Wisconsin and an agent to be selected by said St. Croix Chippewa Indians. If these two disagree as to the value or desirability of any particular tract of land, they shall agree upon a third person, who shall act with the two agents aforesaid in determining such matter of disagreement. No land shall be purchased hereunder unless and until the purchasing agents, together with said third person so selected, shall in person go upon each tract so purchased.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to strike from said final roll the name of Maggie Staples, No. 39 thereof, and also strike therefrom the name or names of any other Indians who shall hereafter be found to have received an allotment of land on any Indian reservation: Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any of the persons whose names shall be so stricken from the final roll by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WALSH. I inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin if this bill is not in substance in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. LENROOT. It is.

Mr. WALSH. Then why should we pass it now?

Mr. MYERS. I should like to say that it seems quite probable the Indian appropriation bill may not pass, I am sorry to say.

Mr. LENROOT. If this bill is passed, it will avoid any question of order about the item in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no doubt about the Indian appropriation bill passing in the next two or three hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent that the report on Senate bill 4699 may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The report is as follows:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred S. 4699, for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin, having considered the same, report thereon with an amendment in the form of a substitute, with the recommendation that when so amended the bill do pass.

By an act of Congress approved August 1, 1914, the Secretary of the Interior was directed to cause an investigation to be made of the condition and tribal rights of the so-called St. Croix Chippewa Indians residing in northern Wisconsin. Among other things he was required to ascertain what tribal rights, if any, they had with any band or tribe of Indians residing in either Wisconsin or Minnesota and what benefits in land or money they would have received had they removed to a reservation or had not been excluded from enrollment and allotment with the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889. The Secretary was further directed to cause a census and enrollment of said Indians with recommendations for their relief as he might deem necessary.

On March 3, 1915, the Secretary made his final report to Congress as directed (Doc. No. 1663, 63d Cong., 3d sess.). In this report 95 Indians were found to be entitled to benefits from the Government under the treaty of September 30, 1854, and that they would be entitled to between $1,000 and $1,500 each.

This bill is for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior.

In a report upon a bill introduced in the House of Representatives upon this same subject the Secretary states:

"In further explanation of the failure of these Indians to remove to their respective reservations following the treaty, supra, I learn from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that some of the subchiefs and many members of the band of Chief Buck did not understand that the present Lac Courte Oreille Indian Reservation established by said treaty was to be their future home; that they believed the lands embracing the waters of the St. Croix and Yellow Rivers were to be set aside for them as their home and hunting grounds; and that they never ceded or relinquished such country to the United States. I am also advised that the Indians themselves understood that there were not sufficient lands on the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation to provide for them should they have removed thereto, nor could they have made a living in such event."

This bill was referred to the Secretary of the Interior for report, and his report is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 21, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your reference of November 25, 1918, for report on a copy of S. 4699, "for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin."

The bill provides for an appropriation of $9,500 for the immediate relief of these Indians named upon the final roll prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, under the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 582, 605); and for an additional appropriation of $142,500 to be paid to, or expended for the benefit of, the said enrolled Indians. The bill further provides, in effect, that the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to any attorney or attorneys who may now represent or may have heretofore represented the said Indians a sum not exceeding 5 per cent of the amount so appropriated.

On January 24, 1916, I had the honor to report to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives on H. R. 5774, for the relief of these Indians, which bill carried an item of but $125,000. It was said therein after setting out the merits of the claim that one of the 95 enrolled persons (No. 39, Maggie Staples) was found to have received an allotment of land and was not entitled to further benefits from the Government; and that another enrolled Indian (No. 81, Bet-to-wash-a-no-quah) was charged with having received an allotment with the Chippewas of the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation, Wis. It was accordingly recommended therein that the bill be so amended as to authorize the Secretary to strike from the final roll the name of Maggie Staples and also drop therefrom the name of any other Indians who should hereafter be found to have received allotments of land on any Indian reservation; and further, that no part of the money appropriated should be paid to any of the persons whose names were stricken from the said final roll.

With the letter of March 3, 1915, I transmitted to Congress a copy of the report dated January 13, 1915, from the official who investigated the conditions among these Indians (H. Doc. No. 1663, 63d Cong., 3d sess.), from which it clearly appears that they are in the main doing fairly well as farmers, etc., and that there are a few needy cases among them—those living in the woods in tepees or wigwams and subsisting mainly on roots and muskrats.

It was suggested in the report mentioned that an appropriation of not to exceed $1,000 would be sufficient to purchase subsistence supplies to prevent suffering in these few instances. Further, it was shown in that report that these Indians who were placed on the roll as entitled to benefits should each be paid from $1,000 to $1,500 for allotments of lands to which they would have been entitled under the provisions of the Chippewa treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. L., 1109), had they removed to their respective reservations. Should the maximum sum of $1,500 be allowed for 94 persons so found entitled it would aggregate $141,000. This would make the total to be appropriated by the bill, should the $1,000 for immediate relief be granted, but $142,000 instead of $143,000 carried by the present bill.

I have no information as to any attorneys having rendered services to these Indians. In fact, the records show that the investigation into their status and the enrollment were made in accordance with the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 582–605), by an official from the Indian Bureau without the aid of any attorneys whatsoever.

It is accordingly recommended that the bill be amended as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out all after the word "of" to the end of the page and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"One thousand dollars to be expended under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the purchase of subsistence supplies in relieving cases of actual distress and suffering among those needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin whose cases are referred to in report of January 13, 1915, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives March 3, 1915, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., 582, 605), and printed as House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session."

Page 2, strike out all of sections 2, 3, and 4 to the end of bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $141,000 in full settlement of the claims against the United States of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin whose names appear upon the final roll prepared by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the said act of August 1, 1914, and which final roll is contained in the said report of the Secretary of the Interior, March 3, 1915, and in said House Document No. 1663.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to distribute said fund of $141,000 per capita among said Indians appearing upon said final roll, or, in his discretion, the per capita share of each said Indian may be credited to him and expended by said Secretary for his benefit in such manner, including the purchase of land, as he may deem proper: Provided, That no part of the funds hereby appropriated shall be paid to any persons as attorney's fees: And provided further, That where any of said enrolled Indians have died since enrollment the Secretary shall ascertain and pay their pro rata shares to their proper distributees under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to strike from the said final roll the name of Maggie Staples, No. 39 thereof, and also to strike therefrom the name or names of any other Indians who shall hereafter be found to have received an allotment of land on any Indian reservation: Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any of the persons whose names shall be so stricken from the final roll by the Secretary of the Interior."

Should the bill be amended as suggested, I would recommend that it be enacted.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

The substitute bill is that favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, except the last proviso of section 3, which is added by the committee to insure that a portion of the funds shall be used for the purchase of lands for the benefit of said Indians.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 415, referring the petition of Henry Ford, contesting the election of Truman H. Newberry as a Senator from Michigan, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and authorizing said committee to take possession of the ballots, poll books, tally sheets, and documents and to make investigation and take all necessary proceeding relating to said contest.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

OLD RIVER (TEX.) IMPROVEMENT.

The bill (H. R. 7362) to authorize construction of a lock and dam in Old River, in the State of Texas, and the making of improvements enabling the passage of fresh water from a portion of Trinity River above the mouth of Old River into Old River above such lock and dam, and for the protection of rice crops against salt water, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS.

The bill (S. 5292) making it unnecessary to secure permits from the United States Shipping Board for the construction of ships in American shipyards for foreign account was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be necessary to secure a permit from the United States Shipping Board to enter into a contract for the construction of ships for foreign account in American shipyards.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIVISION OF TUBERCULOSIS, PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The bill (S. 1597) to provide a division of tuberculosis in and an advisory council for the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of this bill. It is a very important measure. It is urged by the Public Health Service. Tuberculosis is rapidly growing in this country, and they need a division in the Public Health Service to study and report upon it.

Mr. KING. I shall insist upon my objection.

Mr. RANSDELL. The bill also provides, I will say, for the creation of an advisory council——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying the bill may be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted.

The report is as follows:

Mr. RANSDELL, from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, to which was referred the bill (S. 1597) to provide a division of tuberculosis in, and an advisory council for, the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, reports thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

In support thereof the committee submits a letter and memorandum from Dr. Rupert Blue, Surgeon General Public Health Service, dated January 18, 1919, and a letter from Mr. William H. Baldwin, treasurer National Tuberculosis Association, dated January 20, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR RANSDELL: In reply to your letter of January 16, 1919, inclosing copy of S. 1597, to provide a division of tuberculosis in, and an advisory council for, the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, I beg to inclose a memorandum on this bill.

MEMORANDUM ON S. 1597, TO PROVIDE A DIVISION OF TUBERCULOSIS IN, AND AN ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR, THE UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

Section 1 of this bill provides for the establishment in the United States Public Health Service of an additional division to be known as the division of tuberculosis, which shall be in charge of a commissioned medical officer of the Public Health Service, detailed by the Surgeon General, who shall be while thus serving an Assistant Surgeon General on the same basis as the other Assistant Surgeons General, provided by the law of 1912, on duty at the bureau.

The object of this section is to provide a special administrative division of the United States Public Health Service, the duty of which shall be to study tuberculosis, its causes and prevention, and demonstrate methods for its suppression. In connection with the necessity for establishing such a division, the following is submitted:

Tuberculosis as a cause of death and disability: Tuberculosis is still the greatest single cause of death in the mortality sheets of this Nation. According to the returns of the United States Census Bureau for 1916, tuberculosis caused 101,396 deaths in the registration area of the United States, which comprises 70 per cent of the total population. The total number of deaths for the calendar year 1916 was 1,001,921. Tuberculosis thus caused 10.1 per cent of all deaths. If the same death rate from tuberculosis prevailed in the area of the United States outside of the registration area, the total number of deaths in the entire United States from this disease was approximately 145,000. Moreover, tuberculosis is a disease which attacks the young and those in the prime of life, as 74 per cent of those dying from tuberculosis are less than 45 years of age. Tuberculosis, therefore, is essentially a disease of youth and of early middle age, causing the deaths of thousands upon thousands at the time when they should be at the height of energy and usefulness and, through its long duration and debilitating course, causing hundreds of thousands, nay millions, of other persons to be a charge upon the Nation at the very time when we have need of the entire fund of national man power for the purpose of reconstruction, rehabilitation, and recuperation if this Nation is to play its part in the healing of the gigantic wounds left by the war.

The effect of tuberculosis on military man power: The effect of tuberculosis as a factor in depreciating national man power is well shown in the figures of the physical examination of the draft. Over 5 per cent of all examined, or more than 1 in 20, were found unfit for military duty because of tuberculosis, while many thousands subsequently developed tuberculosis after induction in the military service and were discharged. If we were to apply the figures of the prevalence of tuberculosis found during the physical examinations incident to the selective-service law to the whole population of the draft age, it may be estimated that there are approximately 1,000,000 cases of tuberculosis in the population of the age groups between 21 and 31. With these figures concerning the prevalence of tuberculosis in this country and its prominence as a cause of death in the national mortality statistics, it is no wonder that tuberculosis has been known as the great white plague.

Tuberculosis a preventable disease: Tuberculosis, though transmissible from man to man and also from the lower animals to man, is a preventable disease. Its cause is known; much information has been acquired as to its means of spread and methods for control. It is to be regretted that hitherto no definite steps have been taken by Congress to wage war against this terrible enemy of national life and prosperity. By giving specific direction and facilities to the national health agency to take such steps as will result in concerted and cooperative effort to suppress and prevent tuberculosis, a great forward movement will be made in stopping the ravages of this disease. It is still the greatest single waster of human national resources in the category of diseases.

Relation of the Public Health Service to tuberculosis: Under the law approved August 14, 1912, the Public Health Service may study and investigate the diseases of man and the conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof and under the law approved February 15, 1893, the Public Health Service is required to cooperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health * * * to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries and into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia; and * * * to make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia. The authorization of the Public Health Service to undertake antituberculosis work is therefore ample under the law.

Up to the present time all of the activities of the Public Health Service relating to the investigation of the diseases of man are being conducted under the Division of Scientific Research, while cooperative work in the prevention of the interstate spread of disease and its introduction from foreign countries into the United States is carried on by the Division of Domestic and Interstate Quarantine and Division of Foreign and Insular Quarantine, respectively, in the bureau. While of necessity tuberculosis has been considered in the work of these divisions, it has not been practicable because of insufficient funds and facilities to devote the intensive study to this great problem which it has long merited. Tuberculosis is such an important cause of deaths and disability that if a serious effort is made to reduce to proper limits the needless annual toll of thousands of lives because of its ravages, there is imperative need of a division in the Public Health Service which shall devote all of its time, energy, and funds to the solution of this great problem.

Although tuberculosis has long been the object of study and much knowledge has been acquired of the disease, that knowledge still has many gaps to be filled. For instance, we are still far from having complete information regarding such important points as the chief port of entry of the infection into the body, the conditions causing susceptibility, or relative immunity, the relative value of various preventive measures, the mechanism by which immunity to tuberculosis is created, and the arrest or cure of the disease effected. We are still without any specific treatment for tuberculosis or without any means of increasing individual resistance by the use of serums or vaccines. Yet, there is reason to believe that by intensive study of these subjects hopeful results are to be secured. Besides this, there is great need for coordinating and correlating the work of national, State, and local agencies for the prevention and control of tuberculosis. The work of coordinating such agencies is unquestionably the proper function of the Federal Government, as tuberculosis must be regarded as a national, not a local, health problem. For the universal prevalence of tuberculosis throughout the country not only wages war on national vitality but the disease is spread through interstate channels because of the migrations of those affected with it.

For these reasons it is believed that there is urgent need at this time for the taking up at once by the National Government of the tuberculosis problem as an essential part of the after-the-war reconstruction, and the establishment of a division of tuberculosis in the Public Health Service under the provisions of this act is the first logical step toward this end.

Section 2 of the bill provides that there shall be an advisory council for consultation with the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service relative to the scientific work to be inaugurated by the said service and the methods of performing it, and that the present advisory board of the Hygienic Laboratory shall be abolished. Under the act approved July 1, 1902, section 5, an advisory board of the Hygienic Laboratory was created for consultation with the Surgeon General of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service relative to the investigations to be inaugurated and the methods of conducting the same in that institution. The board consists of five members, specially skilled in laboratory work, not in the employ of the Government, and three others in Government services—the Army, the Navy, and the Department of Agriculture. This board had jurisdiction only over investigations to be undertaken at the Hygienic Laboratory. The act of 1912, however, has greatly increased the scope of the investigations which may be conducted by the service, and the same need exists for consultation with competent authorities by the Surgeon General in regard to such investigations as in more technical matters of laboratory research. The effect of this section is to increase the number of members on the board and to broaden the scope of the advisory powers of the board so that, instead of giving the Surgeon General advice solely in matters relating to the conduct of investigations at the Hygienic Laboratory, they may give the benefit of their advice and experience in regard to the entire field of public-health investigation.

In view, therefore, of the increased scope of the functions of the Public Health Service since the passage of the law of 1902, and the need, too, for an advisory council with special relation to the problem of tuberculosis, it becomes eminently desirable to increase the functions of the present advisory board of the Hygienic Laboratory so as to cover all public-health investigations undertaken by the service, and to add to its membership, so that all fields of public-health research may be covered. Section 2 provides for an increase in the membership of the advisory board from 8 to 10, and, moreover, by abolishing ex-officio members, gives a wider field of selection, so that all branches of public-health work may be represented on the board. An advisory board organized on these lines should be of the greatest aid to the National Government.

NATIONAL TUBERCULOSIS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1919.

Hon. J. E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR RANSDELL: In behalf of the National Tuberculosis Association I desire earnestly to urge the passage by Congress at this session of the bill to provide a division of tuberculosis in the Public Health Service (S. 1597). As to this, the association has a right to speak, for it has been and is the leading agency in the United States dealing with the disease which does more harm and takes a greater toll of human life than any other.

Its leadership is not due to any effort to monopolize the field, for it has constantly and successfully sought, since it was formed 15 years ago, by a coming together of those who felt the need of united action in such an important movement, to arouse people in all parts of the country to the dangers from tuberculosis and the possibilities of its prevention, and to promote the formation of associations and agencies which would take up the struggle at close range.

When the National Tuberculosis Association was formed real work for the control of tuberculosis was being undertaken in only five States, there were only about 100 hospitals and sanatoria for it, most of them poorly equipped, less than 20 special tuberculosis clinics, less than 30 antituberculosis associations, and the funds for what was being done came largely from private means. The death rate in 1904 was 200.7 per 100,000 of population.

The problem was vast and vague, and the association was without authority and without funds, but the possibilities for those who knew were likewise very great, and as information was spread the work began to grow rapidly. The association secured funds with which to send striking exhibits showing the nature and effects of tuberculosis into the principal cities of every State in the Union, and 10 years ago the International Congress on Tuberculosis, bringing here Dr. Robert Koch, who discovered the bacillus which causes the disease, and other authorities on the subject throughout the world, was held under its auspices in Washington. During the year following this the number of associations in the work nearly doubled, sanatoria and hospitals increased by 40 per cent, and legislation of various kinds was secured in most of the 30 States in which legislatures met that year.

The movement has broadened since until there is now an active State association in each of the States, as well as in Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, and Panama. There are about 1,500 other antituberculosis associations or societies, more than 550 special tuberculosis sanatoria and hospitals, and more than 450 clinics and dispensaries, while the death rate had fallen from 200.7 in 1904 to 141.6 in 1916, a decline of nearly 30 per cent. Many State commissions had been formed in connection with various phases of the subject, and an increasing amount of money was being appropriated each year by cities, counties, and States, some of the States having laws requiring the establishment of sanatoria in each county or in groups of counties, but the development of the problem began to reveal more and more clearly the need of something more, something different; and it was for this reason that three years ago the National Tuberculosis Association joined in a definite request for the formation of a division of tuberculosis in the Public Health Service, which would enable it to take a more nearly appropriate rank among the forces working against tuberculosis than it has been able to do. On the failure of Congress to pass that measure, the pending bill was introduced at the beginning of the present Congress.

That was nearly two years ago. The measure has not been urged until now because the war was just begun, and all energy was devoted to prosecuting it. In this, too, the National Tuberculosis Association took an active part. An investigation into the ravages of tuberculosis in the Army in France, which a former president of the National Tuberculosis Association, Dr. Hermann M. Biggs, was delegated to make, showed how soldiers had suffered because the need of men made it impossible to examine them carefully before enrolling them; and the former executive secretary of the National Tuberculosis Association, Dr. Livingston Farrand, with Mr. Homer Folks, another ex-president, and for six months Dr. David R. Lyman, its president at this time, has been more than a year and a half in Paris, working with the French Government to find ways of meeting the national need for protection against tuberculosis, just such an undertaking as the Public Health Service can well inaugurate and carry on in this country if this division is established.

The National Tuberculosis Association made a careful report before the war began to the Council of National Defense, with recommendations for guarding against taking tuberculous men into our forces. Through its members it aided in the examination of men called to the Army, and the care used in passing on such men has been of the greatest service to the Government. But these very examinations have brought out strikingly the prevalence of tuberculosis, and the great drama which has been enacted since this bill was introduced has demonstrated the need for it more convincingly than anything else could. The Surgeon General of the Army has done and is doing more for tuberculous soldiers than was ever done before for the men in any army. Adequate sanatoria were promptly provided, to which those needing treatment are sent to be cared for until their cases are arrested or until it is found that they will not be further improved by treatment.

The names of those discharged, as well as of men rejected in the draft, are furnished to the National Tuberculosis Association, so that through the local tuberculosis associations spoken of above, State boards of health, or the Red Cross, the men and their families can be kept track of and furnished with such care and assistance as they need; but the time will come when the control of the Army over these men will cease, and as they are absorbed into civil life it is absolutely necessary that there shall be a Federal agency with power to look after their interests and the interests of the people about them. The Public Health Service is the agency which should do this, and it should have a division of tuberculosis now. If the bill is not passed at this session it is altogether probable that before the authority to handle the problem can be given the men in the Army will have dropped back into civil life and the opportunity to prevent harm to and from them offered by the war will have been lost.

Moreover, if some of the hospitals at the camps and cantonments are likely to be used by the Public Health Service for the care of discharged soldiers needing treatment, it is quite important that there should now be such a division in the Public Health Service to aid in the selection of these places while the process of arranging for them is going on.

Emphasizing the need of this division of tuberculosis are the facts disclosed by the examinations for the draft in the various States. Among those in which we should expect the greatest freedom from tuberculosis are Arizona and New Mexico, with their bright skies and fine climate; but in a shaded map showing the proportion of men found tuberculous these two favored States are colored black, as among those having the most. The explanation is that those who have tuberculosis in other States go there, often when it is too late, infect others there, and die there. The individual States can not regulate such matters as these. The Public Health Service now has power to stop absolutely the migration of a person with tuberculosis from one State to another, but it is not exercising it because a rigid invariable rule would be objectionable, and it has not had the means or the men to work out a system which will afford all possible relief to the sufferers and at the same time protect the helpless people on whom they now impose themselves.

Nothing is more needed than the actual regulation of this matter, which the National Tuberculosis Association is taking up at the urgent request of the people of some of the Southwestern States, and they are urging that this division of tuberculosis be established now, so that whatever action is found necessary may be taken.

The war could not have been won by 48 separate campaigns by the different States. This enemy, tuberculosis, attacks the Nation, mobilizing its forces wherever the line of defense is weakest. The fight was begun by individuals and has moved up through cities, counties, and States until the need of prompt Federal participation is clear.

Another fact which calls for help is the effect of war conditions in civil life. There have been indications of late that the death rate from tuberculosis would increase instead of diminishing. The figures for 1917 for the whole country are not yet available for publication, but it is known that the rate is higher than for 1916; somewhere between those for 1914 and 1915, the first increase for many years. This is undoubtedly due in part to the pressure of industry, crowded working conditions, and the high cost of living, all of them national problems with which only the Federal Government can properly deal.

This statement is not meant to seek credit for the National Tuberculosis Association and its work, but to show that, however much it may have done in the past, the work now to be done is more comprehensive, and involves elements which private effort can not reach. But it is desirable to continue the earnestness and unselfishness which have been so important in the splendid results so rapidly accomplished thus far. This is provided for by the formation of the advisory council spoken of in section 2, which will give the Surgeon General the right to call upon the highest authorities in the country for advice and help in working out the problems of the Public Health Service. The compensation is trifling, but this identification with the interests of the Nation will insure the most loyal service, and the advice and support thus made available will be invaluable.

The National Tuberculosis Association will, of course, continue its efforts, and will steadily and freely do whatever lies in its power; but the high service it can render the cause to which it is devoted is to secure the passage by Congress now of this bill.

Thanking you sincerely for all your great interest, I am,

Yours, very truly,

WM. H. BALDWIN,
Chairman Committee on Federal Legislation.

TIMBER IN NEVADA.

The bill (H. R. 13056) to grant to citizens of Modoc County, Cal., the right to cut timber in the State of Nevada for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes and to remove such timber to Modoc County, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND PATENTS IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 5343) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to ratify the agreements of certain persons made with the commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii and to issue land patents to those eligible under the terms of said agreements, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know which Senator made the objection, but I wish he would withhold it and permit the consideration of the bill. There are 26 people in Hawaii who own land in the island of Maoa. The whole tract does not cover more than 500 acres. There are 33 parcels of land. These homesteaders took up their homesteads originally and found the land absolutely unavailable because of the character of the soil. Then the homesteaders, on the advice of the commissioner, surrendered those homesteads and took up other lands, but found afterwards that the advice was wrong in that there was no legal authority to surrender their land and take up new homesteads. The Territory of Hawaii, through its legislature, has adopted resolutions approving this measure. Every officer of the Government whose attention has been brought to it has approved it. It is simply for the relief of 26 homesteaders in Hawaii.

Mr. LENROOT. The only difficulty is that they had taken homesteads previously, which they gave up on the advice of the commissioner.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is the understanding.

Mr. LENROOT. That was the only reason.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That was the only reason of which I am aware, and the report shows that.

Mr. LENROOT. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the governor of the Territory of Hawaii is hereby authorized and directed to ratify and carry into effect the agreements made by the commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii with certain homesteaders, referred to in the resolution adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii, April 26, 1917; also to issue land patents to those living up to the terms of the agreements when same have been completed; also to issue land patents to those who have already complied with all the terms of their agreements, and to ratify and confirm the land patents already issued to homesteaders in accordance with the provisions of the resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, Territory of Hawaii, of April 26, 1917, above mentioned.

SEC. 2. The governor shall report to the Secretary of the Interior the action taken by him hereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREFERENCE RIGHT OF ENTRY.

The bill (H. R. 5559) to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 10, before the word "Carey," to strike out "such," and in line 12, after the word "had," to strike out "initiated a claim under the State laws" and insert "entered the land under and pursuant to the State laws providing for the administration of the grant under the Carey Act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, when restoring to the public domain lands that have been segregated to a State under section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, and the acts and resolutions amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, commonly called the Carey Act, is authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may establish, to allow for not exceeding ninety days to any Carey Act entryman a preference right of entry under applicable land laws of any of such lands to which such person had entered the land under and pursuant to the State laws providing for the administration of the grant under the Carey Act, and upon which such person had established actual bona fide residence, or had made substantial and permanent improvements.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 7236) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to make a statement about the bill. It will not take more than a minute. This bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. SMITH of Idaho, passed the House, and came to the Senate Committee on Public Lands. I carefully looked into it and recommended its passage.

It simply provides that in the construction of Government reclamation projects, where it is necessary to have a road across a little public land or a camping site for employees, for putting up a boarding house temporarily, or something of that kind—a few acres of land for administration and executive purposes—they shall have that right. The bill, I think, is perfectly harmless. I have no interest in it, but Representative SMITH of Idaho spoke to me about it, and having passed the House and having been carefully looked into and recommended by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and serving a useful purpose, I think it ought to pass. I appeal to the Senator who made the objection to withdraw it.

Mr. LENROOT. I will state that my objection to such bills is that it grants a title to land, whereas the Secretary of the Interior in his report recommends only an easement. I am opposed to granting a title for any such purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution (S. Res. 438) requesting the Secretary of State to furnish the Senate certain information.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 5554) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the following statement be inserted in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

S. 5211. Henry S. Silsby was a member of Company G, Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, known in the Army of the Potomac as "The Fighting Fifth." He enlisted August 11, 1862, and served over three years, being discharged August 24, 1865, for physical disability, namely, hydrocele and atrophy of left testicle.

He is nearly 74 years of age and receives a pension of $40 per month under certificate No. 136704. He was formerly pensioned at $25 per month under the age and service act of May 11, 1912. His original allowance of pension was under the general law at $4 per month from discharge; increased to $5, November 1, 1871; to $8, February 9, 1882; to $10, April 27, 1887; and to $17, February 6, 1895, for hydrocele and atrophy of testicles and intolerance of heat, result of sunstroke, all incurred in the service.

Medical and other evidence submitted to the committee shows that soldier is an infirm and tottering old man, suffering from rheumatism, heart disease, enlarged prostate, and other infirmities of age; also that he is nearly blind and barely able to get about, and is in such an enfeebled condition that he can do no kind of labor and requires the watchful aid and care of an attendant. He is also shown to be very poor and without property and with no other support than his pension.

In view of soldier's advanced age, his long and honorable service, his poverty and helplessness, party due, no doubt, to disabilities incurred in service, your committee report the bill favorably with recommendation for increase of pension to $50 per month.

S. 5649. Alice C. Day is the widow of Selden A. Day, late second lieutenant, Fifth United States Artillery, and colonel, Artillery Corps, United States Army, retired.

Col. Day entered the Army June 20, 1861, as private in Company C, Seventh Ohio Infantry. He was appointed second lieutenant in the Fifth Regular Artillery, April 7, 1864, and continued in active service until July 22, 1902, when he was placed on the retired list. He was made lieutenant colonel July 1, 1901, and was advanced to the grade of colonel on the retired list April 23, 1904. Had it not been for irregular promotions (through which he lost, by no fault of his own, an entire grade) he would have been retired as brigadier general. He served his country honorably and faithfully in the Army for upward of 41 years.

Col. Day died at his home in Washington December 22, 1918. His widow, the beneficiary under this bill, whom he married April 9, 1902, is now receiving the pension of $25 per month (certificate No. 861885) provided by the acts of April 19, 1908, and October 6, 1917, for the widow of an officer or enlisted man who served 90 days in the Civil War. She is unable to obtain an allowance under the general law more commensurate with the rank and service of her distinguished husband, for the reason that she can not prove that his death was due to wound, injury, or disease incurred during the period of his actual service with the Army.

Mrs. Day is now well advanced in years, and, as the evidence shows, without income of any kind for her support. She has a home property, which is encumbered by mortgage, and also the right to a small amount of unimproved land, which is a burden and expense and produces no income. We append hereto an extract from the Army and Navy Register showing something of this officer's record.

In view of the long and exceedingly valuable services of Col. Day and the widow's necessitous circumstances, your committee report the bill favorably with recommendation for increase of pension to $50 per month.

Col. Selden Allen Day, United States Army, retired, passed from this life, after a prolonged illness resulting in general breakdown, December 22, 1918, in the eighty-first year of his age, at his home, 1838 Lamont Street, Washington, D. C., where a brief service was held. Col. Day was a member of the Unitarian Church, but it was his wish that his funeral be strictly private and that it be conducted by his old comrade and long-time friend, Henry N. Couden, Chaplain of the House of Representatives. The immediate family and a small group of his Masonic and military friends only were present. Col. Day leaves a widow here and several brothers and sisters in California and New York. His five nephews are with the Army in France, four of the five being officers. The Chaplain read the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, which was followed by a prayer and a tribute to his memory as a soldier. The Masonic burial service was then performed, after which the military took charge and conveyed the body to Arlington, where it was buried with full military honors. The old soldier has made his last march, fought his last battle, heard for the last time taps, and has laid himself down to peaceful repose on fame's eternal camping ground, where, we confidently trust, he has heard ere now the reveille which calls him from slumber to the larger life and nobler activities. Col. Selden Allen Day possessed a remarkable personality, and, though he has passed from this life, his heroic deeds live and are worthy of emulation by all true men. Col. Day's military career began when he raised a company of volunteers at the first call for troops in 1861. Owing to the excess of troops enrolled under this call, his company could not be mustered and was disbanded. He then enlisted as a private in Company C, Seventh Ohio Infantry. He was appointed a second lieutenant, Fifth Artillery, and in the spring of 1864 was ordered to the front. He joined Battery A in the Battle of Cold Harbor and was brevetted first lieutenant for gallantry in that action. He served continuously in the field until the close of the war. He was one of the lieutenants in charge of Jefferson Davis during his imprisonment at Fortress Monroe, and retained the lifelong friendship of the Davis family because of his humane and soldierly treatment of his prisoner. He was graduated from the Artillery School in 1874 and from the Medical College of the State of South Carolina in 1880. He was promoted to captain, Fifth Artillery, in 1886. He was mentioned, with others, in the general order from headquarters of the Army in 1897 for gallantry displayed in the rescue of 17 people from a sinking steamer in a storm at Fort Canby, Wash., February 28, 1896. At the opening of the War with Spain he became major of the Fifth Artillery and, while in command at Galveston, was ordered to Cuba and Porto Rico. After the promulgation of peace he took over the forts and armament, hoisted the flag over El Morro Castle at San Juan, and fired the national salute on the day of final occupation, October 18, 1898. After a long term of duty in the Tropics, Col. Day was ordered home and to command Fort Williams, Portland, Me., and reached the retiring age while there. Had it not been for irregular promotions (through which he lost, through no fault of his own, an entire grade), he would have been retired as brigadier general. A bill to correct that wrong was in Congress, but was never pushed to action. Col. Day's unflagging efforts for the advancement of the profession to which he had given his whole life are also matters of record. A number of his inventions are in use, and he was engaged for several years past in perfecting flying-machine parts. He held patents in eight of the belligerent countries on a flying machine, upon which he was still working when the war with Germany was declared, when he offered his services and his inventions to the Government. The "dum-dum," or soft-pointed bullet for small arms, was invented by Col. Day and patented by him in all prominent countries except the United States. He has been frequently employed in scientific work, for which his qualifications as a physician and surgeon, an expert rifle shot, and his knowledge of explosives specially fitted him. Interment was at Arlington on December 24.

S. 4948. Ella E. Smith is the widow of the late Rear Admiral John A. B. Smith, United States Navy, retired.

John A. B. Smith was born in Baltimore, Md., March 21, 1843. He entered the Navy from civil life April 21, 1863, by appointment on that date as third assistant engineer and was in active service continuously through the several grades to the rank of rear admiral until March 21, 1905, when he was placed on the retired list. He was immediately, however, detached from the retired list and continued on active duty until August 1, 1908. He was made rear admiral March 21, 1905. He was a capable and efficient officer. We append hereto a complete statement of the officer's service.

Admiral Smith died at New Orleans, La., March 9, 1918. His widow, the beneficiary under this bill, is now receiving the pension of $25 per month (certificate No. 854250) provided by the act of October 6, 1917, on account of the officer's service in the Civil War. She is unable to obtain pension under the general law more commensurate with the rank and service of her distinguished husband for the reason that she can not prove that his death cause originated prior to his retirement from active duty. She married the deceased officer October 10, 1871.

Mrs. Smith is nearly 68 years of age, and, as the evidence shows, in straitened circumstances and with but little means for her support. In view of the long and exceedingly valuable services of Admiral Smith and in the light of numerous precedents, your committee report the bill favorably, with recommendation for increase of pension to $50 per month, which is the amount heretofore allowed in similar cases.

J. A. B. Smith entered the service from civil life on the 21st of April, 1863, as third assistant engineer; was ordered to the U. S. S. Housatonic, off Charleston, S. C., in June, and served on that vessel until she was blown up by a torpedo on the night of February 17, 1864; was rescued by boat from Canandaigua; on account of the crowded condition of that vessel, was sent to the U. S. S. Wabash; served on that vessel until May; after going north for a new outfit, was ordered to the U. S. S. Paul Jones; served on that vessel in Stono Inlet and Ossibau Sound; after the Water Witch was captured, came north in Paul Jones; in August, 1864, was ordered to U. S. S. Mohongo, building at Jersey City. Promoted to second assistant engineer September 28, 1864; made the trip from New York to San Francisco in Mohongo, and was detached on the 7th of August, 1867; served on the trials of the Contoocook, Moshulan, Passmalation, and Miantonomah in latter part of 1867–68; joined U. S. S. Saco at Aspinwall in September, 1868, and, on that vessel going out of commission, was ordered to U. S. S. Seminole, sent out to capture the pirate steamer Telegraph, supposed to be at Samaria Bay; served on Seminole until December, 1869; ordered as chief engineer of Mayflower in August, 1870, and went in that vessel to Mexico, in connection with the Saufeldt Expedition to survey for canal (Tehuantepec Canal); returned in 1871, and was detached in May; ordered to League Island Station, and served until 1873; was ordered to Saugus in July, 1883; was chief of that vessel during the Virginius excitement. Was promoted to passed assistant engineer January, 1873; went to Pensacola on Saugus, and was then ordered as chief of that yard and served there during the epidemic of yellow fever, 1874; was relieved in November of 1874, when yard was reported healthy; granted six months' leave; ordered to Hartford, flagship of North Atlantic Squadron, in December, 1875, and served on that vessel until August, 1877, part of the time as chief engineer; ordered to U. S. S. Wyandotte, at Washington yard, in December, 1877; was detached in May, 1880, the last year as chief engineer; in September, 1883, was ordered in charge of stores at Norfolk Navy Yard, and chief engineer of receiving ship Franklin; served there until May, 1886; was then ordered as senior assistant of the new cruiser Atlanta; served on her during all of her trial trips, and until November, 1888; in December, 1888, was ordered to duty under Naval Advisory Board at Washington; on April 1, 1889, was ordered to inspection duty at Cramp's shipyard, in connection with U. S. S. Philadelphia, served on trial trips of the Baltimore; was detached December 4, 1889, and ordered as inspector of cruiser No. 9, at Baltimore. Served as chief engineer U. S. S. Montgomery, 1890 to 1891; chief engineer of the U. S. S. Texas, 1892 to 1893; engineer officer of the Norfolk Navy Yard, 1894 to 1898; promoted to captain when the Engineer Corps was combined with the line of the Navy in 1898; ordered to New York in 1899 to rebuild the machine shop at the New York yard; served as engineer officer New York yard, 1899 to 1905; superintended the construction of the engines for the U. S. S. Connecticut while attached to the New York yard. Promoted to rear admiral March 21, 1905; placed on the retired list in 1905, on account of age, but kept on active duty until 1909, as general inspector of machinery and president of the board on changes for ships under construction. Died in New Orleans, La., March 9, 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he will file the report with the bill at this time?

Mr. WALSH. I submit the following statement for the RECORD:

S. 5550. James A. Cox was a member of Company D, Fourth United States Infantry, in which he served three years, from September 29, 1896, to September 28, 1899, when honorably discharged. He took part with his company in the Santiago campaign during the War with Spain and also served for some months in the Philippine Islands.

He filed application for pension March 28, 1903 (No. 1298279), alleging that from exposure during service in Cuba and the Philippine Islands he contracted articular rheumatism, affecting the right sacroiliac articulation. In later applications he alleged also injury of left wrist, incurred in March, 1897, by fall on icy sidewalks.

The medical records on file in the War Department show that soldier was treated from March 6 to 19, 1897, for severe sprain of left wrist by a fall on icy sidewalk in line of duty. The claim for injury to left wrist was rejected, however, on the ground that a ratable degree of disability from such injury had not been shown from date of application. The claim for rheumatism of right sacroiliac articulation was rejected, after special examination, on the ground of no record of same in War Department, and the best obtainable evidence fails to establish origin of said disability in service or its existence at discharge.

The medical records of the War Department show that soldier was treated in Cuba August 2 to 8, 1899, for malarial fever and for same fever at Camp Wickoff, N. Y., September 9, 1898, and furloughed for one month. He was also treated in the Philippines in June and July, 1899, for acute diarrhea. The records further show that he was treated as an ex-Regular at Army and Navy General Hospital, Hot Springs, Ark., March 6 to April 2, 1903, for chronic articular rheumatism, right sacroiliac articulation.

The evidence on file establishes the fact that soldier was sound at enlistment, and there appears to be an equally good showing of rheumatism about nine months after discharge, and there is no question, as far as we can see, as to the continuance of the disability from that time to the present.

The evidence clearly shows that when soldier returned home on furlough in September, 1898, he was in poor health and weak and debilitated from malaria and fever contracted during the Santiago campaign. There is also evidence of soldier's sickness in the Philippine Islands and that he frequently complained of pains in legs and hips. Some of his comrades testify to that effect, and the evidence as to his physical condition from the time of discharge is that he has not been in same good health he was before enlistment.

Soldier was first officially examined August 5, 1903, by a full board of surgeons, who rated him $17 on chronic rheumatism right sacroiliac articulation, $4 on heart trouble, and $6 on general debility. He was again examined the 7th of August, 1912, for injury of left wrist alone, which the board reported did not constitute a disability for manual labor. He was last examined October 4, 1916, by the Vinita (Okla.) board of surgeons, who rated him $6 on injury of left wrist and $12 on the rheumatic trouble.

Evidence filed with the bill is to the effect that soldier is practically unable to perform manual labor for the support of himself and family, and photographs submitted show that the disability has produced spinal curvature and some shortening of limb. He is 45 years of age and poor and in need of the relief a pension would give him.

The weight of evidence appears to indicate the service origin of the disability, and your committee report the bill favorably, with recommendation for pension at $17 per month.

S. 5609. Mike A. Langeneck, of North Vernon, Ind., served during the War with Spain, Company D, Second United States Volunteer Engineers, from June 23, 1898, to May 16, 1899, when honorably discharged. I. Ctf. 1045272.

The soldier contracted rheumatism and resulting disease of heart, chronic diarrhea and disease of rectum, and piles in the service, and was allowed a pension of $17, which he now receives, under the general law.

An increase was recently denied on the ground the present rate is adequate. In August, 1918, he filed testimony of a physician who states that he suffers so severely from rheumatism and resulting disease of heart, chronic diarrhea, and disease of piles, diseased rectum, as to be fully three-fourths disabled at all times for performing manual labor.

Boards of surgeons have recommended $10 and $12 for rheumatism and disease of heart and $8 and $10 for disease of rectum and diarrhea and piles. The last board made this recommendation.

With the bill the petitioner files an affidavit, in which he states he is wholly unable to perform labor an account of rheumatism, disease of heart, chronic diarrhea and resulting disease of rectum and piles, and that he owns no property other than household goods worth $100.

Lay testimony sustains his allegations as to physical and financial condition. Medical testimony shows that this soldier is much of the time wholly disabled for manual labor by reason of severe rheumatism and resulting disease of heart, chronic diarrhea, resulting disease of rectum and piles, and all of the time is fully three-fourths disabled for performing manual labor. One of the physicians states that, in his opinion, this man is unable fully five-sixths of the time to perform work of any kind.

Your committee report the bill favorably, with recommendation for increase of pension to $24 per month.

S. 5506. Joseph R. Owens enlisted April 17, 1899, as a private in Battery E, First United States Artillery, War with Spain, and was discharged by expiration of service April 16, 1902. He enlisted May 31, 1904, as coal passer in the United States Navy, and was discharged May 30, 1908. He again enlisted in the Navy May 5, 1913, as fireman, second class, and was discharged March 23, 1914.

Applicant's claim for pension, No. 1293532, which was first filed December 6, 1902, is based on bronchitis, chronic diarrhea, and stomach trouble, contracted during service in the Philippine Islands. The claim was rejected on the ground of no ratable degree of disability from causes alleged since date of filing application.

Applicant was sound at enlistment, as is evidenced by the report of his official examination at that time. Official records show that, commencing in August, 1899, he was under treatment on numerous occasions for acute diarrhea, chronic diarrhea, chronic amebic dysentery, malarial fever, anemia, and general debility, chronic catarrhal enteritis, and tonsilitis.

Evidence shows that applicant has been in poor health since discharge and more or less incapacitated for manual labor. Dr. Southgate Leigh testified that he attended applicant in September and October, 1912, for chronic diarrhea. Dr. James G. Riddick, testifying March 25, 1913, said that applicant had malaria in chronic form and trouble with bowels and stomach. Dr. Riddick again testified that he treated applicant for chronic bowel trouble in March, 1913, and again in August, 1914. Official records of the Navy Department show that during last enlistment applicant was admitted to hospital at Norfolk, Va., August 15, 1913, with appendicitis and was under treatment for two months, being operated on September 17, 1913.

Applicant was officially examined June 23, 1914, by a full board of surgeons, who rated him $8 on chronic diarrhea. He is 39 years of age and in his own behalf states that he is wholly disabled for manual labor by reason of disease of stomach, bowels, and lungs, contracted in the service and line of duty; also that he has no property and no income.

The record and other evidence is in favor of his claim, and your committee report the bill favorably, with recommendation for pension at $17 per month.

S. 2637. John D. Harkless was late second lieutenant with Company F, Twenty-third Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, in the War with Spain. He was enrolled July 6, 1898, mustered in July 16, 1898, and mustered out with company April 10, 1899.

On June 18, 1909, he made claim for pension (No. 1384157), alleging that in Cuba, about November 9, 1898, he contracted malarial fever in a chronic form. The claim was rejected November 9, 1909, on the ground that a ratable degree of disability had not been shown from date of filing from malarial fever. He filed a second claim January 19, 1916, alleging that in Cuba, in December, 1898, he contracted malarial poisoning; that since his discharge other complications have resulted, mainly rheumatism affecting his limbs, back, shoulders, and arms; also impaired hearing and eyesight; that he did not contract last-mentioned disabilities while in service, nor does he claim for any other disability of service origin than above stated. The claim was rejected in August, 1917, on the ground of claimant's manifest inability to furnish satisfactory evidence showing existence of malarial poisoning at date of discharge and continuance thereafter; rheumatism and impaired sight and hearing not alleged as of service origin.

The company muster-out roll shows soldier reported as sick in quarters November 9 to 12, 1898, December 2 to 6, 1898, and January 13 to 16, 1899; all in line of duty. The medical records on file in the War Department show that soldier was treated December 3 to 6, 1898, for malarial fever; January 14 to 18, 1899, diarrhea, acute complication; January 16, 1899, malarial fever. On examination preliminary to discharge soldier declared he had rheumatism in his hips; also right foot sprained, the latter incurred November 23, 1898, in Cuba, on drill ground, the former on account of sleeping in damp tents. The surgeon reported "small tumor on back of right wrist, probably a ganglion, not permanent and not disabling."

Dr. S. P. Douglass, testifying September 4, 1909, said he had been soldiers family physician for about three and a half years, during all of which time soldier suffered from chronic malaria and was not able to do manual labor.

Dr. L. MacLean, testifying August 21, 1909, said that he then found upon examination soldier's condition as follows: "Pulse 72, temperature 97 degrees, loss of eyesight about one-fourth from normal, tongue coated, and constipation and loss of appetite; he claims pains in legs and body at various times during the day or night, and from his history of lying on the ground in Cuba during the war the said soldier has chronic malaria and is not physically able to do manual labor."

Soldier was officially examined October 6, 1909, by the Pueblo (Colo.) board of surgeons, who reported as follows: "Height, 5 feet 4½ inches; weight, 196 pounds; palms soft; muscles soft; body well nourished. Chest measurement at rest, 40; expiration, 41; inspiration, 42 inches. Both lungs normal upon percussion and auscultation. No rating.

"Heart: Apex beat in fifth interspace, 1 inch to right of left nipple line. No hypertrophy, no œdema, no dyspnea or cyanosis, no valvular lesion. No rating.

"Urinalysis: Specific gravity, 1018, color amber, acid, no albumen, no sugar. No rating.

"Malarial fever: We find no malarial cachexia. Skin is normal to feel, conjunctivæ not yellow, tongue slightly coated; liver dullness extends from lower border of seventh to slightly below twelfth rib, slightly tender; no tenderness over abdomen; spleen dullness from ninth to lower border of eleventh rib, not tender.

"Rectum shows no hemorrhoids, no fissures, no stricture; abdomen measures 43 inches. No rating.

"We find no evidence of any glandular disease. No rating.

"No other disability is found to exist."

Accompanying the bill is affidavit of Dr. J. Q. A. Webb, who states that he treated soldier from February 1, 1914, to February 5, 1915, for malarial cachexia, with secondary complications of rheumatism and otitis media, with total deafness of right ear; that soldier was physically unable to support himself by manual labor to any extent.

Affidavit of Dr. S. G. Holmes, who stated that soldier came under his care April 5, 1917, and was treated for chronic malaria, rheumatism, deafness of right ear, and errors of vision.

Soldier is 50 years of age, and two neighbors testify that he is physically incapacitated for performing manual labor, and that he has no property and no income. It further appears that he is crippled by amputation of left arm above wrist, which entirely incapacitates him for manual labor; he claims this to be caused by poor health resulting from service in Cuba during the War with Spain. In his own behalf he makes the following statement:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Columbia, ss:

John D. Harkless, of Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, deposes and says that he enlisted in the Spanish-American War in July, 1898, as a member of Company F, Twenty-third Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged from said service in April, 1899; that at the time of his enlistment he was sound in health; that he performed the greater part of his military service in Cuba, having been there from August, 1898, to February, 1899, during which time the tropical climate, bad water, heavy rains, and hot weather had a material effect on his health, finally undermining his health and resulting in malaria and Cuban itch, which diseases exhibited themselves shortly after leaving the service. As a result of these diseases, affiant states that his blood became poisoned and that an abscess formed on his left arm, which necessitated amputation; that his said left arm was amputated above the wrist, which has totally incapacitated him for the performance of manual labor; that he also suffers severely from rheumatism and lumbago and also from deafness in the right ear, resulting from exposure in the service and line of duty; that he has no income whatever from any source; and that, on account of his destitute and disabled condition he feels that he is justly entitled to a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

JOHN D. HARKLESS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public, this 24th day of February, A. D. 1919.

The name of Sarah E. Jackman, widow of Robert C. Jackman, late of Company G, Eighty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I trust that the House provision in the bill in this case will be restored. I am acquainted with some of the facts in the case, and I know the condition of the widow is far more serious than is indicated by the testimony. This is a very meritorious case, and if a pension is granted in any case it does seem to me this should be one of them.

I call the attention of the chairman to the report on page 34:

H. R. 12232. Sarah E. Jackman, aged 73 years, whose post-office address is 1337 North Topeka Avenue, Wichita, Kans., is the widow of Robert C. Jackman, late a sergeant, Company G, Eighty-second Regiment Indiana Infantry, from August 12, 1862, to October 9, 1862, when discharged on a surgeon's certificate of disability. Soldier was pensioned at $17 per month, certificate No. 450331.

He and this claimant were married July 15, 1873, and were recognized as husband and wife to the date of his death, November 9, 1910. She has filed no claim for pension as his widow under the general law. She has no title under other existing laws.

Medical testimony filed in support of this bill indicates the claimant is in a practically helpless condition and unable to contribute to her own support, by reason of cancer of breast, almost total loss of vision of both eyes, general debility, and impairment of mental faculties, which is supplemented by the testimony of others indicating she is without adequate means of support. It is therefore recommended her name be placed on the pension roll at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator trying to secure an increase?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not. I am trying to get an original pension for a very worthy soldier's widow. She has never had a pension. I am trying to restore the item stricken out by the Senate committee, but which was passed by the House. I simply desire the Senate not to concur in the amendment. The widow married the ex-soldier in 1873 and she was his wife until the time of his death. A great many women married old soldiers in the last few years of their lives and have enjoyed the benefit of a pension. Here is one who lived with her ex-soldier husband practically all his life after his return from the Army, and I trust the Senate will not concur in the amendment. While her husband served only 58 days, yet he was honorably discharged on account of physical disabilities received in the service, and his widow should certainly be entitled to a pension.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to indorse what has been said by my colleague and I hope the Senate amendment will be rejected. This soldier served in the Union Army and was discharged for disability contracted in the line of duty and drew a pension under the old law. He established his claim in the Pension Bureau, and the record shows that he was discharged because of disability contracted in the line of duty. He drew a pension at $17 a month until he died. He married his present widow in 1873, and they lived together until he died. This woman is now helpless. She did not file a claim for pension in the department, because she could not establish the fact that her husband died as the result of disability contracted in the service, but the truth remains that he drew the pension for that disability contracted in the service, and the only reason he did not have longer service was the fact that he was wounded and discharged on a surgeon's certificate.

I do hope the chairman of the committee will permit the House provision to stay in the bill, and if the chairman does not consent I trust the Senate may disagree to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. The only information I have about this is found in a brief statement about the case in the report on page 81:

H. R. 12232. Sarah E. Jackman (Rept., p. 34). Claimant's husband enlisted August 12, 1862, and after 59 days was discharged October 9, 1862, on account of phthisis pulmonalis, which may or may not have been of service origin. He was pensioned under the general law for chronic diarrhea and resulting piles. He died in November, 1910, some 48 years after his discharge, of disease of heart, aged 74 years and 8 months.

Claimant has never applied for pension under the general law, and there is no evidence to show that soldier's fatal disease resulted from the disabilities for which he was pensioned, or from the military service, in view of which and his very short service the committee feel compelled to report unfavorably in this case.

We felt that it would open the door to a large number of claims where the service was very brief, a policy that the committee does not feel that it ought to approve.

The name of Emelia Branner, widow of John S. Branner, late of the Topeka Battery, Second Kansas State Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senate committee amendment will not be agreed to in this case.

I knew Mr. Branner all my life. He was a member of what was known as the Topeka Battery, which took part in the Battle of the Blue. There were 21 men in that battery who, stationed in a little patch of woods, held off a regiment for over four hours, and when at last the regiment got into the woods they found that every member of the Topeka Battery was either killed or wounded.

Mr. Branner was a State militiaman. The pension laws which applied to the State militia expired in 1875. After July 1, 1875, no soldiers or the widows of soldiers of the State militia could obtain a pension. This man applied immediately after the war and drew a pension all his life. In the battle he was wounded in the arm and side. It was reported around Topeka that in the same battle he received an injury to his head, and ever afterwards he walked with his head to one side.

He died after 1875. The widow had no pensionable status in the Pension Office. Congress gave the widow a pensionable status in 1914 on the same basis as if she had applied before 1875 and granted her a pension of $12 a month. If she had applied for a pension before 1875 and it had been granted her, she would now be drawing $25 a month. I know that the widows of men who were killed or wounded in that battle who applied for pension prior to 1875 are now drawing $25 a month.

This soldier married the widow in 1870. They lived together and reared a large family. His widow is now dependent upon the $12 a month that she receives, and I submit to the Senate that if she had applied for a pension under the law prior to 1875 she would now be drawing $25 a month. It is only fair to put her in the same status as are other widows who did apply for pensions before 1875.

I know this man only had 16 days' service, but that one Battle of the Blue was a battle that is known all over the West, and is a historic battle of the Civil War. I submit that this gallant little group of 21 men, who stood off a great regiment for four hours, are entitled to the recognition that they would have had had they served in the Regular Army. I hope the Senate will disagree to this amendment, and I hope they will allow this old woman a pension of $25 per month.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in view of the very distinguished service rendered by the husband of the beneficiary of this item in the bill, and notwithstanding his brief service, I do not myself want to offer any objection to disagreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be disagreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is disagreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 33, after lines 16, to strike out:

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REFUND OF IMPORT DUTIES.

Mr. WARREN. While I was absent from the Chamber a short bill was passed over on the objection of one Senator, who now has no objection to its consideration. I allude to the bill (S. 2496) for the refund of duties paid on material destroyed by fire. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now may recur to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to recur to the bill named by him.

Mr. WALSH. What is the bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is a very brief bill, and I think it will not take up any time. If there is any discussion of it, I shall not insist on its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2496) for the refund of duties on materials destroyed by fire.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint a commission of not more than five members, of whom one shall be a native and resident of Porto Rico, whose duty it shall be to meet in Porto Rico and to study, and make report to the President upon, the industrial and economic conditions of said island; and said commission shall have authority to appoint a secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution if the Senator from Delaware desires it considered, but I can not see why a resolution of this kind ought to be passed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I can explain this joint resolution very briefly.

The conditions in Porto Rico in many respects are now very much more serious than they ever have been. The Senator from Utah is doubtless aware that the population of Porto Rico is a very dense one; I think something like 625 per square mile. The population there is much more dense than is the population in this country. They have had recently down there very serious earthquakes, and they have had a severe epidemic of the influenza. The problems of social life and of education in Porto Rico are very grave ones to be met by this Government.

This joint resolution was brought to the attention of the Porto Rican and Pacific Islands Committee by the Insular Bureau. The proposal was to have three Americans sent to Porto Rico to examine conditions there and to report as to the amelioration of the conditions which have prevailed there for a long time, due to the causes to which I have referred. The committee, at the suggestion of the Delegate from Porto Rico, on a hearing and consideration, increased that commission to five members, providing that one member should be a native and resident of Porto Rico, so that certainly the Porto Ricans would have a voice in the investigations that went on.

There will be very little expense incurred, I am told, by Gen. Walcutt, who is the chief of the Insular Bureau, that he hopes it will not be more than a few hundred dollars. He is very anxious to get some information which it is almost impossible to get at this distance without special persons being sent down there. The appropriation for this year is limited to $7,500 and the individual payments to the commissioners and the secretary to $10 per day. It seems that it would be a very good thing to furnish the Bureau of Insular Affairs with this information, and after talking with the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, whom I know very well, I think this would be a very good joint resolution to pass.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to say a word with relation to this matter, for I was the chairman of the Porto Rican and Pacific Islands Committee for a number of years.

I know there is considerable discontent over certain matters in Porto Rico, and I feel satisfied that if a commission could be appointed by the proper authority it would do much to improve existing conditions. The Porto Ricans were very enthusiastic over the organic act which was passed in the preceding Congress. This is not a matter of salaries; it is a matter merely of a few dollars to be expended for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the people in Porto Rico and seeing whether legislation would remedy conditions. It seems to me the joint resolution should be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to discuss this question at all; but as this joint resolution can not pass the House at this session, I will object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4968) to provide for the creation and establishment of a Federal Commission on Reconstruction, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 25) to provide for the appointment of certain joint congressional committees on reconstruction, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

DISPOSITION OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

The bill (H. R. 10851) to provide a method for disposing of intoxicating liquors now or hereafter in the possession of United States court officials was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that bill was sent to the Senate by the Attorney General, who says that the condition is such as to demand the passage of the bill immediately. In the prosecution of a number of liquor cases a considerable quantity of liquor is now held, though the cases are ended. There is no method of disposing of such liquor. This bill is to make provision for the disposition of intoxicating liquors which may be held by the courts as the result of prosecutions. The passage of the bill is needed, and I sincerely hope no objection will be made to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, in section 4, page 2, line 23, after the word "uses," to insert "or to order the same sold for such purposes, the proceeds to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That in all cases in which intoxicating liquors may be subject to be destroyed under the provisions of this act the court shall have jurisdiction upon the application of the United States attorney to order them delivered to any department or agency of the United States Government for medicinal, mechanical, or scientific uses, or to order the same sold for such purposes, the proceeds to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CORRUPT TRADE PRACTICES.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, when Order of Business 586 was reached objection was made to its consideration. It is the bill (S. 4603) to protect interstate and foreign commerce against bribery and other corrupt trade practices. I can not believe that there will be any opposition whatever to the bill. It is a law that is much needed.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw my objection. I merely made the objection to save time.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that we recur to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to recur to the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I reserve the right to object to the bill until I see what it is. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senate will recur to the bill. The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to have this bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a very important bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection to its consideration has been made, the Chair will say to the Senator from Utah, and the bill therefore goes over.

REIMBURSEMENT OF FIRE LOSSES IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 1765) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $85,975 to pay to the Trans-Atlantic Fire Insurance Co., $9,500; Prussian National Fire Insurance Co., $2,850; North German Fire Insurance Co., $8,000; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Co., $10,450; Royal Insurance Co., $25,100; Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Co., $6,900; New Zealand Insurance Co., $6,025; Fireman's Fund Insurance Co., $9,250; National Fire Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., $4,150; Caledonian Insurance Co., of Edinburgh, Scotland, $750; North British Mercantile Insurance Co., $3,000; the sums mentioned being the amounts paid by each of the companies on account of insurance against fire on property in the Territory of Hawaii, which property was destroyed by the Government in the suppression of the bubonic plague in that Territory in the years 1899 and 1900.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. W. E. CRAWFORD.

The bill (H. R. 2012) for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. W. E. Crawford $140.40 in full compensation for services rendered as auxiliary carrier of mails at Decatur, Ala., from March 28, 1914, to June 28, 1914.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH B. EDDY.

The bill (S. 4864) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object to that bill. I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. GRONNA. I observe that it was reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. I am a member of the Claims Committee, but I did not have an opportunity to attend when this bill was considered. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill, but let it go over without prejudice.

Mr. KING. Very well. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4263) for the relief of Capt. Frederick B. Shaw was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5334) to correct the military record of Jesse E. Smalley was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROCEEDINGS OF AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE CONFERENCE.

The resolution (S. Res. 452) to print the manuscript entitled "Proceedings of the conference on the American merchant marine" as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to that resolution.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will allow me to make a very brief explanation before he objects. The conference referred to in this resolution was a very important conference held in this city and addressed by two Senators, two Representatives, and a number of men who are specialists in the matter of the mercantile marine. As everyone knows, we are trying to develop our merchant marine and are spending a great deal of money on it. These proceedings will furnish valuable information for the country, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. There are various important conventions being held in all parts of the United States nearly every day in the year, and if we begin to print proceedings of conventions we will never hear and will never reach the end.

Mr. RANSDELL. We have printed a great many such documents. This manuscript is very brief and the document will be very valuable. As I have said, the conference was addressed by two Members of the Senate and two Members of the House, who made important contributions to the discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. There will be no objection if it is merely desired to have the addresses of the Senators or Representatives placed in the RECORD or made a public document, but if we print the proceedings of a convention of this sort we will be called on to print the proceedings of thousands of other organizations.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say that this is a technical matter. Addresses were made by such men as Mr. Homer Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. and a trained specialist on this subject. That kind of information can not be obtained every day. He does not go to conventions ordinarily. Members of the Shipping Board also addressed the convention. They went there and discussed a technical subject and treated it very ably. This is not an expensive matter, and it certainly would be very beneficial. It is of no benefit to me, I will say, but it will benefit the country, and so I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not the amount of expense that will be entailed that causes me to object so much as it is the practice of printing proceedings of conventions which may be held in all parts of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S Res. 444) expressing the opinion of the Senate relative to the withdrawal of United States soldiers from Russia was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

RIGHTS OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when Calendar No. 627 was called, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] objected to its consideration. I have since conferred with that Senator in regard to that bill, and I now ask unanimous consent to recur to it and to have it considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 627, being House bill 7236. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7236) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898.

Mr. BORAH. I move to amend the bill on page 2, line 6, after the word "contained," by inserting the words "the Secretary of the Interior"; and, in the same line, by striking out the words "there is hereby granted" and inserting the words "is authorized to grant permits or easements not to exceed 5 acres of ground."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 6, after the word "contained," it is proposed to insert the words "the Secretary of the Interior"; on the same line, before the word "not," to strike out "there is hereby granted" and insert the word "is authorized to grant permits or easements for not to exceed 5 acres of ground," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the rights of way granted by sections 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1892 (26 Stat., p. 1095), as amended by the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend the irrigation act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., p. 1095, sec. 18), and to amend section 2 of the act of May 11, 1898 (30 Stat., p. 404)," approved March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., p. 1197), and, subject to the conditions and restrictions therein contained, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant permits or easements for not to exceed 5 acres of ground adjoining the right of way at each of the locations, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, to be used for the erection thereon of dwellings or other buildings for the convenience of those engaged in the care and management of the works provided for by said acts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

J. C. GARRETT.

The bill (S. 4949) for the relief of J. C. Garrett was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry," and on the same line, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, J. C. Garrett, formerly a captain of Cavalry, a captain of Cavalry to take rank as if he had remained continuously in the service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARUNDEL SAND & GRAVEL CO.

The bill (S. 4526) for the relief of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 2, line 5, before the word "shall," to insert the word "as"; in the same line, after the word "against," to insert "or in favor of"; and in line 6, after the words "and in favor of" to insert "or against," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware and doing business in the city of Norfolk, Va., owner of the steam tug A. G. Bigelow, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said tug and the U. S. S. Susquehanna in Norfolk Harbor on the 26th day of November, 1917, may be sued for by the said Arundel Sand & Gravel Co. in the District Court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against or in favor of the United States in favor of or against the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co. upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not want to take up any unnecessary time by having all of these bills read; but it is quite unsatisfactory to have the amendments to some of them read by the Secretary, without any notion of what is in the bill. In the case of this particular bill—which I have not the slightest doubt is most meritorious, coming as it does from the author—I should just like to have the bill read.

Mr. SWANSON. It is simply a bill where there was a collision between a Government boat and another one; and it is to let the court decide whether the Government or the individual is responsible, and ought to pay damages.

Mr. PENROSE. That seems reasonable. I did not want to oppose the bill. I am glad to have the Senator's explanation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 5371) for the relief of Roland S. Robbins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to cause the account of Merritt O. Chance, postmaster at Washington, D. C., to be credited with the sum of $336, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, being on account of value of 80 war-savings stamps, belonging to the United States Government, which were stolen or otherwise disappeared from the custody of Roland S. Robbins on the 14th day of September, 1918, during the war-savings stamps drive at Keith's Theater, Mr. Robbins being held personally liable for the amount represented, although in possession of them only for the purpose of selling them to the patrons of Keith's Theater and otherwise, and himself receiving no pecuniary or other material benefit from such disposal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5493) authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

The bill (S. 4745) for the relief of the claimants of certain unsurveyed lands in Mississippi County, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none.

The bill is as follows:

Whereas in the Government survey made in February, 1846, and approved December 23, 1846, an area in sections 19, 20, 29, and 30, in township 11 north, range 10 east, in Mississippi County, Ark., containing 602.45 acres, was meandered as a lake, and designated as a lake on the official plat of the survey, which area is known locally as Round Lake; and

Whereas many years ago the riparian proprietors in good faith, believing themselves to be the owners of said area, drained and reclaimed the same by the construction of ditches and canals and cleared every acre of said land, and the same is now in a high state of cultivation; and

Whereas the said claimants are entitled to some equity by reason of such labor, expenses, and improvements, and the great value which they have added to the land: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Government survey of township 11 north, range 10 east, Mississippi County, Ark., approved December 23, 1846, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed.

SEC. 2. That, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, all persons who, at the date of the passage of this act, are in the actual possession of the area in sections 19, 20, 29, and 30 of said township and range, meandered and platted as a lake, and known locally as Round Lake, and who have cleared and are now cultivating said land, and who are the owners of the improvements thereon, shall have a preferred right at any time within one year from the passage of this act to purchase said lands from the Government at the rate of $12.25 per acre: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to grant to any person a title to any part of said land which is shown to be within the limits of land previously surveyed and disposed of by the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5492) granting to certain claimants a preference right to purchase certain public lands in the State of Arkansas was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BUFFALO RIVER ZINC MINING CO.

The bill (S. 2024) for the relief of the Buffalo River Zinc Mining Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Buffalo River Zinc Mining Co., a corporation of St. Louis, Mo., the sum of $4,200, being the amount of money paid by the said company to the United States of America, on or about the 21st day of July, 1904, as the purchase price of certain public lands in Searcy County, Ark., the patents to which have since been canceled at the suit of the United States of America and the said lands having been restored to the public domain; provided, that the Secretary of the Interior shall first make an investigation of all the facts concerning said claim, and shall be satisfied of its justness and of the good faith of the said company and its officers, and that the acts of the agent of the company by reason of which the said patents were canceled were done wholly without the knowledge or consent of said company or any of its officers, and shall certify these facts to the Secretary of the Treasury; the expense, however, of said investigation, if any, shall be deducted from the amount found to be due said company.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY P. GRANT.

The bill (S. 1486) for the relief of Henry P. Grant, of Phillips County, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$7,598.24" and to insert "$7,574.24," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,574.24 to Henry P. Grant, formerly postmaster of Helena, Ark., said sum being the amount he voluntarily paid into the Treasury to make good the shortage of the assistant postmaster, William B. Lindsey, who was duly tried and convicted of said crime and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of four years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 5593) for the relief of certain officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement touching this bill. I think it will conserve the time of the Senate.

The bill relates to a number of claims which have been audited by the War Department. It was sent to me, as the chairman of the Committee on Claims, with the request that it be presented to the Senate. It consists of a large number of claims, most of them being very small. Every year a number of claims of this class arise; and, as may be stated by the former chairman of the Committee on Claims, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], it is exceedingly desirable that this bill should pass. It is quite a long bill; and I am going to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill, and to offer some amendments which have been sent to me by the War Department since the bill was reported by the committee. The amendments are necessary corrections in amounts, or are mere verbal amendments. I make that request for unanimous consent, and I hope Senators will agree to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, why not allow the bill to be read, and then offer the amendments?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am asking that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. There is no practical necessity for the reading of the bill. It contains a large number of accounts. Most of them are small, and the Senate would simply consume a considerable amount of time by having the bill read. Of course, I realize that any Senator can insist upon the reading of the bill; but when we consider the nature of the claims, I am sure the Senator from Wyoming will agree with me.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. As I understand, they are all estimates of the department, moneys due; and the War Department has asked us to relieve the officers, whoever they are, and pay them.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator says, they are small amounts, running sometimes from $1 to $15 or $18, or something like that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. There are, however, a few larger claims, amounting to more than $1,500. There are only a few of those.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I rose simply for the purpose of asking for the total amount. I do not insist upon having the bill read. I would rather have the statement of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The total amount is about $11,500, or a little less.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. ROBINSON. I send to the desk a series of amendments and ask to have them stated.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if the amendments that he proposes are of a like character to the items that are in the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. They are. There are two classes. Most of them are mere verbal amendments that are apparent upon reading the bill. Two of them, however, relate to the amount. They are mere typographical errors, made in the War Department before the bill was sent in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Arkansas is granted. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 19, strike out "$1,635.46" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,636.46."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 5, strike out "$80.80" and insert in lieu thereof "$86.80."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 10, after the word "hundred," strike out "and" and insert "to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 15, after the words "directed to," strike out "all" and insert in lieu thereof the word "allow."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. CROSS.

The bill (S. 2497) for the relief of James W. Cross was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$660" and insert "$92," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James W. Cross, $92, as full compensation to said James W. Cross for personal injuries received as a result of an accident October 26, 1914, without negligence on his part, while he was engaged in the performance of his duties as a laborer at the State, War, and Navy Department Building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR ARREARS OF PAY.

The bill (S. 4139) repealing certain provisions contained in the urgent deficiency act approved December 22, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 12, to strike out the words "under the provisions of this act" and to insert "for pay, bounty, or other allowances," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following provisions contained in the urgent deficiency act approved December 22, 1911, to wit: "No claim for arrears of pay, bounty, or other allowances growing out of the service of volunteers who served in the Army of the United States during the Civil War shall be received or considered by the accounting officers of the Treasury unless filed in the office of the Auditor for the War Department on or before December 31, 1912;" "No claim for arrears of pay, bounty, or other allowances growing out of the service of volunteers who served in the Army of the United States during the War with Spain shall be received or considered by the accounting officers of the Treasury unless filed in the office of the Auditor for the War Department on or before December 31, 1914," relating to claims for arrears of pay, bounty, or other allowances growing out of the Civil War and the War with Spain, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That hereafter no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim for pay, bounty, or other allowances shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, or receive for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than 20 per cent of the amount allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the said accounting officers; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall demand, collect, or receive from the claimant the whole or any part of a claim allowed such claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL.

The bill (H. R. 13482) creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's victory memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the recitals of the preamble be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and the recitals will be omitted.

The Secretary read the portion of the bill following the preamble. The bill is as follows:

Whereas there has been erected by the Perry's Victory Centennial Commission, composed of members appointed pursuant to law, a great memorial monument on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, at a cost of approximately $1,000,000, perpetually memorializing the victory of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry in the Battle of Lake Erie, and Gen. William Henry Harrison's northwestern campaign in the War of 1812, and commemorating the century of peace which has ensued between Great Britain and the United States since the termination of that conflict by the signing of the treaty of Ghent; and

Whereas the Federal Government and the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, New York, Rhode Island, Kentucky, and Massachusetts have severally contributed to the payment of such cost; and

Whereas the legal title to the land constituting the site whereon said memorial has been erected is vested in the United States solely, in perpetual trust, for the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of said memorial and other memorial public uses and purposes not inconsistent with said memorial; and

Whereas said memorial is now self-sustaining and will so continue as to the maintenance thereof, if due provision is made for its care and protection: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That a Perry's Victory Memorial Commission is hereby created, consisting of Nelson A. Miles, Charles H. Davis, and J. Warren Keifer, commissioners of the United States; George H. Worthington, Webster P. Huntington, S. M. Johannsen, Eli Winkler, and Horace Holbrook, commissioners from the State of Ohio; A. E. Sisson, Milton W. Shreve, Edwin H. Vare, T. C. Jones, and George W. Neff, commissioners from the State of Pennsylvania; Arthur P. Loomis, John C. Lodge, Roy S. Barnhart, and E. K. Warren, commissioners from the State of Michigan; William H. Thompson, Chesley R. Perry, James Pugh, Richard S. Folsom, Nelson W. Lampert, Adam Weckler, William Porter Adams, Willis J. Wells, W. H. McIntosh, and H. S. Beckemeyer, commissioners from the State of Illinois; Frederick M. Symonds, John M. Whitehead, A. W. Sanborn, C. B. Perry, S. W. Randolph, Louis Bohmrich, and Sol P. Huntington, commissioners from the State of Wisconsin; William J. Conners, George D. Emerson, John F. Malone, Edward D. Jackson, Simon L. Adler, Martin H. Glynn, William F. Rafferty, William L. Ormrod, Charles H. Wiltsie, and Jacob Shifferdecker, commissioners from the State of New York; John P. Sanborn, Louis N. Arnold, Sumner Mowry, Henry Davis, and Harry Cutler, commissioners from the State of Rhode Island; and Henry Watterson, Andrew Cowan, Samuel M. Wilson, R. W. Nelson, and Mackenzie R. Todd, commissioners from the State of Kentucky, who shall serve without compensation save necessary expenses.

As vacancies occur in the commission on the part of the several States, they shall remain unfilled until only three commissioners from each State remain; thereafter the commissioners from each State shall be three.

When a vacancy shall occur in the commission on the part of the United States it shall be filled by the President of the United States, and when such vacancy shall occur on the part of any State, the same shall be filled by the President of the United States on the recommendation of the governor of such State.

SEC. 2. That said commission, upon the said memorial and the site thereof being turned over to it, shall forthwith have full possession and control thereof with power to maintain, improve, protect, and preserve the same from injury thereto so far as its revenues will permit, and with power to appoint all necessary officers, agents, and employees, and to fix their compensation; also to have such other powers as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes and objects and to fulfill the duties of the commission. It shall not contract any debt or obligation payable otherwise than from the net revenues derived from its operation and management of said site and memorial, or that may be derived by it from other sources.

SEC. 3. That the title to said memorial and site hitherto conveyed to the United States by the State of Ohio is hereby accepted by the United States for the uses, purposes, and trusts therein and by this act provided.

SEC. 4. That the said commission is authorized and empowered to receive donations and bequests, to improve said site, and to erect thereon, when sufficient funds are available for such purposes, other structures of a general public character, but the same shall harmonize with the memorial, and such structures when erected shall become subject wholly to said commission, and the title to the same shall vest as does the title to said site and memorial and be subject to the same uses, possession, trust, control, and management.

SEC. 5. That said commission, through its president and treasurer, shall make, in writing, a report to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States on the first Monday in December of each year, in which shall be stated the condition of the said site and memorial as to preservation, and all receipts and disbursements of money pertaining thereto.

SEC. 6. That the officers of the commission shall be a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer, and such other officers, agents, and employees as it may deem necessary.

The commission shall have power to adopt rules and by-laws for its government and to provide the methods of voting and the number of votes each State having more than three commissioners shall cast at its meeting.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The preamble will stand unless there is objection.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me a short report on this bill, prepared by Judge SLAYDEN, of the House Committee on the Library. I ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Ohio is granted.

The report is as follows:

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on the Library, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 13482):

The Committee on the Library, having considered H. R. 13482, "A bill creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's victory memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes," respectfully refer the bill back to the House of Representatives with the recommendation that it do pass.

A former Speaker, Gen. J. Warren Keifer, accompanied by Messrs. W. P. Huntington, of Ohio; A. E. Sisson, of Pennsylvania; and Simon L. Adler, of New York, appeared before the committee to explain the purposes of the bill.

From the statements of Gen. Keifer and the three gentlemen who were with him the following summary of facts is made and submitted for consideration by the House:

The monument is not only a tribute to the Perry victory but a memorial of the century-old peace between Great Britain and the United States and the treaty by which all armed forces were removed from the Great Lakes. On this point Gen. Keifer said:

"That treaty stipulated that there should be no war vessels beyond 100 tons of either nation, Great Britain or the United States, on any of the Lakes, any of these Great Lakes in the North. Well, it had to be modified as to the weight of the vessels that were there for police purposes after we had steam, and so on. It has always been kept up to the present time, and while we have spent billions of money in trying to fortify the Atlantic coast and the Gulf and Pacific, and have never been sure we have succeeded, we have never spent one dollar to fortify anything on the Lakes. We haven't a city like Chicago or Buffalo, if you please, or Cleveland, or others that could have been built where they are if we had to treat ourselves and our country in relation to Great Britain as we have with the other coasts and regions. So this has been the most important treaty, and it is literally kept. It prohibits Great Britain from having war vessels there and the United States, and the two prohibit the other nations of the world from ever having one there."

In March, 1911, Congress appropriated $250,000 to help build the monument. Contributions were made by nine of the States, to wit: New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Michigan, Kentucky, Illinois, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, and Ohio. These contributions were made on the condition that title to the memorial and site be passed to the United States. All papers touching the conveyance to the United States are in proper legal form, and this bill is merely intended to have the Federal Government accept the memorial and the site and names the first commissioners. Legally the title, to quote Gen. Keifer, "is in the United States now."

Provision is made in the bill for a commission to have charge of the memorial. Three of the permanent commissioners are to be appointed by the President. These are named in the bill and are Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Charles H. Davis, and J. Warren Keifer.

The bill provides a large number of commissioners that, with the passing of those named in the bill itself, will be reduced to three from the United States and three from each of the nine contributing States.

It is the wish of the gentlemen who have been connected with the project from the beginning that the States should be associated with the United States in the control of the memorial, and as the States have paid approximately three-fourths of the cost, the committee believed their request reasonable.

The monument is of granite, 350 feet high, equipped with an elevator, and has room in the visitors' gallery at the top for 200 people. This is a source of revenue that has provided an ample income for the maintenance of the memorial with a considerable margin of gain. Receipts exceeded expenses by $4,329 in 1915, by $4,126 in 1916, by $3,769 in 1917, and by $3,968 in 1918. So the monument is expected to be self-supporting.

The commissioners named in the bill were appointed by the President and by the governors of the contributing States.

The commissioners are to receive no compensation beyond actual expenses in attending meetings, and the committee was assured that all expenses would be paid out of the earnings of the monument itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Ohio that this is a House bill, and perhaps the preamble should be omitted.

Mr. POMERENE. That will necessitate the bill being sent back to the House, and I prefer that that be not done at this stage of the session.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator withdraws his amendment, does he?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not offer any amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought some one asked to have the preamble stricken out.

Mr. POMERENE. The suggestion came from the Chair, and I ask that that be not insisted upon.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, yes. I am glad the Senator has done so, so that the bill will not have to go back to the House.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that was my idea.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

The resolution (S. Res. 339) to amend Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate by adding thereto a paragraph restricting or regulating membership of certain committees of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object, at the request of another Senator, who has asked me to object to the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was just going to say that the Senator from North Carolina was present when this resolution was reported, and it was a unanimous report.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was; that is correct. I am in favor of the resolution myself, but another Senator has requested me to object.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I say, with unanimous consent, just this word, that it is very necessary that this rule be voted upon before the close of the present session, and I shall do what I can to see that it is voted on before we adjourn.

Mr. OVERMAN. As chairman of the committee, I shall not stand in the way. I supported it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that the Senator from North Carolina is in favor of it. I think most of the Senators are in favor of it. There will be no debate. All that I ask is that we may have a vote.

OTIS C. MOONEY.

The bill (S. 3964) for the relief of Otis C. Mooney was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope that bill may pass. It has already passed the Senate once. It relates to a very old man, who wishes to have his record corrected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming give an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. It relates to a soldier who entered the Army during the Civil War and served two years and was honorably discharged. He enlisted again and served nearly two years. He was only a child when he enlisted. His father took him up into Canada, on the plea of giving him a visit, and kept him there until after the time had expired for his return, and he was recorded as a deserter. This is to change his record. It simply gives him a clean record in the last days of his life and the opportunity to draw a pension from now until his death.

Mr. GRONNA. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, Otis C. Mooney shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company K, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, May 18, 1864, and that no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 655, Senate bill 5493. Some objection was made to the consideration of that bill when it was reached on the calendar, and I am informed by the Senator since, when I explained the matter to him, that the objection will not be renewed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5493) authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of those unentered, unreserved public lands, and all of those entered lands for which no final certificates have been issued, within the areas hereinafter described, are hereby made and declared to be subject to the laws of the State of Arkansas relating to the organization, government, and regulation of drainage districts to the same extent and in the same manner, except as hereinafter provided, in which lands held under private ownership are or may be subject to said laws: Provided, That the United States and all persons legally holding unpatented lands under entries made under the public land laws of the United States shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, and benefits given by said laws to persons holding lands in private ownership, said lands being those public lands in Mississippi County, Ark., in townships 14, 15, and 16 north, range 9 east, and townships 15 and 16 north, range 10 east, fifth principal meridian, according to the official surveys thereof approved October 12, 1915, and all of those unentered public lands, and all of those entered lands for which no final certificates have been issued to Poinsett County, Ark., in townships 11 and 12 north, range 6 east, fifth principal meridian, according to the official surveys thereof approved July 30, 1913.

SEC. 2. That the construction and maintenance of canals, ditches, levees, and other drainage works upon and across the lands subject to the operation of this act are hereby authorized subject to the same conditions as are imposed by the laws of the State of Arkansas upon lands held in private ownership, and that the cost of construction and maintenance of canals, ditches, levees, and other drainage works, incurred in connection with any drainage project under said laws shall be equitably apportioned among all lands held in private ownership, all unentered public lands, and all lands embraced in unpatented entries affected by such project. Officially certified lists showing the amount of charges assessed against each smallest legal subdivision of such lands shall be furnished to the register and receiver of the United States land office of the district in which the lands affected are situated as soon as said charges would become a lien if the lands were held in private ownership.

SEC. 3. That all charges legally assessed pursuant to the drainage laws of the State of Arkansas by a drainage district against any unentered public lands, or against any lands embraced in unpatented entries, subject to the provisions of this act, shall be a lien upon said lands which may be enforced by sale in the same manner and subject to the same conditions, except as hereinafter set forth, under which said charges shall be enforced against lands held in private ownership, and whenever any of said lands shall be sold for nonpayment of such charges, inclusive of lands bid in for a drainage district, a statement showing the name of the purchaser, the price at which each legal subdivision was sold, the amount assessed against it, together with penalties and interest, if any, and the cost of the sale, and the amount of excess, if any, over and above all lawful assessment charges and the cost of sale shall be officially certified to the register and receiver of the United States land office of the district in which the lands are situated immediately after the completion of such sale, but nothing in this act shall be construed as creating any obligation on the United States to pay any of said charges.

SEC. 4. That all moneys received from the sale of entered or unentered lands subject to the operation of this act, which shall be in excess of assessments due thereon, together with penalties and interest and the cost of the sales, shall be paid by the proper county officer to the receiver of the United States land office of the district in which the lands are situated, and such excess moneys shall be covered into the United States Treasury as proceeds from the sales of public lands.

SEC. 5. That at any time within 90 days after the sale of unentered public lands and at any time within 90 days after the expiration of the period of redemption provided for in the drainage laws under which the lands are sold, no redemption having been made, after the sale of lands embraced within unpatented entries, the purchaser at such sale, a drainage district being herein expressly excepted from the operation of this provision, shall, upon the filing of an application therefor and an affidavit containing proof of necessary qualifications, with the register and receiver of the United States land office, and upon payment to the receiver of the price of $5 per acre, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry of lands under the homestead laws, be entitled to receive a patent: Provided, That such purchaser shall have the qualifications required in making entry of lands under the homestead laws and any such purchase shall exhaust any further homestead right of the purchaser to the extent of the amount of lands thus purchased by him. Not more than 160 acres of such lands shall be sold and patented to any one purchaser under the provisions of this act. This limitation shall not apply to lands subject to the operation of this act which may be bid in for a drainage district, but no patent shall be issued to a drainage district or to anyone bidding in said lands for a drainage district. The proceeds derived by the Government shall be covered into the United States Treasury and applied as provided by law for the disposal of the proceeds from the sale of public lands.

SEC. 6. That unless the purchaser shall, within the time specified in section 5 of this act, file with the register and receiver of the United States land office an application for a patent, together with the required affidavit, and make payment of the purchase price, fees, and commissions as provided in said section 5, any person having the qualifications of an entryman under the homestead laws may file an application for a patent, together with the required affidavit, and upon payment to the receiver of the purchase price of $5 per acre, fees, and commissions, and in addition thereto an amount equal to the drainage charges, penalties, interest, and costs for which the lands were sold, and if the lands were bid in for the drainage district, an additional amount equal to 6 per cent per annum on the sum for which the lands were sold from the date of such sale, said applicant shall become subrogated to the rights of such purchaser and shall be entitled to receive a patent for not more than 160 acres of said lands. When payment is made to effect subrogation as herein provided, the register and receiver of the United States land office shall serve notice upon the purchaser that an application for patent for the lands purchased by him has been filed, and that the amount of the drainage charges, penalties, interests, and costs of the sale will be paid to him upon submission of proof of purchase and payment by him of said sums. The receiver shall make such payment as soon as said requirement shall have been fulfilled. If the lands were bid in for a drainage district, the receiver will pay to the proper county officers the amount of the drainage charges, penalties, and interests and costs of sale, together with the additional sum of 6 per cent per annum, to which said drainage district is entitled. All remaining moneys to which the United States may be entitled shall be covered into the United States Treasury and applied as provided by law for the disposal of the proceeds from the sale of public lands.

SEC. 7. That a copy of all notices required by the drainage laws of the State of Arkansas to be given to the owners and occupants of lands held in private ownership shall, as soon as such notice is issued, be delivered to the register and receiver of the United States land office of the district in which the lands are situated where any of the lands subject to the operation of this act are affected, and the United States and the entryman claiming under the public land laws of the United States shall be accorded the same rights to be heard by petition, answer, remonstrance, appeal, or otherwise as are given to persons holding lands in private ownership, and all entrymen shall be given the same rights of redemption as are given to the owners of land held in private ownership.

SEC. 8. That this act shall not be effective as to any lands involved in suits instituted on behalf of the United States with a view to quieting title in the Government to such lands until and unless such suits shall be finally determined in favor of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether this bill applies what is known as the Volstead Act to the State of Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not a literal copy of the Volstead Act. It does apply something of the same principle. In the area affected by this bill, known as the subland district, largely, are vast tracts of uncultivated and unreclaimed lands. The title to the greater portion of these lands is in the Government. It is impossible for private citizens within the area to reclaim their land without reclaiming the Government land.

The burdens on the private lands, if the whole burden were imposed upon them, would be prohibitive. The provisions of the bill contemplate that assessments for benefits shall be made against all the lands in the district reclaimed, and the settlers upon the land shall pay their proportionate share for the reclamation of the land. Unless some such measure as this is passed it will be impossible to reclaim these areas which, when reclaimed, are of very great value indeed.

Mr. LENROOT. That is exactly the situation that resulted from the passage of the Volstead Act. I am quite familiar with conditions in the Senator's State, and what I am especially interested in is how this bill differs from the Volstead Act.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was serving in the House of Representatives when the Volstead Act was passed, but I can not state from memory the difference. I do not know that there is any substantial difference.

Mr. LENROOT. Can the Senator state that the interests of the Government are as fully protected in this bill as they are in the Volstead Act?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am sure they are.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is rather a lengthy bill and must have had consideration by the Committee on Public Lands, and the committee apparently made no amendment to it. I therefore ask that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH B. EDDY.

Mr. NEW. When the bill (S. 4864) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the case of Elizabeth B. Eddy was reached it was passed over temporarily because of the absence from the floor of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], by whom it was introduced, and the Senator from Indiana, myself, by whom it was reported. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth B. Eddy, widow of Charles G. Eddy, of New York, N. Y., the sum of $602.92, and the said sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this act.

Mr. NEW. If an explanation of the bill is desired I will say that Elizabeth B. Eddy is the widow of Charles G. Eddy, who was a soldier in the Civil War and who ranked as a sergeant. He was detailed as a telegraph operator and that position carried with it pay at the rate of $70 a month——

Mr. FLETCHER. There seems to be no opposition to the bill and I think it will pass without any explanation.

Mr. NEW. Very well; I ask that it be put on its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. FREDERICK B. SHAW.

Mr. NEW. The same state of facts exists with reference to the bill (S. 4263) for the relief of Capt. Frederick B. Shaw, and I ask unanimous consent that it be now taken up.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Frederick B. Shaw, United States Army, the sum of $356.50, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sum to be payment in full for all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the sinking of the United States transport Meade in the harbor of Ponce, P. R., on or about May 16, 1899: Provided, That the accounting officer of the Treasury shall require a schedule and affidavit from him, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PIKE NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION.

LAND IN MISSISSIPPI COUNTY, ARK.

The bill (S. 5566) for the relief of the claimants of certain unsurveyed lands in Mississippi County, Ark., was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS OF FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

The bill (S. 5512) to amend the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That may as well go over.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator withhold his objection until I can make a little explanation of what the amendments are?

Mr. SMOOT. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The first paragraph simply provides for the appointment of a deputy register, who is really necessary in order to act when the register is away.

The second paragraph is simply for administration purposes and to facilitate the administration of the farm-loan act, and is strongly recommended by the board. Then there is a very small change in the legislative provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator state what the change is?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It relates to the applications for loans, for membership in the farm-loan association. It is found at the bottom of page 2 and the top of page 3 of the bill. It is an unimportant matter except that it facilitates the business.

Section 10 relates to the acts of the farm-loan committee and facilitates the investigation of titles and provides for written reports to be filed for the benefit of the farm-loan board.

Section 4 has no change in it from the existing law except that in partial payments from time to time, instead of having, as the law is now, specific payments of $25 at a time, the amounts are made optional.

Section 20 does not differ in any respect except that it provides that bonds may be issued in denominations of $25 and $50 instead of $20 and $40.

Section 6 simply provides for a change in the signing of the officers of the bank of bonds issued, so that the vice president or the secretary and treasurer may do so instead of putting the whole burden upon the president.

Section 7 contains a provision authorizing the Federal farm-loan bank to limit its search of titles to the period of the statute of limitations, and to make an extra charge where it is necessary to do so, the extra charge to go into a sinking fund to repair any possible loss. They are all merely administrative changes for strengthening the administration of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. There are eight pages of the bill, and it seems to me it proposes to amend about every section of the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Most of the provisions are really a reenactment of the existing law, with the changes I am now suggesting.

Mr. SMOOT. I see there is no report on the measure. It is simply a mere statement that the committee recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was the unanimous action of the committee, and the bill was reintroduced, so as to avoid the insertion of the amendments.

Mr. GRONNA. May I say to the Senator that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] thought it would be well and insisted that the sections should be reenacted, and for that reason the bill is really much longer than there was any necessity to make it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not object to the passage of the bill; I merely wish time to examine it.

Mr. GRONNA. They are simply minor changes, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] stated. I believe the bill should pass. It is a very important measure, and the committee has made a unanimous recommendation for its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, there is no report before us, and no hearings at all, and no opportunity to examine into it to see just what the changes are which are presented. I think it is pretty dangerous to allow a bill of this character to pass when we can not discuss it at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator there is one important change to which I am just now coming, but I have not omitted anything that was of importance. The only important change provides for a revolving fund of $50,000,000 in the Treasury, to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in advancing money temporarily to the banks to purchase bonds when necessary. This revolving fund is secured by selling bonds of the farm-loan bank already in the Treasury, and the bill limits the amount hereafter which the Treasury can advance to $50,000,000, the present limit being $100,000,000. So, in a way, it is a move in the direction of conservatism and merely places the Secretary of the Treasury in a position, after selling the present bonds and putting the money into the Treasury, where he can use that fund, when necessary, temporarily, to tide them over during the sale of bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. I see the bill provides that the bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The law is not changed in that respect.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it is not changed, but does not the Senator think it ought to be changed?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The law is that way anyway, and this bill would not affect that feature of it.

Mr. SMOOT. But does not the Senator believe that this ought to be changed? For instance, we issued our first liberty bonds at 3½ per cent, and they are selling now for 98 and a fraction, whereas the 4¼ per cent bond is down to 94.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is very true.

Mr. SMOOT. Just as soon as the Federal farm loan has a sale of bonds, if they are made free from tax, and they are offered in New York to some of those central banking officers, of course the 5 per cent nontaxable bond will be immediately grabbed up and will not go into the hands of people generally throughout the country, but will be taken by people in quantities as large as they can get for the purpose of avoiding the payment of taxes on those particular bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there is very much in what the Senator says, and I am inclined to think I would be disposed to favor it if it were proposed to change the law in that respect. The bill does not touch that, however, and, as a matter of fact, when we do issue bonds for the Federal farm-loan bank the quantity issued is so small compared to the great issues of the Government for its loans as to be almost negligible.

Mr. SMOOT. But they run into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, no; nothing like that at the present time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that we have already authorized a hundred million dollars for 1918 and a hundred million dollars for 1919.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We authorized the Treasury to purchase; but, as a matter of fact, they have not been required to purchase as much as $100,000,000; and if this bill is passed the quantity that the Treasury will hold will be reduced by the sale of $50,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but the bonds will be marketed and will be owned by somebody else. I had just as lief have the Treasury Department hold them rather than to sell them and pay 5 per cent interest and then have them nontaxable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As a matter of fact, the sale of these bonds is largely under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Federal Farm Loan Board takes his recommendation and suggestion—or dictation, if you please—so that their sales are so made as not to conflict with the sale of the bonds of the National Government.

Mr. SMOOT. They never will conflict. If they put out a 5 per cent bond which is virtually guaranteed by the Government of the United States, morally and in every other way, when it comes to the question of competition with the 3½ per cent bond the Senator knows there will be no competition but that everybody will take the 5 per cent bond.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; if the quantity be large.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me state that after the total issue of 5 per cent bonds to the amount of $155,000,000 the issues were discontinued at that rate. That issue has been discontinued by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Most of the bonds have been 4½ per cent bonds. When they were sold at 4½ per cent the farmers got their money at 5 per cent, and when the 5 per cent bonds were sold the farmers got their money at 5½ per cent. There is to be no other issue of bonds at 5 per cent at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am aware of what the Senator from Florida has just stated, because one of the members of the board asked me what I thought about selling any more than $55,000,000 of these bonds at 5 per cent. I told him it could not be justified for the Government to issue 3½ per cent bonds and at the same time sell a 5 per cent bond. Then the sale was immediately discontinued. I think they did sell some at 4½ per cent, following that action.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are not selling any bonds now at 5 per cent.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska how much of the appropriation which was made of $100,000,000 for 1918 and $100,000,000 for 1919 has been actually invested in bonds?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My recollection is it has been $67,000,000.

Mr. WEEKS. That is the total amount which has been invested out of both funds?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think so; that is my recollection. This bill would provide for the sale of $50,000,000 of those bonds and the payment of the money into the Treasury to be used from time to time, if necessary, to assist the banks in marketing bonds at certain seasons. They make their loans at certain seasons, but the marketing of bonds may extend through the whole year. So there may be a month or two or three at a time when the assistance of the Treasury would be helpful.

Mr. WEEKS. Sixty-seven million dollars of bonds are about the amount which had been promised by the bankers on loans when the directors of the banks came to Congress for assistance last year, and I presume that that is the amount actually invested; but I can not see any propriety in the public policy of furnishing a fund of $50,000,000 to loan in this way, bringing the loans directly into competition with the Government financing, and a competition which the Government can not meet at the rates of interest which Government bonds bear. It really is enabling some citizens of this country to obtain their loans at a lower rate than they can obtain them in other ways. While there may be some justification for that in ordinary times—which I personally deny—I do not see how there can be any justification in such times as these. I think that no money should be loaned under the provisions of this law for which the bonds should not be directly sold and that the Government should not be involved in furnishing money to carry out this law in a way that was not intended when the bill originally passed Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts will recall that it was the Secretary of the Treasury who put a stop to the public sale of these bonds. If the Secretary of the Treasury will merely keep his restraint off, the farm-loan banks will have no difficulty in seling their bonds under the law as it exists. It is only because the Treasury objects to having the sale urged at certain times and has taken the bonds into the Treasury rather than have them thrown on the market that the Treasury has absorbed these bonds.

Mr. WEEKS. Of course, the firm-loan banks will have no difficulty in selling a 5 per cent nontaxable bond under the conditions which prevail to-day. There is no reason why a man should invest in a 3½ per cent Government bond when he can get a 5 per cent bond that is practically guaranteed by the Government. I contend that these loans should not enter into competition with Government financing in any respect. We are going to have difficulty enough in floating the issue of bonds which is about to be made; and until we have financed the war there should not be any Government money involved in financing farm loans for private individuals.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This bill, the Senator will appreciate, actually reduces the quantity that the Treasury will hold.

Mr. WEEKS. I think it does, but it will provide for $50,000,000 of bonds to be used for that purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But if there is an objection to the Treasury holding them, this bill ameliorates that objection and to some extent avoids it.

Mr. WEEKS. It does modify it; but what is John Jones, the man whom we approach and ask to buy Government bonds as a patriotic measure, going to say when he knows that the money is going to be loaned to his neighbor, who happens to be a farmer, because his neighbor can get the money at a lower rate of interest from the Government than he can get it in any other way?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is talking about the present law and not this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I am talking about providing any fund to be used for that purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But this bill reduces the fund.

Mr. WEEKS. I would eliminate the fund; that is what I would do.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator surely would do one thing or the other; he would let the Government keep hands off and let the bonds sell on their merit, or if the Government interferes with the sale of bonds, then the Government ought to take the bonds.

Mr. WEEKS. No; I would not follow that course at all. I do not think these loans ought to interfere in the slightest degree with the Government financing the war, and I think that they ought to be eliminated for the time being from any competition with the placing of the next Government loan.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, that has nothing to do with this measure.

Mr. WEEKS. It has to do with the $50,000,000 provided for in section 8.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This reduces that from $67,000,000 to $50,000,000; so the Senator admits that this bill helps some.

Mr. WEEKS. It does; but I want to help more.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I apprehend, of course, that it would be a waste of time to attempt to consider that bill at this moment. I am sure it could not now make any headway.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is right, and I, therefore, ask that the bill go over, because it would be merely a waste of time now to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senate knows how earnestly I desire the bill passed, but I do not think it would make any progress if taken up now.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

Mr. MYERS. I had hoped there would be no objection to the bill. I think it can be passed in an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5557) to safeguard temporarily, by a license control of imports of potash, the interests of domestic potash producers until trade conditions are readjusted, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. NORRIS. May I inquire——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was objection made to the consideration of Senate bill 5557?

Mr. NORRIS. May I inquire what Senator objected to the consideration of that bill?

Mr. WALSH. I made objection to the consideration of the bill. I think it involves too serious a question to be determined offhand upon the call of the calendar.

Mr. KING. I think so, too.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not the Senator from Montana withdraw his objection and let the bill be briefly explained?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to do that, but in view of the statement concerning the nature of the bill which I made I shall object to its consideration under the five-minute rule.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is going to object anyway, of course there is no use taking up the time of the Senate to make an explanation.

The bill (H. R. 15018) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EXHIBITION OF RED FLAG.

The bill (S. 5207) to declare unlawful the exhibition of a red flag, and to fix a penalty therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that that bill be passed over. I desire to say that if the bill had had the consideration of the Senate it was my purpose to tender an amendment which I think would have removed any objection to it. I would tender an amendment to strike out the words "general cessation of industries" wherever those words occur in the bill. Then I propose to submit a further amendment which I ask to have read from the desk.

Mr. FRANCE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator object to the reading of the amendment?

Mr FRANCE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The bill having been objected to, is it not improper to take up amendments to it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection; yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I object.

Mr. FRANCE. Objection was made by me.

Mr. WALSH. I asked unanimous consent to present an amendment to the bill.

Mr. FRANCE. I object to the consideration of the bill and amendments.

Mr. WALSH. I am not asking for the consideration of any amendment or of any bill. I simply want to have the amendment read.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent to present the amendment and let it lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FRANCE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand there was any objection to the request made by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be objection to doing anything under the unanimous-consent agreement. The only thing the Chair can do is order the amendment of the Senator from Montana to be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH. That is all I ask.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5305) to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live-stock products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SUNNYSIDE, UTAH, WATER SUPPLY.

The bill (S. 4479) for the protection of the water supply of the town of Sunnyside, Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 3, page 3, line 4, before the word "Act," to strike out the word "this" and insert the word "the," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the said Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe and enforce such regulations as he may find necessary to carry out the purpose of this act, including the right to forbid persons other than those authorized by him and the municipal authorities of said municipal corporation, from entering or otherwise trespassing upon these lands, and any violation of this act or of regulations issued thereunder shall be punishable as is provided for in section 50 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909," (35 Stat. L., p. 1,098), as amended by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 857).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5265) authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to accept and administer for the benefit of the public and the encouragement of industry inventions, patents, and patent rights, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 313) to amend section 4 of the act to regulate commerce, passed February 4, 1887, and subsequent amendments thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CAPE COD CANAL.

The bill (S. 5658) to authorize the acquisition and operation by the United States of the Cape Cod Canal was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill has been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment in section 2, page 2, line 3, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$10,000," and insert "$10,000,000"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of this waterway, with the view to maintaining a depth of 25 feet at mean low water, with suitable channel widths, out of which sum may be paid any awards which may be made under the aforesaid condemnation proceedings: Provided, That the total amount to be paid under such awards shall not exceed $10,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. In connection with the bill just passed, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, February 26, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing copy herewith of House Document No. 1825, which contains a table showing the accidents sustained by barges in tow between Boston and Norfolk through the open sea, which would have been avoided had the inland waterway been available.

This might be useful in connection with the bill to authorize the acquisition and opening by the United States of the Cape Cod Canal.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MRS. SUSAN A. NICHOLAS.

The bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Susan A. Nicholas was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I did not understand who objected to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that it go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will let me explain it very briefly before he insists upon his objection. The bill is to provide for the payment for property taken during the Civil War from persons formerly living in Louisiana but now living in New York. They have tried faithfully to get their claim paid by the Government through the Court of Claims, but they have not been able to do that. They have been guilty of no laches. I ask the Senator not to make objection to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. If this claims bill is passed by Congress on the testimony that is shown in the report we will open the door to untold hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars of such claims.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would like to suggest to the Senator that the testimony is of the same character as that in a great many claims which have been paid.

Mr. SMOOT. Not claims of this character, I will say to the Senator. The Committee on Claims has agreed to consider and recommend favorable action upon certain classes of claims, but not the class of claims in which this bill falls. Therefore I object.

Mr. RANSDELL. It was favorably reported by the committee in the last Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the bill goes over.

HEIRS OF ADAM AND NOAH BROWN.

The bill (S. 534) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was considered in the Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown $11,583.53, being due to them as owners of the brig Warrior since the middle of June, 1815.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR NELSON.

The bill (S. 1557) for the relief of Arthur Nelson was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have some Senator explain why a claim against the Government for $48 for office rent was not paid. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the chairman of the Committee on Claims, to explain it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will ask that the bill may temporarily be passed over. I have not had an opportunity to look into it recently.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REFUND OF STAMP TAXES.

The bill (S. 5482) providing for the refund of taxes collected for stamp tax on certain policies under the emergency tax act of October 22, 1914, under the proviso of which act such policies were exempt, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Central Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co., of Van Wert, Ohio, the sum of $2,888.77, being the amount paid for stamp taxes under the emergency revenue act of October 22, 1914, on policies of such company, which policies were exempt from such tax under a proviso to said act as determined by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in the case of Niles, collector of internal revenue, against Central Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co., decided June 10, 1918, and reported in volume 252 of the Federal Reporter, page 564.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas give me his attention? The Senator from Ohio, who introduced this bill, has entered the Chamber; and, if the Senator would prefer, I will ask the Senator from Ohio the question that I desired to ask the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think I can answer the question; but the Senator is present, and I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. SMOOT. This is Senate bill 5482, Order of Business 691. It provides for the refund of taxes collected for stamp tax on certain policies under the emergency tax act of October 22, 1914, to the Mutual Insurance Co. of Van Wert, Ohio, in the total amount of $2,888.77; and I wanted to ask the Senator what was the basis of the claim of this amount? The reason why I ask the question is that a lot of these claims—I do not know how many of them—were paid, and at the time they were paid they were all of the claims that were known to the department. In the report from the Committee on Claims there is no statement from the department as to whether these claims are recommended by the department or not. Perhaps the Senator can explain it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I may say that this matter was first called to my attention by a Congressman in whose district this company does business. It grew out of this state of facts: Under one of the earlier revenue bills it was believed that mutual companies were exempted from the payment of this tax. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue at that time held that they did not come within that exemption, and they were obliged to pay these taxes. Later the company brought suit to recover these taxes as being illegally exacted, and the United States district court sustained the contention of the company and they recovered a judgment, as I recall the facts now, for these amounts. At least, the court held that they were improperly exacted, and that finding of the court was final; so that they are seeking now to recover the amount of these taxes, with a view to refunding them to the policyholders. I think there can be no possible objection to this bill. The attorney who presented it is one of the very high-class lawyers of the State.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call attention, also, to the fact that the case was appealed from the district court to the circuit court of appeals and there affirmed.

Mr. SMOOT. And it was affirmed by the higher court?

Mr. ROBINSON. And it was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals; yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if that is the case, I think it ought to be paid.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; I think there is no doubt about it at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

STANDARDIZATION OF SCREW THREADS.

The bill (H. R. 15495) to annul an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends the act providing for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads, approved July 18, 1918, so that it will read:

That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the commission for the standardization of screw threads, hereinafter referred to as the commission, which shall be composed of nine commissioners, one of whom shall be the Director of the Bureau of Standards, who shall be chairman of the commission; two representatives of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; two representatives of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and four to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, two of whom shall be chosen from nominations made by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and two from nominations made by the Society of Automotive Engineers.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to ascertain and establish standards for screw threads, which shall be submitted to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce for their acceptance and approval. Such standards, when thus accepted and approved, shall be adopted and used in the several manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments, and, so far as practicable, in all specifications for screw threads in proposals for manufactured articles, parts, or materials to be used under the direction of these departments.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate such standards for use by the public and cause the same to be published as a public document.

SEC. 4. That the commission shall serve without compensation, but nothing herein shall be held to affect the pay of the commissioners appointed from the Army and Navy or of the Director of the Bureau of Standards.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1456) making appropriation for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CORRUPT TRADE PRACTICES.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was temporarily out of the Chamber, being called out on some other business, when Order of Business No. 586, Senate bill 4603, was reached. It is a bill to protect interstate and foreign commerce against bribery and other corrupt trade practices. I understand that the Senator from Ohio objected to it, and it went over under his objection. I further understand that the Senator has some amendments to the bill that he desires to offer.

Mr. POMERENE. The objection was made by my colleague [Mr. HARDING].

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know the nature of his objections.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not going to insist on the bill being considered. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] objected, and I understand that he had some amendments that he desired to offer to it at some time. In view of the fact that it is a Senate bill, and there is very little chance of its passing Congress anyhow, I am not disposed to urge it at this time, although it is very important. I ask leave to print in the RECORD in connection with it some resolutions received from the Travelers' Association, by way of indicating the nature of the bill and the general commercial desire to have it enacted into law.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a regular meeting of the Travelers' Association of the Paint and Allied Trades of New Jersey, held at No. 842 Broad Street, Newark, N. J., February 7, 1919, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas we, the members of the above-named organization, knowing the disadvantages of unfair methods which have at times been employed in obtaining business; and

"Whereas, we being desirous of placing ourselves on record in opposition to such practices: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Travelers' Association of the Paint and Allied Trades of New Jersey, do most earnestly urge the early passage of Federal criminal legislation for the suppression of commercial bribery, and the further protection of interstate and foreign commerce against other corrupt trade practices; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and these resolutions be forwarded to the Chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and to such other members of the Federal Government as have the power to cause an early adoption of this particular legislation."

E. F. HOPPE, President.
[SEAL.] F. S. VERNOY, Secretary.

EXPENSES UNDER TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a moment ago I objected to the consideration of Order of Business 697, Senate bill 1456. I ask that it may be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] comes into the Chamber—that it may go over without prejudice.

EDUCATION OF NATIVE ILLITERATES.

The bill (S. 5464) to promote the education of native illiterates, of persons unable to understand and use the English language, and of other resident persons of foreign birth; to provide for cooperation with the States in the education of such persons in the English language, the fundamental principles of government and citizenship, the elements of knowledge pertaining to self-support and home making, and in such other work as will assist in preparing such illiterates and foreign-born persons for successful living and intelligent American citizenship, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object. Let the bill go over.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold that objection for just a moment?

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that while the subject is all right the bill, in my opinion, is fundamentally wrong.

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Senator withhold the objection for a moment? On this bill, which a good many people concur in believing is the most important bill before Congress, I want to have read and placed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and then I want to follow that with a letter from the President. That may change the mind of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. PENROSE. Just on that point, if the Senator will permit me, I want to say that the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior for the expenditure of money are sufficient to bankrupt this Government or any other Government. The actual recommendations made by him to either branch of Congress during the life of the present Congress run into the billions.

Mr. KENYON. This is a measure to make American citizens out of 8,000,000 people, or thereabouts, who can not speak the English language.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Senator permit this letter to be read?

Mr. PENROSE. Not only that, Mr. President, but after the estimates were all in and solemnly handed to the Finance Committee a couple of days ago as the basis of the contemplated loans a deficiency of nearly $900,000,000 was discovered in a most culpable error in the Quartermaster Department——

Mr. KENYON. Not in the Interior Department.

Mr. PENROSE. And the Secretary of the Interior comes to the Committee on Agriculture, which has not put a bar up in the last six years against the expenditure of money, and gets a favorable report for $100,000,000 for a chimerical project to reclaim farms for soldiers.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I insist on the regular order.

Mr. PENROSE. I have a right to speak on the bill for five minutes, as I understand.

Mr. SWANSON. No.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I will stop by saying it ends in a $4,000,000,000 expenditure.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from Utah that this letter may be read into the RECORD.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to its going into the RECORD; but if the Senator offers that letter as an explanation for urging the passage of the bill I shall feel constrained to give my reasons for opposing the bill, and I think they are very persuasive, and it will take up unnecessary time.

Mr. KENYON. It is not taking any unnecessary time to explain the reasons for trying to make American citizens. If the Senator objects now, I shall take the first opportunity during the consideration of any of these bills to read that letter and also a letter from the President on the subject.

Mr. ASHURST. Although the distinguished Senator from Utah has objected to this bill, I will state that I am quite interested in it, and I trust he will allow us to have two or three minutes to discuss it. I am sure I do not want to delay the calling of the calendar; but I think the Senator from Iowa, who is a most courteous Senator, ought to have the opportunity at least to have read a letter from the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior, if he has such letters. I myself would crave the opportunity to say at least 8 or 10 sentences on this bill. It is a very important bill, and will not my good friend, the junior Senator from Utah, withhold his objection until two or three of us can say at least half a dozen sentences on the bill?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that the letter from the President is not to me personally, but to Congressman BANKHEAD, of the House, who is one of the authors of this measure, and he has consented that I may use it. Has the Senator any objection?

Mr. KING. The only objection I had was this: If the Senator gives the reasons which he has for supporting this bill—and there are very many strong reasons—I, having objected to it, would feel constrained to give the many reasons which I have against this measure and to suggest a policy which I think very much superior to the policy suggested in the letter from the Secretary of the Interior; and because we were anxious to have other measures disposed of, and in view of the fact that this measure will not be considered now, it seemed to me that it was unnecessary. I have no objection, however, if the Senator desires to have read the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, to that being done, but I object to the consideration of the bill now.

Mr. SWANSON. Has objection been urged to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from Utah to withdraw the objection, so as to let a letter be read into the RECORD from the President of the United States on this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. The question is whether the bill is opposed or not. Under this unanimous-consent agreement, if opposed, it goes over.

Mr. KENYON. I will read the letter in my own time. It will be read.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask the Chair to enforce the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the request of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. My request is that this unanimous-consent order be enforced. If it is opposed, it goes over.

Mr. KENYON. It has not been enforced up to this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 5607) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, for a certain described tract of land for public park purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to discuss a matter. I want to discuss the general subject.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ASHURST. I have the right to five minutes on this bill.

Mr. KING. Objection was made to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KENYON. Has a bill now been taken up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made to the last bill, the title of which was read.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there was no objection made to Calendar 700. In fact, the title has not been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Montana that the junior Senator from Utah made and reiterated an objection.

Mr. MYERS. He was objecting to Calendar 699, not Calendar 700. I ask that Calendar 700 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will restate Calendar 700.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5607) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, for a certain described tract of land for public park purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have hoped against hope that the Senate might get down to business and consider this important bill, which the Senator from Arizona has discussed.

When it was reached on the calendar the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected. I rose to ask that I be permitted to place in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to me concerning the bill, and a letter from the President of the United States to Congressman BANKHEAD concerning the bill. That simple privilege seems to have been denied. So in taking a little time I disclaim being responsible for extending the debate.

I trust the chairman of the Committee on Education, the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], whose heart I know is in this bill, will, before the Senate adjourns, move to take up the bill and test out the Senate as to whether it is willing or unwilling to pass a bill of such tremendous importance to the people of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Iowa now place those letters in the RECORD?

Mr. KENYON. I am going to place them in the RECORD, but now I am going to say a word or two, not taking over four or five minutes.

The purpose of this bill is to try to Americanize and assist the States in the process of Americanizing people in this country who can not read, speak, or write the English language. For every dollar that the Government contributes to this cost the States must contribute a like sum. Senators, stop and think. Do you realize that there are over 8,500,000 people in the United States to-day who can not read or write our language?

Mr. MYERS. The Senator means 8,500,000 adults?

Mr. KENYON. Over 10 years of age; and the majority of those who do not know the English language are uneducated in any language. That eight and one-half million are more than the combined population of Nevada, Wyoming, Delaware, Arizona, Idaho, Mississippi, Vermont, Rhode Island, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oregon, Maine, Florida, Connecticut, and Washington; more than all the men, women, and children of all the cities in the United States west of the Mississippi River except one, and equal to the population of the Southern States at the time of the Civil War. Think over these figures.

That is the problem. We had a magnificent procession of soldiers yesterday passing up the Avenue, reviewed by the President, men who had gone out to save the country of which we are so proud. It would take a procession of these illiterates who can not speak our language, two abreast, marching 25 miles a day, two months to pass a reviewing stand in front of the White House. Do you get that?

Is there need for such a bill as this? Is there need to do anything to Americanize that population? When men can not read the Constitution, can not read the statutes, how can we inculcate ideas of government in them; how can they grasp the ideals of this Republic? There is your field for bolshevism. Foreigners go to them; Russians can preach to them of the success of the Bolsheviki movement. They believe it; they can not read a paper; they can not read a message of the President of the United States; they can not read a speech of the United States Senators; they can not learn otherwise. Is it right to the Nation? Is it fair even to the illiterates?

That is the greatest problem, Mr. President, that America has to deal with. We talk about being a great melting pot, and we are; but a melting pot will not amount to anything if you have no fire under the pot to do the melting. This bill is to endeavor to put a fire under the melting pot to make Americans out of these illiterate people who have come to our shores. If we can not make Americans out of them by education and if any of them have ideas against our Government, as many of them have, though not all of them, of course, then other courses may be pursued. Let them be returned to the country from which they came.

We are appropriating millions of dollars here for agriculture to teach people agriculture, and yet there are three and one-half million people in agriculture in this country who can not read, speak, or write the English language. Can not read a bulletin of the Agricultural Department.

Those are some of the reasons why it seems to me it is important that this bill should receive consideration. Ignorance makes for inefficiency. Inefficiency means more accidents. The report of the Bureau of Mines lately issued shows that the non-English-speaking races in the anthracite region are twice as liable to death and injury as the English-speaking workers. What kind of citizens of this Nation can 6,000,000 or 8,000,000 illiterates make?

I have other figures here, but I am not going to take the time of the Senate to insert them. They have been perfectly startling to me. There are nearly 10,000,000 unnaturalized persons in the United States. Is that not a proposition that concerns us at all? Is it not just as important that we give some attention to this great problem of Americanization as it is that we should pass appropriation bills? I wish all Senators would read a part of the report of the Secretary of the Interior, and whatever the Senator from Pennsylvania may say about the Secretary of the Interior, he is a man of great vision for his country and is deeply interested in this splendid work. If Senators will read that report, their patriotism will be stimulated and the problem of making democracy safe where such a large proportion of the population is illiterate will loom large before them.

Mr. President, there is, of course, no use of arguing as to the effect illiteracy has upon wages and in holding labor down to a class from which it could well desire to rise. There is no use of arguing the question of its limiting the quantity of production; of its making necessary greater supervision; that it breeds suspicion and disagreements and makes for accidents. Illiterates do not think for themselves; they permit others to do their thinking. They can be made to believe anything. They can not be made to understand the questions of cooperative labor; they can render no aid in solving the great problems of industrial unrest; they can have no knowledge of simple economics. The blood of America is being diluted by ignorance. These are self-evident propositions. Who will deny them.

I wish this Congress would pass the Burnett immigration bill. That is one of the things we ought to do. It is important in this country that every man, every woman, and every child shall know and be able to think in at least one language—not in foreign accents, but to think in accents of the United States.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. GRONNA addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KENYON. I yield first to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I have a letter from Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, urging the passage of the Burnett immigration bill and constructive action by Congress. Might I be permitted to ask that it be inserted in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I should be very glad to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1919.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to ask your careful consideration of the following cablegram received from President Gompers and members of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, now in Paris, France:

"PARIS, February 23, 1919.

"MORRISON, Washington, D. C.:

"Five members executive council in Paris urge you lay before the Congress and President Wilson, when he arrives, the following:

"Our investigation and findings on European countries show that unrest and unhealthy conditions now prevailing among laboring classes are due mainly to after-war conditions; that there is danger to the public weal in some of the efforts that are being put forward by the discontented masses; and that to prevent growth of similar conditions in America Congress must take such action as will put governmental affairs into constructive, rather than a passive or questionable position.

"We recommend that project to defer building construction for governmental purposes until February 1, 1920, be abandoned and that individual enterprises in building industry be encouraged.

"We also strongly urge that action be taken toward completion of ships now 25 per cent or more finished, thus giving employment to those now idle and likely to become idle, and with the additional advantage of avoiding the loss which would otherwise occur if ships were not completed, even if necessary to sell ships at less than normal prices if not needed by the Government.

"GOMPERS."

There is great danger that the attitude of Congress in the defeat of various measures which might relieve the present industrial situation will result in increasing the unrest and uncertainty prevailing in this country.

I earnestly urge that the following bills be given your earnest support and that they be enacted before the close of the session, and that the course of legislation may be so shaped that it will tend to quiet rather than provoke unrest and discontent:

Burnett immigration bill (H. R. 13669); Kenyon public-works bill (S. 5397); bill for irrigation, drainage, etc., to furnish homesteads for returning soldiers, sailors, and marines; appropriations for United States Employment Service and other essential activities of the Department of Labor.

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary American Federation of Labor.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Iowa inadvertently criticized Congress. The Senator will remember that Congress by an overwhelming vote passed the Burnett bill, but that it was vetoed by the President.

Mr. KENYON. That is not the Burnett bill which I have in mind. I refer to the Burnett bill prohibiting immigration into this country for a period of four years, which, I understand, has passed the other House and is now in some committee of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator permit me to call attention to the fact that the passage of this bill is avoided and prevented by the rules of the Senate? It is the rules of the Senate that make it impossible for this body to legislate, and I do hope that when the Republicans take charge of the body they will pass rules that will permit this body to function, and thus meet the expectations of the American people. I will give my cordial support to that.

Mr. KENYON. I hope they will; but I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I do not believe they will.

The steel and iron manufacturers of this country employ over 58 per cent of foreign-born helpers; the slaughtering and meat-packing trades, 61 per cent; the bituminous coal-mining industry, 62 per cent; the silk and dye trades, 34 per cent; the glass-making enterprises, 38 per cent; the woolen mills, 62 per cent; the cotton factories, 69 per cent; the clothing business, 72 per cent; the boot and shoe manufacturers, 27 per cent; the leather tanners, 57 per cent; the furniture factories, 59 per cent; the glove manufacturers, 33 per cent; the cigar and tobacco trades, 33 per cent; the oil refiners, 67 per cent; and the sugar refiners, 85 per cent.

Of the foreign-born wage earners in this country who have been here five years or more, who were of adult age on arrival, only 31 per cent are naturalized. They have no knowledge of the history or the ideals of this Republic, and they can not get that knowledge. National unity, it seems to me, is dependent upon some language which all of our people can speak and in which they can think.

I venture the assertion that not more than four people out of every ten in the United States can accurately state any four principles laid down in the Constitution of the United States. Education is not merely a State matter. This bill proceeds on the theory of helping the States. Men have said to me, "My State does not need this." Let us see as to that. Alabama may need it; they have a high rate of illiteracy there; but the State of Iowa probably does not need a penny of it. We can take care of all of these questions. But illiteracy in any State in the Union is a problem for every other State in the Union. It is not entirely a State question; it is a national question. Illiteracy in Alabama is a question for the people of Iowa, of Wisconsin, and Minnesota. It is a great national question, and it ought to be treated as such.

We are doing more for education nationally of the population of the Philippine Islands—and what we have done there is a great tribute to America—than we are doing nationally for the education of the people of this country.

England, in the midst of this great war, could stop and work out a great plan as a part of her reconstruction plan for helping education. Education is the foundation stone of this Republic; it is an insurance policy against Bolshevism, against sedition, and against any attempts to tear down this Government.

Mr. President, I ask to have read at the desk a letter from the President to Representative BANKHEAD, who has been one of the ardent supporters of this measure, and whose name it bears, together with that of the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Following that I ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 27, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. BANKHEAD: Perhaps it is idle to hope for the passage of any but the most immediately essential measures at this session, but I have been so much impressed with the importance of the so-called Americanization bill that I am writing to ask if you see any chance of getting it through without interfering with the supply bills?

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
House of Representatives.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 28, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is, as you state, no one matter which overshadows in the public mind or in importance to the Nation that which is known as Americanization. It carries with it no implications of partisanship or of private interest. It touches and vitally affects every section of the land. It is to-day's problem and the answer to many of the problems of to-morrow.

We are not in good faith with the world so long as we are proclaiming the supreme advantages of democracy, and winning the world to our belief in it, and at the same time our War Department reports that 20 per cent of the first million and a half men called to arms in America could not write a letter home, could not sign a pay roll or read a written order. You are a conservationist and so am I. You believe in preventing waste of the gifts of God to this Republic. What greater waste can there be than the waste of human raw material? Certainly a man can not be of this world fully who is denied access by illiteracy to all that human thought and experience has written in books and in papers. And this Government can not maintain its place of leadership, or claim such position, unless those who constitute it are informed and have that knowledge which is the foundation of judgment. Can you tell me of anything more humiliating to Americans than to find American Army officers training men in camp in the meaning of the English words "halt," "forward," "march"? There are responsibilities that go with democracy, and the first and greatest of these is that every man shall know our language, understand it when spoken, and be able to use it as a means of understanding what America is and what the opportunities of the American are.

And so I say to induce the States to do this work is a national duty and a national opportunity.

The need for it has never before been realized as it is to-day. Intelligent labor is insistent upon it, that it may itself be protected from the mistakes of the ignorant. Every mine operator and every manufacturer suffers in damages because his men do not know the instructions that are given them. A more informed workman means a safer workman, a wiser workman, a better-paid workman. We can pay our national debt by the added wealth, the greater output of a better-equipped body of workmen. This is not rhetoric, it is downright common sense. It means money to America to give our people the primary tools of knowledge. And it means safety, too. It is not safe to be at the mercy of ignorance. Of what use is it to preach sane social or economic theories to those who can have no wider vision than their own doorstep? How can the ignorant check what they are told and test it by the experience of the world? It is absurd to expect it. And these are days when all the weather bulletins do not come out of the Agricultural Department. Of what use is it to tell men that this is a land governed by law, with a written Constitution, under which men can make just such a society as will fit their needs best, when they can not know what that Constitution guarantees to them and can not for themselves gain any fair interpretation of what the tradition, the history, and the spirit of this country is?

We are at the end of a session; but I would heartily urge that no effort be spared to make its close significant by the passing of this measure, through which we can make America mean so much more to many millions of our people, home born and foreign born, than it has meant before.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON,
United States Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on any bill on the calendar from now on shall be limited to five minutes. I wish to state that unless that consent is given and we proceed to the consideration of the calendar under that rule I will object to any further bills being considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before agreeing to the unanimous consent requested by the Senator, I should like to get clear in my mind what the existing unanimous consent is under which we are proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated, in response to a parliamentary inquiry, that the Chair did not find in the unanimous-consent agreement any limitation of debate to five minutes, as under the ordinary rule, and, therefore, the debate might proceed subject to objection to the bill under consideration at any time.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the request of the Senator from Virginia will be granted, because if it is not granted all the other bills remaining on the calendar will be cut off, and there are a few that ought to be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia for unanimous consent?

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I inquire the meaning of the request? I do not understand that it means to limit all debate on the bills to five minutes, but that each speech shall be no longer than five minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. That each speech shall not be longer than five minutes on any measure called on the calendar under the present unanimous-consent agreement. That is my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, while I was off the floor for a few moments a bill on the calendar was reached which I reported——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Connecticut that there is a bill undisposed of before the Senate at the present moment, which the Chair thinks should be disposed of.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not wish to object to that at all.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the bill under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Connecticut after the pending bill is disposed of.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very good.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Chair and to the Senate why I was so insistent that Calendar No. 700 be not considered objected to. There seemed to be some misunderstanding. I knew when the Senator from Utah objected that he meant his objection to apply to Calendar No. 699; I knew he had no objection to Calendar No. 700; but the Chair and the clerks at the desk seemed to understand that objection was made to Calendar No. 700, and I desired to remove that misunderstanding. I am interested in Calendar No. 700, because it was called to my attention by Representative CRAMTON, of Michigan. It was carefully investigated by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and provides for the selling to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, of a small tract of 120 acres of land, I believe, at a dollar and a quarter an acre. It is, I am told, about the only tract of public land left in northern Michigan. It is very rocky and not fit for argiculture, and some city in the county of Huron wishes to use it as a park. I was interested in it because my attention had been drawn to it, and I hope that the bill may pass.

Mr. President, while I am speaking I wish to take sharp issue with the criticism that was made a short time ago by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on the Secretary of the Interior. He used very rash and extravagant language and made very rash and extravagant assertions, stating that if all the appropriations asked for by the Secretary of the Interior were granted it would bankrupt the Government. That assertion, in my opinion, is wholly unjust, unwarranted, and undeserved. The Secretary of the Interior is a man whose vision, great statesmanship, and comprehension of the economic questions facing this country now and to face it in the future are unsurpassed by those of anybody in this country. He has plans for the betterment of the people of this country, and whenever he asks for an appropriation there is something substantial back of it; there is something substantial and beneficial to come from it.

He has only asked for one large appropriation from this Congress, and that is an appropriation of $100,000,000 for the purpose of reclaiming lands and furnishing homes for returned soldiers and sailors. That project is in behalf of men who offered their lives and limbs in defense of the liberties of this country. It is not to be a donation; it is to be a loan, which they are to repay out of money made from honest labor through avenues afforded by the United States Government. It is a commendable project, and I do not think that the Secretary of the Interior is subject to censure on account of bringing it forward. I hope it may be enacted by this Congress, and I think that it would be of incalculable benefit to the people of this country.

That is all I care to say, and I hope now that Calendar No. 700 will be passed unanimously.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, this bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND]. He is unfortunately detained from the Senate by reason of seriousness illness in his family. It comes here with a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands. It gives to the county of Huron a small acreage of ground for park purposes, and it is thoroughly protected under the usual requirements of Congress, so far as minerals, and so forth, are concerned. I sincerely hope the bill may be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES UNDER TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I assume now that Order of Business 697, Senate bill 1456, may be recurred to under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood it was temporarily passed over.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Was there objection to the bill?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That bill appropriates $1,500 to pay an amount which was due to one of the secretaries of Caleb Cushing when he was counsel for the Government under the treaty of Washington at the Geneva arbitration. There are three committee reports—two by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and one by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs—in favor of the bill. There are two communications from the Department of State giving the history of the claim and stating that Mr. Hackett never received the money and that he is equitably entitled to it. It was appropriated before. This reappropriates some $800 and adds enough to it by a new appropriation to bring it up to $1,500. The salaries of the secretaries of these three commissioners were increased by the State Department from $1,500 to $3,000, and Mr. Hackett never got his $1,500.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think I will object to it. I know all about that claim. I used to be on the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill, and it goes over.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5611) granting to certain claimants a preference right to purchase public lands in the State of Arkansas was announced as next in order.

Mr. NUGENT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5652) providing for cooperation between the United States and State governments in the rural settlement of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to promote the reclamation of lands, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, that is too important a bill to be passed at this time of the session. I ask that it go over.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I just want to say one word. That is the bill embraced in the plan of the Secretary of the Interior to furnish homes for soldiers and sailors. I think we might as well consider it now as at any time. I had hoped we could do it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

MODOC NATIONAL FOREST, CAL.

The bill (H. R. 17) to include certain lands in the counties of Modoc and Siskiyou, Cal., in the Modoc National Forest, Cal., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any lands within those certain portions of Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, Cal., found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be available for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow or regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon described as follows, to wit:

Commencing at that point on the California-Oregon State line where the same crosses the west line of the Modoc National Forest, being in section 29, township 48 north, range 8 east, Mount Diablo meridian; thence southerly and westerly, following the meanderings of the said west line of said Modoc National Forest to the point where the same crosses the south line of township 45 north, range 4 east, Mount Diablo meridian, at the southeast corner of section 34 in said township; thence west, following the section lines to the southwest corner of township 45 north, range 3 east, Mount Diablo meridian; thence north along the township line between ranges 2 and 3 to the point where the same crosses or intersects the California-Oregon State line; thence east along said State line to the point of beginning; also all of sections 34 and 35, township 48 north, range 16 east, and the west half of section 2 and all of section 3, in township 47 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be included in and made a part of Modoc National Forest, Cal., by proclamation of the President, for the purpose of production of timber, protection of stream flow, or regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon, and thereafter to be governed, controlled, and used under the same rules and regulations now in force or to be hereafter adopted governing said Modoc National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GIG HARBOR MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (H. R. 11219) providing for the appraisal and sale of the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation in sections 5 and 8, all in township 21 north, range 2 east, Willamette meridian, in the county of Pierce and in the State of Washington, be caused by the Department of the Interior to be surveyed and subdivided into tracts and lots to conform as far as practicable to the tracts and lots lawfully occupied by the tenants thereon on December 5, 1917.

SEC. 2. That after said survey and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register and receiver in the manner provided by law, and thereafter any lawful lessee in actual occupancy on December 5, 1917, of any portion of the lands described in section 1 hereof who made actual settlement thereon in good faith under the terms of a lease by the War Department, or a sublease thereunder on said date, or the heirs or assignees of such lessee or sublessee, shall be entitled to purchase for the appraised value one of such surveyed tracts so occupied, no right of purchase of such lessee or sublessee to exceed the lands actually occupied and improved by him on December 5, 1917, and in no case exceeding 10 acres in a body, according to Government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon the payment to the Government of a sum of money equal to the appraisal value thereof, such appraisement to be made as provided by law: Provided, That in making such appraisement the appraisers shall not include the improvements thereon made by the occupants of such lands: Provided further, That payment to the Government may be made in one sum, or one-tenth cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, payable annually, as the purchaser may elect.

SEC. 3. That if any tract of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not purchased by the lessee or sublessees, his heirs or assigns, as provided in section 2 of this act, within 90 days after the same becomes subject to purchase under the provisions of this act, then and in that event the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of the remaining lands under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations," and the said lessees, sublessees, heirs, or assigns, in occupancy of lawfully leased tracts on December 5, 1917, who do not purchase such tracts shall have the privilege of removing from their tracts any buildings placed thereon, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reappraise any unsold tracts from time to time before offering the same for sale under said act of July 5, 1884.

SEC. 4. That any lands needed for lighthouse or roadway purposes may be segregated or reserved for such use, and the lands so segregated or reserved shall not be subject to disposal hereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we recur for a minute to Order of Business 601, House bill 12210; and I should like two or three minutes in which to make a statement about it, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not wait until we get through with the calendar?

Mr. MYERS. We are nearly through now. If I wait until we get through, I can not go back. I want to go back now, while I can. It will not take over two or three minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12210) to amend the act of May 14, 1898, as amended by the act of March 3, 1903, entitled "An act to extend the homestead laws and to regulate the sale and entry of public lands along the shore of navigable waters in Alaska."

Mr. MYERS. I want to make a statement of two or three minutes about this bill. It is a matter in which I have no personal interest, but it is a matter of great importance to the people of Alaska. It was objected to a while ago, and I did not think to make any statement then, but I want to make a statement about it now.

It is intended to remedy a very bad state of affairs in regard to the public lands of Alaska. It was introduced in the House by Delegate Sulzer, of Alaska, and passed the House, and I feel that it should really be given some attention here. It is very earnestly not only recommended, but urged, by both the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture; and to give you an idea of the nature of the bill, and their views about it, I will read briefly from the House report. It says:

> This provision of the homestead laws has been applicable only in the Territory of Alaska, and has had the effect of greatly retarding the settlement and development of the Territory. The coast line of Alaska is 26,000 miles in extent, and the river frontage measured on both sides of all navigable streams must be several times the length of the coast, as the departments have found it necessary, under the law, to consider all streams navigable that would float the smallest craft at any season of the year.

In the letter of the two Secretaries to the House Committee on the Public Lands it is said:

> The bill, if enacted, would furnish relief from certain restrictions in the homestead law which are applicable only in the Territory of Alaska. The special provisions in the homestead law as applicable to Alaska, requiring that alternating 80-rod strips be left between homesteads fronting on navigable waters and limiting the frontage of any entry to 160 rods, have been found, in many cases, to work unnecessary hardship, without in such instances the slightest offsetting public advantage. In the national forests this restriction is unnecessary, since all lands are already reserved and no land is opened to entry until first examined, classified, and listed by the Secretary of Agriculture for entry under the forest homestead act. Lands needed for public purposes, such as harborage purposes, are not opened to entry anyhow, no matter how far distant from other patented lands, and no matter how small an amount of shore line is involved. The present law, therefore, merely operates to prevent the listing of land which might be used for agricultural purposes, and which is of no value for harborage or other water-front purposes. In effect, the measure under consideration would leave such spaces reserved, excepting where it is found they are not needed for public purposes. Outside of the national forests, discretion in making such exceptions and restoring such reserved spaces to entry would, by this measure, be vested in the Secretary of the Interior.
> The enactment of this measure would enable the executive departments to afford immediate relief to many worthy settlers who have in good faith occupied, improved, and cultivated lands of no special value because of their water frontage, and have in every way complied with the requirements of the homestead law, excepting that they are found to be within 80 rods of another entry fronting upon navigable water, or it is found that their water frontage, following the sinuosities of the shore, exceeds the 160-rod limitation.
> Since this measure fully protects all public interests, while at the same time allowing the utilization of lands which would otherwise remain unnecessarily unused and reserved, it is our opinion that the bill under consideration should be enacted into law.
>
> Very truly, yours,
>
> ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
> Acting Secretary of the Interior.
> D. F. HOUSTON,
> Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, just a word. I understand my time is limited to five minutes, and I have quit. Now, can not the bill be voted on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator made no motion.

Mr. MYERS. I asked unanimous consent to recur to it, because it was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I did not object to it, and I have no objection; but somebody in the Senate objected to it, and he must have had a reason. I do not think that after some Senator has objected to a bill unanimous consent should be asked to take it up.

Mr. MYERS. Sometimes, when an explanation is made, a Senator withdraws his objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. But some of the Senators are not here now.

Mr. MYERS. I do not know who objected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this is a very important measure, and we ought not to try to pass a bill of this kind while debate is limited to five minutes, and I shall object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Secretary will proceed with the next bill on the calendar.

ENLARGEMENT OF YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (H. R. 13350) to add certain lands to the Yellowstone National Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. NUGENT. I ask that that bill be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was Calendar No. 705 called?

Mr. MYERS. Calendar 705 was not read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Calendar No. 705 is not in the file of the Secretary of the Senate. It has not yet been printed. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the next bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do I understand the Chair to say the bill has not been printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair is informed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that it is printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recur to that measure at the end of the call of the calendar, unless some Senator makes an objection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I just want to say in regard to Calendar 706, which has been objected to, that it is supported by the Secretary of the Interior and the Director of the National Park Service, who are very earnestly in favor of it.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, in respect to Calendar No. 706, I will say that I apprehend that a great proportion of the lands intended to be added to the Yellowstone National Park are in the State of Wyoming. It appears, however, from information coming to me, that certain portions of those lands are in the State of Idaho. I know nothing whatever in respect to this matter of my own knowledge, but during the past days I have received a communication on behalf of a large number of people in the State of Idaho entering very strenuous objection to the passage of this bill. I received a protest from the officers of the Idaho Wool Growers' Association, from the officers of the Idaho Horse and Cattle Growers' Association, from agricultural agents in certain counties in Idaho bordering on these lands, as well as from the officers of certain local horse growers' and cattle growers' associations; and under those circumstances I consider that I am justified in asking the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Secretary will now recur to Calendar No. 705, which has just been received at the Secretary's desk.

LINCOLN-DOUGLASS SANATORIUM, OF DENVER, COLO.

The bill (H. R. 11368) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for a certain-described tract of land, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for the following tract of land, to wit: The northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 1, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 2, in township 3 north, range 61 west of the sixth principal meridian, in Colorado, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found in the land and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: And provided further, That this grant shall be subject to all prior valid existing rights under the land laws of the United States, and that if the grantee shall fail to use the land for sanatorium purposes or shall devote the same to other uses the title thereto shall revert to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

The resolution (S. Res. 469) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to continue investigation of German and Bolsheviki propaganda and to incur and pay the expenses of said investigations, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know who objected.

Mr. GRONNA. I objected.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that we need only four days to complete that investigation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I consider this an acknowledgment that the Department of Justice is not functioning. With the stringent laws that we have on the statute books on this subject, including the espionage law, why is it necessary to have any additional committees to investigate the matter? Furthermore, so important a matter as this should have been brought to the attention of the Senate earlier, and it should not be brought up at a time when we are limited to five-minute speeches.

I believe that the Department of Justice has all the authority necessary to stamp out anarchy and lawlessness, and I believe they should be stamped out. I also believe that the Senate committee now has all the authority it needs to conclude its investigations.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate has authorized us to make the investigation. We have not finished it. We would like about four days in which to finish it and get up our report. That is all the resolution is for. Does the Senator still object?

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that we have a right to do it anyway, and we are going on to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call for the regular order.

THE CENSUS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) providing for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JUNEAU, ALASKA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Texas to yield for just a moment. The Public Buildings and Grounds Committee to-day reported a bill that is considered an emergency measure, increasing the limit of cost for a public building at Juneau, Alaska. The conditions there are deplorable. It is only half a dozen lines; and I ask unanimous consent to consider and pass that bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the bill to which the Senator from Washington refers can be considered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the Senate temporarily proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5648. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committe of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5648) to increase the limit of cost for the construction of the United States public building authorized at Juneau, Alaska. It increases the limit of cost for the construction of a public building at Juneau, Alaska, authorized by section 4 of the public buildings act approved June 25, 1910, by the sum of $450,000, to meet the cost of additional space needed for rooms for the Territorial legislature and for the Territorial library and museum to be located therein, and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into contract for the completion of said building within the limit of cost provided in the act of 1910 and the additional limit herein authorized.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF CHARLES MORGAN, MAIL CONTRACTOR.

Mr. SHEPPARD obtained the floor.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. GAY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 473.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will it take any time?

Mr. GAY. I think not. If it provokes any debate I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the resolution.

Mr. GAY. I move the adoption of the resolution,

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask that the resolution may be read.

Mr. GAY. It is a request on the Secretary of the Treasury to report the facts as shown by the records of the Treasury Department in a claim involving Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Co. It is a local matter, and it is one that has been pending for some time. I merely ask for its consideration at this time in order to advance business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 473) submitted by Mr. GAY on the 26th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report the facts, as shown by the records of the Treasury Department, as to a claim of Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Co., as assignee of Charles Morgan, mail contractor, for $2,094.17 for one month's extra pay, under certificate No. 74 of the sixth auditor, which claim was certified to Congress for appropriation in House of Representatives executive documents as follows: No. 29, Forty-sixth Congress, second session (p. 99); No. 30, Forty-sixth Congress, third session (p. 133); No. 26, Forty-seventh Congress, first session (p. 78); No. 153, Forty-eighth Congress, second session (p. 93); No. 314, Fifty-first Congress, first session (p. 5); and No. 210, Forty-ninth Congress, first session (p. 17), and was reported upon favorably by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives in its report No. 2750, Fifty-first Congress, first session, and further reported to Congress in Senate Document No. 92, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session (p. 18); and to report also whether any reason appears to the Treasury Department why appropriation should not now be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to know something about it.

Mr. GAY. The resolution, I will say, simply calls on the Treasury Department to show the record in this case and to report also whether any reason appears to the Treasury Department why the appropriation should not be made. It is only asking for information.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to information being given as to this mail contract.

Mr. GAY. That is all it asks for.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I think it also seeks an expression of opinion as to whether it ought to be paid or not.

Mr. GAY. Whether there is any reason why it should not be paid.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no reason why the Treasury Department should be asked to give such an opinion.

Mr. GAY. It is following the custom that has existed before in a number of other cases. However, I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate with a discussion of the resolution. I thought there would be no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to getting the information.

Mr. GAY. I told the Senator from Texas that if there should be any objection to it I would not press it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will strike out the words "and to report as to whether any reason appears to the Treasury Department why appropriation should not now be made," I have no objection to the other part of the resolution.

Mr. GAY. I am perfectly willing to have that amendment made.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. CALDER. I give notice that at the appropriate time I shall move to suspend the provisions of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI, prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the third deficiency bill:

That the Postmaster General is authorized and empowered, within the limits of the amounts herein authorized—

(a) To construct a tunnel or subway in the city of New York along, through, and under such street or streets as may be designated by the local authorities for the purpose of transmitting mail matter between the post office located at or near the terminal station of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in said city and the post office located at or near the terminal station of the New York Central Railroad Co. in said city.

(b) To provide such type of equipment and of operation as, in his discretion, he may consider desirable and practicable for the efficient operation of said tunnel or subway.

(c) To purchase, lease, or acquire any land or interest therein, in the name of the United States, which may be necessary in constructing or equipping said tunnel or subway.

(d) To enter into a contract or contracts with a private individual, firm, or corporation for the construction, equipment, and operation, or separately for construction, equipment, or operation of said tunnel or subway upon such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable.

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the expenditure of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized, and in executing the authority granted by this act the said Postmaster General shall not expend or obligate the United States to expend more than the said sum, excepting for the maintenance and operation of said tunnel or subway, the expense of which shall be a charge against the general appropriation of the Post Office Department.

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

ADDRESSES BY JUDGE STAFFORD.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I had the pleasure of hearing an address by Judge Stafford, of the Supreme Court of the District, the other day on Lincoln at the Lincoln anniversary. He has also delivered an address to the Vermont Bar Association on the subject of "A League of Nations." I ask that these two addresses be referred to the Committee on Printing, in the hope that they may be recommended for printing as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that reference will be made.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to announce that at 9 o'clock, or as soon thereafter as any Senator yields the floor who has it, I am going to present the conference report on the oil and gas leasing bill, Senate bill 2812, and ask unanimous consent at that time to proceed to its consideration. If such agreement is not granted, I shall then move to take up the conference report for consideration. I give this notice so that any Senators who may be interested in the matter may be here.

CONSTITUTION OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, it is not my purpose at this time to discuss at length the proposed constitution of the league of nations, but I believe it is the duty of every Senator to make known at this time to the country and to President Wilson his position upon it.

The Senate never has had since the beginning of this Republic a more important responsibility than it will have when the peace treaty shall finally come before it for ratification, amendment, or rejection. At this time the country is confronted with an unprecedented situation, unprecedented, in the first place, because for the first time the President of the Republic has left American soil and has spent months on foreign territory, participating in the formation of a peace treaty. I am not criticizing that, for if he shall be successful in securing a treaty that will be in the interest of America, that will be acceptable to the American people, that will in some measure at least prevent wars in the future, the entire American people will give their approval.

But the situation is unprecented in a more important respect. The commission that has been at work for some months in Paris has, through one of its committees, presented this proposed constitution of a league of nations, a constitution which we are told is not the American plan, but is the English plan. That proposed constitution has been agreed to by the President of the United States and the commissioners whom he has selected. The President has returned to America upon this proposition, written in very large part by those having at heart not the interest of America, but the interest of their own countries, not to seek the counsel of the American people, not to seek the counsel of the United States Senate, but as he himself states, merely to report progress. From all we can gather, the President is not asking for the advice of the American people as to any portion of this proposed constitution.

In addition to that, we find Senators, notably the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], insisting that there shall be no criticism of this proposed constitution, that it is now absolutely perfect as if inspired from on high; that no one, either in the Senate or elsewhere, can make any suggestion for its improvement that should receive any consideration either from President Wilson or from those who are entitled to seats in the peace conference.

Mr. President, since the convention that framed our Constitution no more important question has confronted the American people. The time for discussion is now. If the Senate will not ratify a treaty embodying the league of nations, as now proposed, President Wilson should know it before his return to Paris. Silence upon the part of a Senator now may be regarded as acquiescence. If the President knows upon his return to Paris that modifications must be made in order to secure ratification by the Senate, the presumption is that he will secure such modifications as may be necessary. If he does not, then in case of ultimate failure of the Senate to ratify the treaty he must take the responsibility for any consequences that may follow. I recognize that the appropriation bills are important and that many must fail of passage by next Tuesday if this matter is to receive proper discussion; but these bills can be passed at a special session, while the discussion of this matter should not be postponed.

I am not opposed to a league of nations. I favor it. I approve the general plan of the formation of the league as proposed. In my judgment the country will approve the proposed constitution if certain material modifications are made and other provisions simplified and their interpretation made certain.

Articles 1 to 7, inclusive, it seems to me, are free from objection except in one important particular, already pointed out by others who have addressed the Senate upon the subject, and that is the equality of voting power of every nation. Serbia has the same power in this league as the United States. The vote of Greece weighs as heavily in arriving at the judgments of the league as does that of the United States. It has already been pointed out that in the meeting of the delegates Great Britain will have five votes, the United States will have one. This objection was recognized by the framers of the constitution in the provision made for the executive council whereby the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan will always constitute the majority; but it must be remembered that under article 15 any dispute between the nations, members of the league, may on application of either party be taken out of the hands of the council and referred to the body of delegates; so that, in fact, the provision against domination of the league by small nations becomes of no value. If the league is to have any powers beyond a moral force and recommendation, the United States should not be placed upon an equality with Czecho-Slovakia in determining the liberties of the world and the future of mankind. President Wilson truly says the United States is the most important factor in the world to-day. This is due to two things:

Our example to the world as an unselfish, liberty-loving, self-governing people, and

Our entire freedom of action to determine for ourselves what course will best serve the preservation of our own liberties and the future of civilization.

This freedom of action is not only to be surrendered to a league of nations but it is to be surrendered to a body in which we shall have no greater voting power than Portugal. Either this inequality must be remedied or else our freedom of action must be preserved.

We next come to article 8, relating to disarmament.

The matter of disarmament is one of the most important of the President's 14 points, so far as the future peace of the world is concerned; but I agree with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] that there is nothing in this article, or anywhere in the constitution of the league, that requires reduction of armaments.

All that this article does is to direct the executive council to formulate a plan for disarmament and propose the same to the nations members of the league, but its adoption is wholly optional with each government. True, when once adopted the limit of armament can not afterwards be exceeded without the permission of the executive council, but no nation would be insane enough to adopt such plan so long as there was any powerful nation, either within or without the league, that had not adopted it. The result would be that a separate convention would have to be entered into and agreed to by all the powerful nations of the world before reduction of armaments could be accomplished. All the league of nations could do would be to propose such a convention or treaty. Thus, in the most important factor for the prevention of future wars, the reduction of armaments, so strongly emphasized by President Wilson in his 14 points, the league is powerless.

The same observations can be made of the second paragraph of the article, relating to manufacture of munitions and implements of war. The action of the league is advisory merely. In the third paragraph agreement is made that there shall be no concealment of the condition of industries as are capable of being adapted to warlike purposes, and that there shall be full and frank interchange of information as to military and naval programs.

This paragraph may be of value in that such information, although always secured by powerful nations through some means or other, can by this paragraph be secured as a matter of right.

I can see no objection to article 8. It can do no harm, and in initiating a program for disarmament it may do some good. But we should not be deceived by any representation that this league will insure reduction of armaments, for it will not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator construe the last sentence of the paragraph which he has just read as compelling a nation to disclose any invention which might directly or indirectly be applied to the waging of war?

Mr. LENROOT. I am frank to say that I think either interpretation might be gathered from the language. The language is vague and indefinite upon that subject.

Article 9, providing for a permanent advisory commission on the execution of the provisions of article 8, and on military and naval questions generally, will be beneficial in affording expert advice in formulating a program to be proposed to the parties to the league.

We next come to article 10, whereby the high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. By this article the United States would become obligated to use all its resources and all its man power, if necessary, for the preservation of the existing territory and political independence of every nation in the league if attacked by any other nation. This means we would be in honor bound to send our troops to every quarter of the globe where trouble may arise. No matter how despotic a nation may be, though their own people may be fighting for liberty, no other nation can assist them, or, if they fight, they must fight not for liberty, but for the preservation of despotism.

If Turkey should be admitted to the league, so far as this constitution is concerned, the Sultan may massacre the Christians within its borders at will. Such action will not be within the jurisdiction of the league, nor will any member of the league have the right to go in and free the Christian peoples and enable them to set up a separate Government. To illustrate, if Armenia had remained under the Turkish Empire, we would by this article guarantee that it should forever remain under Turkish rule and no nation would be permitted to assist them to freedom. True, by this war Armenia will become an independent nation, but in the years to come there may be other Armenias, peoples may struggle against despotism and for freedom, but this league of nations under this article would not only prevent us from helping them, but we must actually fight any nation that would undertake to help them. Surely this is not making the world safe for democracy. I am not unmindful of the fact that this article would also prevent a despotic nation from extending its territory and enslaving free peoples, but to prevent autocracy extending in one direction, we should not prevent liberty extending in another. Moreover, the United States never would make war against any nation, great or small, except for its own safety, or to bring liberty to others, as was done in Cuba, but, under this article, we can never, whatever the provocation may be, assist any people to free themselves from a despotic government and establish their own independence. I say we can not and neither can the league of nations do so. If we fight at all, under the terms of this article, we must fight against them, not for them.

If there is trouble in the Balkans in the future, we must send, under this obligation, our quota of troops to Europe to preserve the territorial integrity and existing political independence of the Balkan States. If Bolshevists or Socialists in Russia should undertake to assist in overthrowing any of the monarchies in the Balkan States, we must fight Russia, we must become a party to every little quarrel in Europe and contribute American boys and American money to stop it. No such obligation should be imposed upon us. The European nations members of the league should be primarily responsible for the peace of Europe.

The United States should be primarily responsible for peace in the Western Hemisphere. If the European nations shall be unable to maintain peace, then they should be free to call upon us for help; but we should be left free to decide for ourselves whether the situation is such as to call for our intervention. If the peace of the world is menaced, we will intervene, as we did in this war, but we should not be obliged to do so. On the other hand, the United States will prevent external aggression against any of the nations in the Western Hemisphere, and will ask no aid from European nations in so doing.

I do not think we can safely agree to this article as written, either from an American standpoint or from the standpoint of safeguarding the liberties of mankind. We can safely have an understanding or agreement, such as was had between France and Great Britain in 1912. That understanding was in these words—Sir Edward Grey to the French ambassador in London:

> I agree that if either Government has grave reason to expect an unprovoked attack by a third power, or something that threatened the general peace, it should immediately discuss with the other whether both Governments should act together to prevent aggression and to preserve peace, and, if so, what measures they would be prepared to take in common.

Here, then, was no obligation, except to discuss and consider common action. And yet in 1914, when the European war was started, that understanding was sufficient to bring Great Britain and France together, because they realized that it was necessary for them to fight together against a common enemy.

Article 10, in question, could well be amended along the same lines by agreeing that in the case of external aggression or threatened aggression against one of its members the executive council should at once take jurisdiction of the matter and advise such common action as it may deem necessary in the particular case. The article might go even further, by entering into an obligation that in no case should a member State extend its territory, either through force or peaceful means, without the consent of the inhabitants of the territory affected.

There should be no objection to article 11, for any war or threat of war should be a matter of concern to the league; but it should be observed that the high contracting parties reserve to themselves to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. In this article, while a threat of war is declared a matter of concern to the league, no powers, even of an advisory nature, are granted to the league, but the parties to the league reserve to themselves entire freedom of action. In view of the subsequent articles, however, it is difficult to conceive what such freedom of action could be.

It should be noticed that this article relates to war or any threat of war, while the previous article relates to external aggression. The mind at once inquires whether these two phrases are synonymous or not. The presumption is they are not, and that the term "external aggression" in article 10 may mean something less than war. If this be true, article 10 is all the more dangerous, for we may be obligating ourselves to prevent propaganda, from the outside, tending to overthrow an existing government. For many years Irish societies have had for their object a free Ireland. Under article 10, could this Government be obligated to suppress such Irish societies? I merely raise the question, but I will say, Mr. President, that while I have not had opportunity to examine the judicial interpretation of the words "external aggression" or "aggression" in international law, if there be any such judicial interpretation, I do find in Webster's Dictionary that the word "aggression" has, among others, this interpretation:

> The first act of injury; the first act leading to a war or a controversy.

If that be true, and we are committed to protect every country against external aggression, it means that we are committed to take the side of that nation, the member of the league, although the dispute may be only a controversy, although there may be merely organizations in one nation that are by propaganda, financial assistance, or otherwise, attempting to assist the people of another nation, also a member of the league, to gain their liberty.

Articles 12 and 15 should be considered together, for they relate to the same subject. Both cover in part the same ground, and, to a certain extent, seem to be inconsistent with each other. Under article 12 the high contracting parties agree that they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the dispute to arbitration or to the executive council of the league, and until three months after the award of the arbitrators, or a recommendation by the executive council, and that even then they will not resort to war as against a member of the league complying with the recommendation of the executive council. Under article 15 the parties again agree that any dispute between members of the league likely to lead to rupture shall be referred to the executive council. Article 12 provides that war shall not be resorted to against any member of the league complying with the recommendation of the council. Article 15 binds the parties in the same manner only if the vote of the members of the council, other than the parties to the dispute, is unanimous. This section provides that in any event a recommendation shall be made under this article, but it is binding only if unanimous. Under article 12 there is no such qualification. This article also provides that the executive council may upon its own motion refer the dispute to the body of the delegates and upon application of either party it shall be so referred. If the recommendation of a majority shall have any binding force, then even without the addition of any other nations to the league the five great powers will constitute a minority. Czecho-Slovakia, Greece, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, and Serbia could outvote the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. If, on the other hand, the decision shall be binding only if unanimous, a case probably never would arise where a member would be obligated to refrain from war following the recommendation of the council or the body of delegates.

I think everyone should agree that the inconsistency in these two articles should be remedied. If the action of the league is to be binding only if unanimous, there may be no great danger in these articles, but if otherwise the United States can not safely delegate to this league, in which Roumania shall have the same voting power, questions which we do not recognize as justiciable, questions which may involve our honor, aye, even our future existence as a Republic.

From a reading of articles 12 and 15 one is led to believe that they were separate drafts prepared to cover the same subjects, and the commission was unable to decide which should be selected, and so they selected both of them. If one believes that action by a majority should be binding, section 12 can be pointed to as so providing. If one believes that unanimous action only should be binding, section 15 can be pointed to as so providing.

Article 13, providing for voluntary arbitration of justiciable questions, should be approved. It merely reiterates the declaration of The Hague conventions of 1899 and 1907. It is interesting to note in this connection, however, the reservation made by the United States upon signing both of such conventions. It is in the following language:

Nothing contained in the convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state, nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

Article 14 provides for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice, and it seems to me there should be no disagreement as to the desirability of this article.

Article 16 provides for the enforcement of the covenants under article 12. If this were limited to awards made under arbitration of disputes voluntarily submitted to the league, I see no objection, and even if it included all justiciable questions it perhaps should receive approval, but the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has clearly pointed out the danger to the United States if this article is to cover all disputes of every nature. He particularly pointed out the possibility of Japan raising the question before the executive council of our exclusion laws. Unquestionably the league would have the power under the proposed constitution to open our gates to Japanese, Chinese, and oriental immigration, or else we would have to repudiate every contract made in the league. Forcibly preventing the landing of such immigrants after the award would constitute an act of war, and by that act we, by the terms of this article, would be at war with every member of the league, and would suffer all the penalties in the article provided. Are the American people ready to submit the determination of our immigration laws to a league of nations?

Mr. President, I undertake to say that no constitutional lawyer—and I do not make any pretense of being such—of standing in the United States would ever render an opinion that, if this league constitution be adopted as now proposed, our immigration laws will not be within the jurisdiction of the league of nations. All that is necessary to give this league of nations jurisdiction is a dispute between two nations, a dispute under one article, that may lead to a rupture. Will anyone say from the experiences we have had in the past that there has been no dispute between Japan and the United States on this question? Will anyone say that, if this constitution be ratified, the very next day Japan can not again raise the question which she has raised before, and, on our failing to come to an agreement that is satisfactory to her, under the very provisions, the explicit provisions, of this constitution, she may appeal to the executive council, and the executive council then must take jurisdiction of the dispute? There can not be any question of the jurisdiction of the league over immigration laws or any other of our domestic laws that may be in dispute with any other nation.

Ah, Mr. President, the reply to that criticism made to-day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the reply that is being made by other defenders of this league in the form in which it now stands, is always "President Wilson says that is not so; President Wilson says that it is clear this league would have no jurisdiction of our immigration laws;" but President Wilson will not be the final interpreter of the jurisdiction that is conferred upon this league of nations by this constitution. That will be determined by the interpretation of the constitution itself, and it will be determined by the interpretations, presumably, of men versed in international law, and it is no answer either to this criticism, or any other, that President Wilson says it is not so.

Article 17 deals with nonmember States, and in case of disputes provides for membership in the league for the purpose of such disputes. This should be considered in connection with articles 12 and 15, which I have already discussed, and the observations made with respect to these articles apply to article 18. I would, however, call particular attention to the last paragraph of this article, reading as follows:

If both parties to the dispute, when so invited, refuse to accept the obligations of membership of the league for the purposes of such dispute, the executive council may take such action and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and will result in the settlement of the dispute.

It will be noted that the disputes here referred to are not limited to disputes which may lead to war, but they include all disputes of every nature. The consent of the nations to submit the dispute is not required. There may be no threat of war. The nonmember nations involved in the dispute may have no thought of war, but here the executive council is given power to take such action as will settle it. By what right can this self-constituted authority intervene in such cases? By what principle of democracy can it be asserted? It boldly asserts the right of this league to govern other self-governing peoples without their consent. There can be but one situation where interference could be justified, and that is where such disputes might affect the rights or menace the safety of a member of the league. To go further than that would be despotism.

Article 19 governs mandatories. As I interpret this article the executive council shall have the right to designate members of the league who shall undertake the supervision of and become the guardians of those colonies and territories formerly belonging to the central powers and now proposed to be given their independence but not able to stand by themselves. The article recites that the tutelage of such peoples should be intrusted to advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience, or their geographical position can best undertake this responsibility. Specific mention is made of communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire, Central Africa, South Africa, and the South Pacific isles. A very casual reading discloses unmistakably that Great Britain will take care of Africa, but who will take care of and be responsible for Turkey? Just as clearly as the paragraph relating to Africa points to Great Britain, which will be to her advantage, so just as clearly does the paragraph relating to Turkey point to the United States. The sick man of Europe is to be turned over to the United States. Notice the language: "The wishes of these communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the mandatory power." This language is not used in speaking of Africa and the South Pacific isles, it is used only of communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire.

Then turn to President Wilson's Boston address, "There is no nation in Europe that suspects the motive of the United States." That is true, and we all glory in it, but because it is true every weak, struggling people in Europe will ask that the United States be made its guardian, and the communities lately a part of the Turkish Empire are sure to select the United States, and article 19 declares that as to those peoples their wishes should be the principal consideration.

Further quoting from the President's address:

Whenever it is desired to send a small force of soldiers to occupy territory where it is thought nobody else will be welcome, they ask for American soldiers.

Mr. President, I do not believe American mothers and fathers are willing to send their boys to keep the peace with the unspeakable Turk through all the years to come. Our boys are now in Russia, kept there in violation of the Constitution. The American people insist that they be withdrawn. I have had hundreds of letters upon the subject, all without exception demanding the return of our boys. Think you the American people will be any more willing to send their boys to Turkey? Is Turkey a menace to the peace of America? Is it our business to preserve law and order there? How generous our European associates are! As a reward for our intervention in the great war, for the sacrifice of 50,000 American boys now sleeping beneath the sod in France, given to preserve our own liberties and our own institutions here in America, we are to be permitted—no, not permitted; we shall be required—to keep an American Army in the Turkish Empire. Mr. President, the American people will not submit to this, and if there were no other objections to the proposed constitution this provision as it now stands would cause its rejection by an overwhelming majority of the American people. This article should be amended so as to make it clearly optional with any member of the league to accept the mandate, and it should be provided that it could only be accepted with the consent of the legislative body of the nation invited. It should further be provided that the mandate could be surrendered to the league at any time.

Article 20, relating to labor, is advisory only, and if this league can make any recommendations resulting in a benefit to labor it should be welcomed.

Article 21 provides that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league. Just what this language means no one seems to know. If it means that the league shall have power to take jurisdiction over tariff laws, shipping, and so forth, of States members, of course it can not be approved by the United States. If, on the other hand, it means no more than the provisions known as the most-favored-nation clause of our treaties, there may be no serious objection. In any event, there can be no excuse for not amplifying this article and making plain what is meant.

The remaining articles, 22 to 26, inclusive, should, it seems to me, receive our approval as they stand. As this constitution now stands it is a perpetual covenant. No provision is made for withdrawal by any member. I think, inasmuch as it is an experiment, its life should be limited to 10 years. If it is a success, it can then be made perpetual or further extended. If it is a failure, the nations should not be perpetually bound by it.

Mr. President, I have thus hastily reviewed the different articles of the proposed constitution. I have tried to approach this question without prejudice, without partisanship. I have studied it solely as an American, anxious and ready to approve it in so far as I believe it to be consistent with the aims and purposes and ideals of America. I am not ashamed to say that in its consideration I have had America first in mind. Our soldiers fought primarily not to make democracy safe in the world but to make it safe in America, and by making it safe here, by preserving our own freedom, we can best make it safe for others.

We all pay tribute to President Wilson's idealism, but I believe it better to insure the realization of our ideals here in America rather than surrender any part of them for the possibility of the realization of a world ideal. Mr. President, this is not the first time that a league of nations has been proposed, with the realization of noble ideals as its professed object.

The Holy Alliance in 1815 was a league with declared ideals of the highest order, and it is not out of place in this connection to read the declaration of that league, signed in September, 1815, by Russia, Prussia, and Austria:

In the name of the Most Holy and Indivisible Trinity, their majesties the Emperor of Austria, the King of Prussia, and the King of Russia, in consequence of the great events which have marked the course of the last three years in Europe, and especially of the blessings which it has pleased Divine Providence to shower down upon those States which place their confidence and their hope in it alone, having acquired the intimate conviction of the necessity of settling the steps to be observed by the powers, in their reciprocal relations, upon the sublime truths which the holy religion of our Savior teaches; they solemnly declare that the present act has no other object than to publish, in the face of the whole world, their fixed resolution, both in the administration of their respective States, and in their political relations with every other Government, to take for their sole guide the precepts of that holy religion, namely, the precepts of justice, Christian charity, and peace, which, far from being applicable only to private concerns, must have an immediate influence upon the counsels of princes, and guide all their steps, as being the only means of consolidating human institutions and remedying their imperfections. In consequence, their majesties have agreed on the following articles:

ART. 1. Conformably to the words of the holy Scriptures, which command all men to consider each other as brethren, the three contracting monarchs will remain united by the bonds of a true and indissoluble fraternity, and, considering each other as fellow countrymen, they will, on all occasions and in all places, lend each other aid and assistance; and, regarding themselves toward their subjects and armies as fathers of families, they will lead them, in the same spirit of fraternity with which they are animated, to protect religion, peace, and justice.

ART. 2. In consequence, the sole principle in force, either between the said governments or between their subjects, shall be that of doing each other reciprocal service, of testifying by unalterable good will the mutual affection which ought to animate them, of considering themselves all as members of one and the same Christian nation; for the three allied princes look on themselves as merely delegated by Providence to govern three branches of the one family, namely, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, and thus confess that the Christian world, of which they and their people form a part, has in reality no other sovereign than Him to whom alone power really belongs, because in Him alone are found all the treasures of love, science, and infinite wisdom, that is to say, God, our divine Savior, The Word of the Most High, the Word of Life. Their majesties consequently recommend, with the most tender solicitude for their peoples, as the sole means of enjoying that peace which arises from a good conscience and which alone is durable, to strengthen themselves every day more and more in the principles and exercise of the duties which the divine Savior has taught to mankind.

ART. 3. All the powers who shall choose solemnly to avow the sacred principles which have dictated the present act, and shall acknowledge how important it is for the happiness of nations, too long agitated, that these truths should henceforth exercise over the destinies of mankind all the influence which belongs to them, will be received with equal ardor and affection into this holy alliance.

Done in triplicate and signed in Paris, the year of grace, 1815, the 14th (26th) September.

FREDERICK WILLIAM.
ALEXANDER.

Mr. President, could there be higher ideals than those expressed and professed by this league more than 100 years ago? And it is interesting to note, Mr. President, that while Great Britain gave a limited approval to this league a few months after the declaration that I have read, and although England had an unwritten constitution, Great Britain did not believe that under their form of government and constitution they were at liberty to become parties to the league. Let me read the note of the British Prince Regent upon that subject:

As the forms of the British constitution * * * preclude me from acceding formally to this treaty in the shape in which it has been presented to me, I adopt this course of conveying to the august sovereigns who have signed it my entire concurrence in the principles they have laid down and in the declaration which they have set forth, of making the divine precepts of the Christian religion the invariable rule of their conduct in all their relations, social and political, and of cementing the union which ought ever to subsist between all Christian nations.

I do not for a moment, Mr. President, intimate that because that league was a failure this league will be a failure. Indeed, I hope that quite the contrary will be the case. I only refer to it for the purpose of reminding the Senate that this is not the first time that a league has been formed with the very highest ideals of which the human mind could conceive.

It would be interesting, Mr. President, to call attention to the various leagues to enforce peace that have had their rise and fall in the years that have gone, but I shall not take the time of the Senate to do so now. I hope that at this time a league of nations may be formed that will be more successful in preserving peace than others that have had their day. I shall gladly vote to ratify a treaty embodying a league having the fullest powers consistent with our own interests and our safety. If the proposed constitution shall be modified before it is finally presented to us for ratification, I hope to be able to support it.

I will conclude with one statement which will not be successfully challenged by any who are supporting the league.

If there had been a league of nations with this proposed constitution at the time of the Revolutionary War there never would have been a United States of America. There never would have been a Star-Spangled Banner. We would still have been one of the dominions of Great Britain, for France could not have come to our aid, and if Europe had not been at war England would have been free to crush our struggling little army in a few months.

If, following the Revolutionary War and before the Mexican War, a league of nations with this proposed constitution had been created, California, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona would still have been a part of Mexico, and we would have been bound to protect Mexico in her possessions. If, following the Mexican War and before the Spanish-American War, a league of nations had been created with this proposed constitution, Cuba and the Philippine Islands would still have been colonies of Spain. We could not have interfered in the Weyler butcheries in Cuba nor could the league of nations have done so. We entered that war with no selfish purpose. We declared war with Spain on behalf of humanity, and we gained liberty and self-government for millions of people. This proposed constitution would forever prevent us from doing a like service for mankind. A league of nations, yes; but the American people will not be for such a league as may prevent America from realizing her own ideals, achieving her own destiny, and enable her to serve the cause of liberty and mankind as to her may seem best.

Mr. President, greater than the President of the United States, greater than the Senate and the House of Representatives, is the American people. They are the only sovereigns in America. Their judgments, when deliberately formed, should be the sole guide of all those in authority.

They are discussing this matter to-day by every fireside, wherever men and women gather together. They are hungry for facts. They ask for details. They are not content with generalities. When their judgment is finally formed I am confident the response will be, "We are for a league of nations; but in the interest of America, in the interest of liberty, in the interest of mankind, the proposed constitution must be modified."

PROPOSED LEAGUE OF NATIONS FOR PEACE.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] in the statement that this is the most important question at this time before the country, and it is the duty of those men who represent the people to express their views upon this subject. The conditions as suggested in the proposal of the league of nations should not be imposed upon the people of this country until they have a full realization of what those conditions are and what they mean, and the men who represent their constituencies should not be criticized if, through honest criticism, they oppose the conditions of the league, because it is their duty, in my opinion, to state publicly their views. In my State I have been somewhat criticized because it has been stated that I am opposed to a league of nations.

I do not wish at this time, in the closing hours of the session, to take too much of the valuable time of the Senate in discussing this question, but in view of the fact that we shall shortly adjourn and it is doubtful whether an extra session will be soon called, which I fervently hoped might be very soon called, in order to dispose of the important questions before the country, I feel that it is my duty at this time to state very definitely my views upon this important question.

Mr. President, on November 11, 1918, the President of the United States announced to Congress in joint session the terms of the armistice accepted and signed by the German authorities and informed us that the war thereby came to an end.

On December 2, 1918, he again appeared before Congress in joint session and stated his intention of departing immediately for Europe. In the course of his address he said:

> I welcome this occasion to announce my purpose to join in Paris the representatives of the Governments with which we have been associated in the war against the central empires for the purpose of discussing with them the main features of the treaty of peace.
> The allied Governments have accepted the bases of peace which I outlined to the Congress on the 8th of January last, as the central empires also have, and very reasonably desire my personal counsel in their interpretation and application, and it is highly desirable that I should give it in order that the sincere desire of our Government to contribute without selfish purpose of any kind to settlements that will be of common benefit to all the nations concerned may be made fully manifest. The peace settlements which are now to be agreed upon are of transcendent importance both to us and to the rest of the world, and I know of no business or interest which should take precedence of them. We hope, I believe, for the formal conclusion of the war by treaty by the time spring has come.

Spring has almost come, the President has returned, but without any treaty of peace, and, so far as I can gather, without any clear conception as to when there will be a treaty of peace.

More than three months have elapsed since the armistice was signed. Almost daily during that period I have been importuned, as I am sure every other Senator has been importuned, to know when our boys will all be returned. If I can believe the relatives of the boys themselves, they, too, desire to return and long for their homes, now that the actual fighting has ceased and time hangs heavily upon their hands. On all sides business men are clamoring for a return to peace conditions. Why a treaty of peace has not been concluded and when a treaty of peace is likely to be concluded are questions on which I have no more light than the average citizen.

When the President announced his departure for Europe he assured us:

> I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side of the water and you will know all that I do. At my request the French and English Governments have absolutely removed the censorship of cable news which until within a fortnight they had maintained, and there is now no censorship whatever exercised at this end, except upon attempted trade communications with enemy countries. * * * I did so at the advice of the most experienced cable officials, and I hope that the results will justify my hope that the news of the next few months may pass with the utmost freedom and with the least possible delay from each side of the sea to the other.

Notwithstanding the promise made by the President that he would be in close touch with Congress and with affairs on this side of the water and that we would know all that he did, I am sure it is an open secret that the President never communicated any information to Congress during his absence of almost 12 weeks.

On the eve of his departure he told us, as above stated, that the allied governments accepted the bases of peace which he outlined on January 8, 1918. The first basis called for "open covenants of peace openly arrived at." Had that basis been followed and had the censorship of cable news been removed, as he assured us it would be, we could have learned through the press all that was taking place. Instead, however, of "open covenants of peace openly arrived at" we learn from the press that practically all negotiations take place in secret.

At the time of the departure of the President, December 4, 1918, I introduced the following resolution in the Senate:

> Whereas the President has informed Congress that the bases of peace outlined by him on the 8th of January last have been accepted by the allied Governments and by the central empires, and that it is his duty to see that no false or mistaken interpretation is put upon them; and
>
> Whereas the President has never stated his own interpretation of such bases and the same, particularly those relating to "A league of nations" and the "Freedom of the seas," are open to various interpretations, some of which may be in conflict with established national traditions; and
>
> Whereas the President has announced that the various steps in the approaching negotiations abroad shall be promptly made known to the American people: Therefore be it
>
> Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to make publicly known his own interpretation of his proposed peace terms as presented to Congress January 8, 1918, and not attempt to impose such interpretation upon the international conference about to assemble until full opportunity is presented to the American public to become acquainted with the same, to the end that this Nation may not be committed to policies in contravention of the traditions of the United States; and be it further
> Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the President.

At the time of its introduction and by way of explanation I made the following statement:

"Mr. President, in his address to Congress of December 2 the President informed us that the bases of peace outlined by him to us on the 8th of January last have been accepted by the allied Governments and by the central empires, and by way of explanation of his trip to Europe he stated that it was his duty to see 'that no false or mistaken interpretation is put upon them.'

"In view of this explanation it requires no argument to show that various interpretations may be placed upon the bases of peace which he outlined. Some of the bases relate not merely to a settlement of the present war but to our relations in the future with all governments. Heretofore we have been guided by certain traditions. The immortal Washington, in his Farewell Address, gave certain advice, which we have religiously followed. He said:

"Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

"It may well be that conditions have so changed that we should no longer follow advice by which we have been guided for more than a century. As a representative of the people, it seems to me that we should not bind ourselves to a policy at variance with it unless certain that such is the will of the people.

"The fourteenth basis proposed by the President reads:

"A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

"Does this basis mean that we will join with European nations in a guaranty of the political independence and territorial integrity of all States both great and small? Does it mean that to preserve such territorial integrity and political independence we will, in fulfillment of our guaranty, use, whenever necessary, our Army and Navy? Does it mean that henceforth we must take part in all political and territorial disputes throughout the world? We have among us many who came to our shores and the children of many who came to our shores because of the constant quarrels and jealousies of European nations and because of the fear that such quarrels and jealousies might any day involve them in war. I do not say that we should not do our utmost to prevent future wars. That I concede is our duty, but if we propose to obligate ourselves to use our Army and Navy whenever necessary in any part of the world to preserve peace we should be certain that we are conforming to the will of those whom we represent.

"The President is the chosen leader of the United States. Any proposal which he may make will naturally carry with it great weight. If he proposes in behalf of the United States the use of its Army and Navy to preserve the peace of the world, or if he assents to any such proposal if made by another nation, what position will the Senate be in should such a proposal be adopted? Constitutionally we will be free to exercise our own judgment and to accept or reject any treaty which the Executive may negotiate. Will we, however, be free from embarrassment should other nations say to us, 'Your Chief Executive spoke in behalf of the American public and supposedly voiced their views'? That brings me to the point of my motion. Is the President sure that his interpretation of the bases of peace is the interpretation of the American public? As he has never made known such interpretation, how can he be sure? Should he not, in all justice, before he makes any proposal on such momentous questions make known to the public what interpretation he places upon his fourteenth basis, and should he not afford the public an opportunity to voice its opinion?

"The fourteenth basis is not the only one which involves a comparison of our past traditions with what should be our policy in the future. During the Civil War in order to preserve the Union we found it necessary to insist upon and to exercise the right to condemn cargo owned by a neutral and shipped from one neutral port to another neutral port where it appeared that such cargo was ultimately intended for transshipment to the enemy. In Europe the doctrine of ultimate destination was disputed, but if that doctrine had not been practiced during the present war who will dare say what would have been the result? Certainly the prevention of supplies reaching Germany through neutral countries contributed in no small measure to her defeat. Can anyone here tell me what is the true interpretation of the second basis of peace outlined by the President in January last? It reads:

"Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

"If such had been the rule during the Civil War, could supplies have flowed uninterruptedly from Europe to the South by way of Mexico? If in force during the present war, could supplies have flowed uninterruptedly from North and South America to Germany through Holland? I confess that I do not know what is the true interpretation of the phrase 'absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas,' and as a representative of the people I respectfully suggest that if the President's interpretation involves a departure from our traditions he should not propound such interpretation as a proposal in behalf of the American public unless he is certain that the American public approves it. How can he be certain that the American public approves an interpretation which has never been made known to it?

"It is hardly necessary for me to call attention to any other basis of peace proposed by the President to illustrate my viewpoint. There has never been a time in our history which called for greater caution and wisdom. There has never been a time when the practice of pitiless publicity, so frequently advocated by the President, was more urgently required. The American public is a reading public, a thinking public. It does not hesitate and will not hesitate to express its opinion if afforded an opportunity. In my opinion the President should not in behalf of the American public make proposals which involve a radical departure unless he is certain that his proposal carries with it the approval of the people. Though we are not bound by any treaty which he may negotiate, still, in view of the fact that he was chosen by the people to the highest position in the country, other nations may not recognize that his proposals are subject to our review and may feel affronted should we differ from him. It is his duty as well as ours to act for the people; and, to avoid misunderstanding, it seems to me that the people should be told by him what is the interpretation which he places upon his bases of peace and should be advised to what extent he intends in their behalf to propose a policy which may involve an abandonment of our traditions. All I ask is that the public should be taken into the confidence of the President, that he should afford the public an opportunity to express its views, and, should it appear that there is a pronounced view upon any subject, that he will not run counter to it. It is for such reason that I have introduced my motion."

Mr. President, more than three months have passed since I suggested that the public should be taken into the confidence of the President and should be afforded an opportunity to express its views upon the bases of peace suggested by him, and particularly upon his proposed league of nations. Has the public been taken into the confidence of the President? It has to this extent: That a league of nations recommended by representatives of 14 powers has been presented to the world, and the President on the day of his arrival in Boston delivered an address If I read that address correctly, the President resents criticism of the league of peace. He argued that we had fought not so much to defeat the Germans but to establish liberty throughout the world, and that now it was our duty henceforth to preserve liberty not merely in the United States but anywhere and everywhere. He sets up no simple task for ourselves and our posterity. His appeal, however—and I say it with all due respect—was to sentiment rather than to reason. It is rarely that the author of any project that will stand criticism and dissection resents either or resorts to threats against those who attempt to try either. Yet, if I read the Boston address correctly, anyone who dares to dissent from the league of nations is threatened with dire results. To avoid misunderstanding I will quote a few passages:

Any man who resists the present tides that run in the world will find himself thrown upon a shore so high and barren that it will seem as if he had been separated from his human kind forever.

He continued that it was our duty not only to sign a treaty of peace but also to combine with others to make it good and to give assurances to the people of the world "that they shall be safe." Without such combination and assurances he stated that a treaty of peace would be but "a modern scrap of paper," though I do not see any place in the address wherein he established that a paper league of nations might not also be but a modern scrap of paper. However, he proclaimed that any man who dared to think that America is not willing to combine to make good any treaty of peace which may be established and to give assurances to all people that they shall be safe did not know his country. He invites such men to test the sentiments of the country, urging that it is our duty to make men free everywhere, and that anyone unwilling to undertake such a task is provincial and that he for one is ready to measure swords with him. He said:

I have fighting blood in me, and it is sometimes a delight to let it have scope; but if it is a challenge on this occasion it will be an indulgence.

What a change has the trip to Europe made! Only two years ago the President was elected to a second term of office. What was urged for his reelection? Was it not that he had kept us out of war? Can it be claimed of the President that he raised one finger to save Belgium or to save France or to save any of the oppressed peoples of Europe? Was he not criticized here at home because he was "too proud to fight," and did he not close his eyes to the fact that American rights were being trampled upon by Germany, and that we were scorned and dishonored? Did he not tell us that we should be neutral not only in fact but also in thought? Did he resort to war against Germany until men like Col. Roosevelt and other citizens insisted that the country had some honor, and that the rights of our citizens must be safeguarded? Did he not in his address of February 26, 1917, advise merely "armed neutrality," explaining such act on the following April 2, when Germany had actually forced us into war, as follows:

I thought that it would suffice to assert our neutrality rights with arms, our right to use the seas against unlawful interference, our right to keep our people safe against unlawful violence.

He found armed neutrality insufficient to the protection of our rights, and he engaged in the war because Germany at the time was really waging war on us, and because public sentiment refused to close its eyes to that fact. Now the man who, in spite of bitter criticism and the fact that the honor of our country was at stake, refused to fight heaps maledictions on the heads of those who dare to question his plan to fight if necessary to make not our people but the people of the whole world safe, and who does not hesitate to say to those who question the wisdom of such a course that he has fighting blood in him, and that to now fight for the people of the whole world will be an indulgence.

This is surely remarkable language for a man who two years ago seemed to consider a fight for the protection of the rights of American citizens as a most bitter pill.

The world longs for peace. For centuries men have studied and discussed plans to prevent wars. So far no successful plan has been devised. I am willing to advocate any plan that will prevent wars. The President has my admiration and congratulations for the study which he has given to the subject and for his tireless efforts in that direction. I can not believe, however, that universal peace will come through any plan which its authors refuse to have the public carefully study, criticize, and understand before giving approval.

As a Senator of the United States, I feel that my duty is first to the people of the United States. To me it seems that the question is not whether the plan is better for, say, the Balkans, but whether it will be in harmony with the opening of our Constitution. As the opening clause of the Constitution is rarely referred to and seems to be ignored in discussion, I will read it:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Will this proposed plan secure "the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity"? Will it insure domestic tranquillity? Will it promote the general welfare and common defense? These are questions which we must all consider, and we must not refrain from their consideration because of threats, no matter how or by whom made. We must perform our duty. We are all for universal peace, but primarily we are all for the United States. We should not make any change in our policies unless we are reasonably sure that such change will promote the interests of the United States.

It is with some surprise that I have read a statement of Mr. Taft, a man whom I greatly respect and admire, to the effect that he who objects to the proposed league of nations should suggest another remedy to prevent war or else hold his peace. Mr. Taft certainly has an advantage over me in that he has had legal training and unusual experience on the bench and at the bar. As a plain business man, however, in the conduct of my business I always believed and supposed that other men believed that when any of my associates or subordinates proposed a change in the manner of conducting our business that it was up to the person proposing the change to show why it should be made. I think the lawyers call it "the burden of proof." For more than a century we have pursued a certain policy. A change is now advocated. I confess I can not see why those who desire to look carefully into the change should be told that they must hold their peace unless they can propose a better change. Logically, it seems to me that those who are proposing the change must satisfy the people that it is to their interest to make it, and they should cheerfully welcome all questions and criticisms, so as to be afforded an opportunity to carry the burden and to demonstrate beyond doubt that we have reached the parting of the ways; that we must abandon our old policies and pursue a new course. In short, to my mind those who advocate a departure from the course outlined by the immortal Washington must show very clearly and convincingly that that proposed by Mr. Wilson, though as yet untried, is superior to that of Washington, which has stood the test of more than a century.

Neither the Senate nor the House of Representatives nor the people of the United States can be treated as school children nor even college undergraduates. The very first amendment to our Constitution provided for freedom of speech and of the press, and if there is one thing which citizens of the United States cherish it is the right to consider acts of their representatives and to freely criticize them. Criticism does not necessarily mean hostility. We all want peace—peace not merely in the United States but peace throughout the world, because war in any part of the world has more or less effect upon every other part. If it is possible to have a league of nations which will substitute the pen for the sword, we most certainly want it. A league of nations is now proposed, and as a Member of the Senate I consider it not only my right but my duty to call attention to parts in it which I do not understand and to seek information which will enable me and those whom I represent to determine whether it should be adopted as it is; and if not, whether it is capable of amendment and in what respects. Light, however, upon it and some illustrations of how it may work are required. The Committee on Foreign Relations has had an opportunity to confer with the President, and from him I hope it has gained such light that it will be able to explain to us the meaning of certain clauses of the league which are not entirely clear and to illustrate to the public what may be expected to happen under it.

In the preamble of the league it is recited that it is adopted to promote international cooperation and to establish justice "and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another." Are we prepared to enter into a compact that all existing treaty obligations between any of the parties to the league must be scrupulously observed? Time and again have we heard the charge made that the bane of civilization is secret treaties. I can not find in the text of the league any provision that all treaties now existing between any of the parties to it must be laid on the table and exposed to the public view.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator will find such a provision in the articles of the league.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator please point it out? I am anxious to have my questions answered, and I intend that these questions shall go into the RECORD; and before I make up my opinion on this league of nations I shall demand that those questions be answered. I will continue while the Senator is hunting for the provision.

I had hoped that henceforth there would be no secret treaties and that the people of each nation would know the compacts which their own nation and every other nation had made.

By article 23 of the league the contracting parties agree "that every treaty or international engagement entered into hereafter by any State member of the league shall be forthwith registered." Why limit the registration to treaties "hereafter" made? Perhaps the Senator can answer that. It is true that by article 25 the parties agree that all obligations inter se "which are inconsistent with the terms" of the league shall be deemed abrogated. Who is to determine if they are inconsistent, and how is it to be determined if the treaties are not made public? In other words, it seems to me that the President is proposing a league which tacitly recognizes the existence of secret treaties and which does not require their publication. If it is logical to have future treaties registered, why is it not just as logical to have past treaties registered? Why should we enter into a compact where some of the parties to it may have obligations among themselves of which we know nothing, and from which we might shrink if we did know them. When the President was governor of the State of New Jersey and I was a member of the senate of that State, he advocated pitiless publicity. Let us have pitiless publicity upon all phases of any compact to which we are a party. May I therefore ask the Committee on Foreign Relations the following question?

Question 1. Is it true that if the league of nations as proposed is entered into, some of the parties to it can keep secret treaties made between them at any time prior to its adoption?

In article 2 it is provided that each of the contracting parties shall have one vote, while from article 7 I would infer that not only may a nation be a party to the league, but also its dominions and colonies. Does that mean that a nation with a number of colonies may have as many votes as it has colonies plus its own vote? It has been charged here that Great Britain will have five votes. We have all seen in the press long before the league of nations became public that Great Britain would not submit to any curtailment of its navy or to any interference with its rights on the sea. One of Mr. Wilson's 14 points called for absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas. I can not find any reference to that point in the proposed constitution of the league of nations. In the address which Mr. Wilson delivered in Boston the other day he calls attention to many new nations which will be set up in Europe, such as the Polish Nation, the Nation of Czecho-Slovaks, and the Nation of Jugo-Slavs. Many of our citizens never heard of the latter two nationalities until within the past year. No mention, however, is made in Mr. Wilson's address of the Irish. If Great Britain has been forceful enough to keep out of the league of nations all reference to freedom of the seas, and if Mr. Wilson could not call attention to the organization of any nation for the Irish, what will Great Britain be able to do if it is true as is charged on the floor of this Senate that she will when the league of nations is organized have five votes? A reference to the Declaration of Independence will show that the Colonies on July 4, 1776, solemnly published and declared that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved, and for seven years they waged war to dissolve it, and they did dissolve it. Are we now to enter into a compact whereby Great Britain will have five votes and we one? May I, therefore, ask the Committee on Foreign Relations the following question, and I will ask the reporter to mark it "Q. 2":

Question 2. Is it true that in the league of nations, if adopted in its present form, Great Britain will have more votes than the United States of America?

May I also ask:

Question 3. Is it possible that if the league of nations is adopted as proposed, people who were formerly subject to our enemies shall have the right of self-determination, but such right shall be denied to people who are subject to those who fought with us against our enemies?

In article 5 it is provided that the secretary general of the league shall be chosen by the executive council. May I ask the Committee on Foreign Relations the following question:

Question 4. If it can tell us if there is anything in the proposed league which will prevent some of the parties to it from uniting in an agreement before its adoption as to the personnel of the secretary general?

In article 8 it is provided that the executive council shall determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament, and that such limits when adopted shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council.

It is also provided that national armaments should be reduced to lowest point consistent with national safety, having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State. Inasmuch as we are protected by an ocean on the east and on the west, is it not possible that the executive council may conclude that we should reduce our military equipment and armament to a minimum, while Great Britain, because of its geographical position, should maintain supremacy on the sea and should also, because of proximity to the Continent of Europe, maintain a substantial military equipment and armament?

Question 5. Are the people of this country satisfied to have a council made up of representatives of governments the majority of which are of a form different from ours pass upon such a vital question as to the size of our Army and Navy? Perhaps the committee can give us some light on the subject, and I therefore ask them:

Question 6. To what extent will the United States part with its right to determine the size of its own Army and Navy should it enter into the league of nations as proposed?

In article 10 the parties agree to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all the members of the league.

This article is one to which I have given much thought and study. I will refrain from expressing my views at length upon it until I am better informed as to just what it means. Let us assume that the league of nations had been adopted in 1775. Could France have come to the aid of the Colonies if she had obligated herself to respect the territorial integrity of Great Britain? Would she have exposed herself to attack by other parties of the league if she attempted to help the Colonies? Would she not by so doing have been guilty of external aggression against Great Britain?

Take our War with Mexico. If that clause had been in existence, would Texas have been a part of the United States? Would California be a part of the United States? Take our War with Spain. Could we have helped Cuba? Would Cuba now be a Republic? Would we even now be a Republic? Does this clause mean an end to the possibilities of people overthrowing their form of Government? Some of the nations who will be parties to the league will have colonies, just as we were a colony of Great Britain in 1776. If any colony, after the adoption of the league of nations, attempts to set up self-government, can it look for any help from people who enjoy self-government? Will not help be practically prohibited? May I therefore ask the Committee on Foreign Relations the following question:

Question 7. Assuming that a league of nations in the form proposed was in effect at the time of our Revolution could France have assisted us? Assuming that it was in effect at the time Texas became attached to the Union could Texas have become part of the Union? Assuming that it was in effect at the time of our War with Spain would Cuba now be free?

Articles 12, 13, 14, and 15 relate to the submission of disputes to arbitration. Article 13 seems to restrict the submission to such disputes as the parties to them consider suitable for submission, but article 12 provides that in no case shall there be resort to war without submission. Germany committed acts against us in 1915, 1916, and 1917 which were not suitable for arbitration. She committed acts which any self-respecting nation would resent by force. If in the future acts are committed against us which affect our honor, the lives and property of our citizens, must we refrain from war and submit same to arbitration? Are we obligated to allow such acts to continue during the pendency of the arbitration? Must we submit to continued insults for months until a decision is rendered? If the executive council passes upon a dispute to which we are a party and unanimously decides against us even though we are convinced that such unanimity is the result of a combination against us and even though the decision subjects us to a continuance of insults and an encroachment upon the rights of our citizens, must we submit to it or fight the whole league? If by force we resent some insult rather than submit the matter involved to arbitration it would seem under article 16 we would ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league.

I am sure you all remember how frequently Mr. Roosevelt called attention to the fact that there were some matters which no self-respecting nation could submit to arbitration; that nations are like men, and that there are certain kinds of insults which no self-respecting nation or no man with red blood in his veins can delay resenting until some one else passes upon it. There are times when the honor of a nation or the honor of a man must be resented on the spot, and a nation or a man which does not resent certain kinds of insults the instant they occur is not worthy of being called a nation or a man. May I, therefore, ask the Committee on Foreign Relations the following question:

Question 8. Must all questions, irrespective of how they affect our honor or the lives and property of our citizens, be submitted to arbitration; and if so, is it not possible for the offending nation to continue the insult or invasion of our rights pending the arbitration?

Under article 10 and the articles relating to arbitration it is not clear to me what may be the result if two nations in South America should become involved in war. It seems possible that the league of nations might decide that one of them was guilty of violation of the constitution of the league, and that as a result all the other members of the league should make war upon it. Should such a decision be rendered and should war be made by all upon a nation of South America, that nation undoubtedly would be defeated. I see nothing in the terms of the league which would prevent some portion of the territory of the defeated nation being taken to compensate some or all the members of the league for their losses. In other words, I do not feel certain that it would not be possible under this league for European nations to secure some of the territory of a nation of South America or, say, even of Mexico and colonize it, contrary to the Monroe doctrine. May I, therefore, ask the Committee on Foreign Relations the following question:

Question 9. Is it not possible in the event of a war in which members of the league take part against an American nation for some or all of the members to insist upon and to secure part of the territory of an American nation as compensation and to colonize such part contrary to the Monroe doctrine?

In article 20 provision is made for the establishment of a permanent bureau of labor as part of the organization of the league. What the functions of such a bureau will be I do not know. How they will be determined is not clear. It occurs to me that perhaps its functions will be determined by the executive council or by the delegates of the parties to the league. We certainly will be in the minority. The conditions of labor in this country are better, I believe, than in any other part of the world, and it may be possible that labor in this country will run the risk of an attempt to pull down the standards which prevail here. I would therefore submit the following question to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Question 10. What will be the functions of the permanent bureau of labor, and by whom and how will such functions be determined, and what effect may such bureau have upon the rights of labor in the United States?

A reading of the entire text makes me wonder what would have been the effect on our Civil War had such a league existed during that period. We all remember the attitude of England during the Civil War. Even Gladstone was hostile to the North, and his language at times led our minister to wonder if he should not depart. Had it not been for the attitude of Russia, England would probably have interfered in behalf of the South. If such a league were in force during the Civil War, and if Great Britain had, as charged on the floor of this Senate, five votes in the league, would the Union have been preserved—would slavery have been abolished? Perhaps our committee, after its discussion with our President, is in a position to answer the following question:

Question 11. What would have been the probable effect upon the controversy between the North and the South during the Civil War if the league of nations then existed and if, as charged, Great Britain would have five votes?

I suppose that we should read the proposed league in the light of the President's address in Boston on the 24th of this month. To illustrate what I have in mind, I quote the following from that address:

> Do you believe in the aspirations of the Czecho-Slovaks and the Jugo-Slavs as I do? Do you know how many powers would be quick to pounce upon them if there were not the guaranties of the world behind their liberty?
> Have you thought of the sufferings of Armenia? You poured out your money to help succor the Armenians after they suffered; now set your strength so that they shall never suffer again.

Reading the league in the light of such statements, I am led to the conclusion that it is the desire and intention of the President that this Nation with its Army and Navy should be prepared to protect Poland against aggression, to protect the Jugo-Slavs against aggression, to protect the Czecho-Slovaks against aggression, and to protect the Armenians against aggression. Is it possible that he intends that we should be ready with our Army and Navy to protect every nation in the world against aggression? Are we to be involved in every dispute, and must we be ready at all times to ship our soldiers overseas? Will the mothers of the United States sanction any such plan? Will the taxpayers of the United States be prepared to bear the expense? Are we to be the big brother of every nation? Are we to be the peacemaker of the world? I challenge anyone who reads the address of the President made in Boston to draw any other conclusion than that Europe to-day is a seething cauldron and that the nations will be at each other's throats within a generation unless we prevent it, and that none of the nations of Europe trust each other, but that all trust in us. Are we to join a partnership of that kind? Are we to join a partnership every member of which, excepting ourselves, is suspicious of every other member and ready at the first opportunity to pounce upon it? The rôle of peacemaker in such a combination is indeed one to be seriously considered. How often has it been said that the peacemaker, instead of promoting peace, has been torn to pieces? Far be it from me to think that Europe is as bad as the President paints it. Perhaps I have misinterpreted his meaning. I am willing, however, to have light, and I therefore ask the Committee on Foreign Relations the following question:

Question 12. If the United States joins in the league of nations, as proposed, must we be prepared with our Army and Navy at all times to protect every party to it? To bring home the thought which I have in mind I will, perhaps, be a little more specific.

Question 13. Assuming that an independent Poland is established, that Germany and Russia are restored, and that they unite in an attack upon Poland, must we be prepared with our Army and Navy to make war upon Germany and Russia?

The President has invited those who would question the league of nations to test the sentiment of this Nation. The views of our people not only should be ascertained but must be ascertained. All phases of the league should be discussed and considered. What we want is the decision of this Nation, based upon reflection and reason and not upon mere sentiment. Let us have free and open discussion. Let the public consider not merely the advantages of the proposed league but also the burdens. Let the public say whether it is satisfied with the league as proposed or, if not, whether it can be amended so as to be made satisfactory, and, if so, in what respects. The public looks forward to the day when war will be a thing of the past. If, owing to human imperfections, such a day may never come, we all wish to reduce wars in any event to a minimum. If the proposed league will accomplish that result, the public, no doubt, will favor it, but as the proposed league is at least to some extent visionary and experimental, the public, unless I am mistaken, will join with me in a search for light upon its meaning and for information about the burdens we will assume and the possibilities which may ensue from its establishment. The President is sure the public approves it as it is and threatens with isolation upon a barren shore those of his fellow citizens who would question it, while for the Government of any foreign nation that dares oppose it he predicts that the people of such nation will rise in their might and overthrow such a Government.

Notwithstanding his threats, I dare ask for light to guide me to a decision of what is my duty to the people of the United States. With all due respect to the President I differ from his conclusion upon my duty. My duty is first to my own country. If I can be true to my own country and at the same time help the world I will do so.

Perhaps the President knows the heart and the mind of the American people better than I do. I can not, however, believe that the President can take pride in the fact that the war was won because of his inspiration, and he states that his views about the duty of this country are infallible and not open to criticism, and upbraids and threatens not only his fellow citizens but also foreign nations who question his views. I can not believe the President thoroughly understands the sentiment of his fellow citizens, and for one I prefer to ascertain that sentiment directly from our fellow citizens rather than to take it without question from him.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I think it is advisable for the Senate to have a clear understanding of this proposed census legislation.

I submitted amendments to the census bill in November, which I considered to be of very great importance. They had been prepared after a considerable amount of investigation and work. They were presented to the Senate on the 21st of November last, and were referred to the Census Committee for action by that committee. The committee did not see fit to act favorably upon the amendments, and the bill was reported from the committee without the amendments being incorporated in it.

It was not until the 15th day of January that I had an opportunity of offering these amendments to the bill. At first they received very litle consideration, but after some considerable debate the chairman of the committee, stating that he was impressed with the merit of the amendments, indicated that he would not oppose their adoption, and they were adopted by the Senate. The bill then went to conference. I appeared before the conference committee and explained the nature of these amendments to the committee. The conference committee seemed to be favorably impressed, but finally decided to report the bill without the amendments being incorporated therein.

The conference report is now before the Senate. During my observations upon these amendments on January 15 and 16 I was very considerately heard by the Senate, and I was given a very courteous hearing by the conferees on the bill. During all the time the measure was before the Senate and before the conference committee there was to my knowledge no reasonable objection urged against the amendments, except possibly one. The only rational objection raised during the pendency of these amendments was the objection that a census conducted along these modern and scientific lines would involve too great an expenditure. The question of expense, however, is one which must be considered from every standpoint. In connection with every appropriation the question arises as to whether the proposed outlay is an expenditure or an investment. In my judgment an appropriation for the carrying out of a census as provided for in these amendments would not be an expenditure, But it would rather be an investment of the most profitable character.

I wish, very briefly, to explain the nature of these amendments. They were designed to modernize the census. If adopted, they would have secured for us a census which would have some social value, some economic value, some value in making possible rational ameliorative legislation. My amendments called for a continuous survey of the population of the United States and of its activities. They provided for the substitution of what we all know as the continuous card-catalogue system for the old-fashioned one, which gathers statistics and then lays them away where they are of no assistance toward securing practical beneficial results. The amendments which I offered provided for the continual gathering of vital, social, and industrial statistics, without which statistics kept always up to date scientific precision and rational method in legislation are absolutely impossible.

During the course of my remarks upon this subject I desired to indicate that we had no accurate knowledge of the statistics on unemployment; that we had no accurate statistics concerning the growth of our population; that we had no accurate statistics on illiteracy, on school attendance, on school facilities; that we had no accurate statistics on the industrial accidents and diseases concerning which we legislate; that we had no accurate statistics as to how many persons are engaged at any one time in the productive industries. In short, under the present plan we make a survey every 10 years of the condition of the country. The results of that survey are published in ponderous volumes; but by the time those volumes are published the statistics are entirely out of date and are of no social value, of no practical value, as a basis for scientific legislation.

That contention is abundantly borne out by our experience at the beginning of this war. We entered this war without knowing what the population of the United States might be. We did not know how many men there were of military age. We did not know how many illiterates we had. We did not know how many disabled and diseased we had. We did not, in fact, have any definite information as to the character and condition and as to the extent and distribution of our population. Now, of course, when we came to realize this we substituted a census, so far as those of military age were concerned, which in a very close way resembles the census which I have in mind. We found it was absolutely necessary for us to have an actual record of our men of military age, of their number, of their condition of health, of their training; and Gen. Crowder instituted, after the war had been in progress for some time, this card-catalogue census system, applying it, of course, only to those of the military age.

This census was made late in the war. I might note in passing that as early as May, 1917, shortly after the outbreak of the war, I urged that a card catalogue census of all of those from 18 to 45 be taken; but instead of this census being made in May, 1917, it was made, I think, after August, 1918.

Of course, if it is desirable for us to know the character, the health, and the condition of all the population in time of war, it is also necessary for us to know these important facts about our population in times of peace. I regret very much that this whole problem of the census did not receive earlier consideration at the hands of the Senate. I am one of those who believe that you can not solve problems until you see them; and we are trying to solve great national problems without even knowing what they are. We are trying to solve the problem of stamping out tuberculosis without knowing accurately how extensive that disease is. We are trying to solve the problem of unemployment without knowing how many unemployed we have and who and where they are. We are trying to solve the problem of combating the industrial diseases without having any systematic survey to give us information as to what those diseases are, and as to the particular industries which cause the various diseases. This in itself I have indicated is a very important question—this question of the extent and distribution of the various industrial diseases. I think it will occur to all of you that during this period of reconstruction particularly we ought to have a clear conception of what our reconstruction problems are. Why, this bill as it was sent down here from the department did not even have a provision for the separate enumeration of those who had served in the military forces and those who had been wounded during this war.

At this point Mr. FRANCE yielded the floor for the day.

Friday, February 28, 1919.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, the unfinished business before the Senate is the conference report upon the census bill. I have already said, in connection with that measure, that it does not at all represent my views as to what a census bill should be. But, in view of the situation which confronts us, I do not feel justified in making any attempt to defeat that conference report or to so delay its passage that it might possibly fail of enactment in the very closing hours of this session.

Inasmuch, however, as the census bill is now the unfinished business before the Senate, I do not feel that the remarks which I desire to make at this time, and which I feel it is my duty to make, will endanger the passage of this measure in the least. Therefore I desire to submit some observations upon what I think is the great issue which confronts this Senate and which confronts the country at this time—the question as to whether there shall be an early extra session of the Congress. Some of the Senators on the other side have said that there seemed to be a disposition upon this side of the Chamber to delay legislative action. So far as I am concerned, my position on the question of an extra session is a matter of record, for yesterday I introduced a resolution dealing with it. I shall not move the immediate consideration of this resolution, as I do not desire to displace the unfinished business, but I do desire to call the attention of the Senate and, so far as I may, of the country to the wording of this resolution. I believe that if the press of the country would carry to the people the words of this resolution those words would have the unequivocal, almost unanimous, indorsement of the American people.

This is the resolution which I introduced yesterday, and of which I think some of the Senators may be in ignorance, as it was introduced while many other measures were pressing, and therefore it may have escaped the attention of some:

Whereas grave and pressing problems in connection with the reconstruction period now confront us, and there is apparent much unrest throughout the country, due to unemployment, illiteracy, ill health, poverty, the underproduction and faulty distribution of the commodities and necessities of life, high living costs, and other undesirable but in part remediable conditions created, aggravated, or new discovered by the war; and

Whereas the President, because of his prolonged absence from the seat of government and from the country, and because of his careful occupation with international problems, has not been afforded an opportunity to become fully informed of such problems and unsatisfactory and distressful conditions and the immediate and imperative need of remedial legislation to meet them: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it be the sense and judgment of the Senate that the situation is such as to make it seem desirable and advisable that an extra session of the Congress should be called for the 5th of March, 1919; and be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be respectfully submitted to the President for his consideration.

Is there a Senator on this floor who is so blind as he sits in his upholstered chair as not to know that these problems, as set forth in the preamble of this resolution, confront the country? Is there a Member of the Senate who does not believe that remedial legislation is immediately imperative?

Senators, we ought to face this issue; we ought to face it with the full realization that the responsibility for legislative action or for the failure to take legislative action in the face of a serious situation such as this, rests upon us and upon us alone.

I want to say that every Senator who believes that this preamble fairly sets forth the facts is under obligation, in my opinion, to either support this resolution and thus secure a formal affirmative expression of the sentiment of the Senate that there should be an extra session, or he should adopt whatever other legitimate means he can command to secure such an extra session of the Congress.

Mr. President, I know perfectly well that in such serious times as these there sometimes exists a timidity which tends to lead men to temporize or to evade. I know that men naturally shrink from being pilloried before the country. I know that some men fear persecution at the hands of the press, but we are in a situation, Senators, where timidity has no place; where the fear even of misrepresentation by a reactionary press should not weigh with us.

There are timid men, of course, in every legislative body; that is to be expected.

Some of the Members of this Congress may not have always had the courage which they should have. I do not blame the average man who is a Member of Congress from fearing at times to stand before the withering flame of the cruel criticism of the man whose voice is heard, either the man of the newspaper or the man in such a position that his voice can be heard over the land—the unkind critic here, there, everywhere; but, I say that if there is a Member of this Congress—and I hope there is not—who sat in his seat and voted to send out our boys over the seas to face the destructive fire of the German guns, and who, after casting that vote, ever hesitates here to vote his honest convictions because he is afraid of some one's criticism, I say that man had better tear up his commission and go home. He is not qualified to sit in any of the legislative halls of this Republic.

Mr. President, in my discussion of the espionage law—and I shall advert to that before I am through with these remarks—I took occasion to quote from Samuel Adams, who said:

> Truth loves an appeal to the common sense of mankind. Your unperverted understandings can best determine on subjects of a practical nature. The positions and plans which are said to be above the comprehension of the multitude may always be suspected to be visionary and fruitless. He who made all men hath made the truths necessary to human happiness obvious to all.

I desire to say if we do not understand the situation of the country, if we do not see the need for an extra session of the Congress, the masses of the people, those with "unperverted understandings," those who are out where they know what the conditions are, because many of them are suffering from them—they know, if we do not, that an extra session of the Congress is necessary.

Is there a Senator on this floor who believes that we can, before this Congress finally adjourns, give careful, painstaking consideration to the measures which must be passed if there is to be no extra session? You either think that this jamming of bills through without study is the way to conduct the business of this Republic or you do not; you either think that it is proper for you to vote blindly the judgment of the committee or you do not think so. If you think that the committee method of legislating is a proper and constitutional method, you are excused for cooperating in jamming and crowding these bills through; but if you, as Senators, believe that it is the duty of the Members of this body to examine and study bills before they vote upon them and to reach a sane and independent judgment, then you should be standing here with me fighting for an early extra session of the Congress.

I wish to say that if there is anyone here who does believe that this forced method of legislating is the proper one; if there is any Member of this body who approves of this way of conducting the public business he will not remain here long, because, however much some of the Members of the Senate may approve of doing business in this unconstitutional way, and however much the subtleties of their reasoning may convince them that they are fulfilling their constitutional duties when they so legislate without due deliberation the American people, the men with the "unperverted understanding," the men who rise with the sun and go out singing to follow the plow through the fertile furrows, know that this is not the proper way to legislate.

For a long time the people have been very restless under a system by which a few men on a committee can bring in almost any bill and have it passed, or, what is far worse, by which is possible the killing by a committee of legislation which the people want, which they have a right to ask, and which they have sent men here to enact for them. I want to say that this vicious, un-American system of legislating has reached the high-water mark during the last six years.

It would be a compliment to this body to say that we have of late accepted the judgment of our committees; that we have only accepted the finding of our fellow Senators who in committee have given serious, unprejudiced, honest consideration to measures, and then have recommended them to us. It would be a compliment to the Democratic Party if I could say that you had followed that method. There is not a man on that side of the Chamber who does not know that we have not even relied upon the committee system, certainly during the last months, because even the committees have often not functioned; even the committees have frequently failed to study the legislation, which has been really passed upon in the bureaus, written, Senators, as you know, sometimes by men who did not only not know the language of the law, but who did not seem even to know the grammar of the tongue of the country.

My name was one of a few sent out broadcast as one of the traitors to the country because I voted against the food control bill, which I believe to be utterly unsound, which was, after it had been studied, pronounced unsound by some of the leading political economists of the country, and which subsequent events have proven to be unsound, because last night we had to pass a bill carrying a billion dollars to pay a further penalty in money, as we had previously paid it in many other forms for this unscientific legislation. That food control bill, when it came down here, had this clause in it, which, I think, I remember clearly: "Hereafter it shall be illegal for prices to fluctuate"—not for men to cause prices to fluctuate. The prices themselves were to be made the criminals. It provided that if prices fluctuated, they would be guilty of a crime.

The American people know that legislation without deliberation is dangerous. They know when we accept a command to jam legislation through the legislative bodies of this Republic without giving that legislation due and proper consideration, that we have violated the sacred oaths which we took when we became Members of this body. And let me tell you, Senators, that the judgment of the masses is safer than the judgment of a man. If it be not so, then the doctrine which was advanced on the other side of this Chamber—that in war republics are weak, and that in times of stress democracies can not defend themselves, and that the rule of the one, that autocracy alone, can be efficient—is true. But that doctrine is not true. That doctrine is proved false by every fact of history. There was but one Government in all the world at the opening of this war which was a despotism; and when I talk of forms of government I attempt to speak with some degree of accuracy. I do not call limited monarchies republics or democracies, although I am not a constitutional lawyer. I do not call constitutional governments despotisms, however despotically they may operate. The fact remains that there was but one despotism at the opening of this war, and that was Russia. I do not think that those who contended on the other side of the Chamber for one-man power were prepared at that time, or that they have been prepared since, to argue that this one despotism was the most efficient government for war. I do not think that the members of the various committees who have been looking over the situation, but superficially, it is true, to see what has been done with the money which we have appropriated in such vast sums are disposed now to contend that one-man power, that a government ruled by the one, is more efficient than the government ruled by the many. I do not think that there are many in this Chamber who are prepared to say that there is more wisdom residing in the mind of any one man than in the minds of all—the minds of all, the common mind, the mind made up after that free interchange of opinion, which we have denied the American people during the recent months—the common mind, which, when allowed to operate unhampered, is the nearest approach we have to the wisdom of the infinite intelligence.

Do you wish to be pilloried with me, because I have introduced a resolution which shall, if passed, convey to the President that it is the sense of this body that there shall be an early extra session of this Congress? Or do you prefer to violate your constitutional oaths by being obedient and jamming through legislation, voting for measures the very language of which you have never read? You must obey a man or the mandates of our fundamental law. There is no alternative.

I choose to be pilloried, because I can do nothing else. I deserve no credit for it. I merely happen to be so constituted that when I take an oath I have to keep it as best I can, even though some man may try to persecute me on the pages of a reactionary and subservient press.

Let me say that this question of the press has not been settled yet, either. When a press becomes so subservient that it learns to obey the mandates of bureaucrats, I say that the time is fast approaching when something should be done to make it obey the mandates of the people and to carry the truth, whether the truth be complimentary to an administration or whether it be not.

I do not wish, as I told the Senator in charge, to kill the census bill. I did feel that now, at last, the time had come when our great census should be modernized, so that it would really be a social survey, investigating actual conditions throughout the country, and reporting and keeping up-to-date reports as to what the problems for the legislative body were, but I was in the minority. The time had not come. The party of progress and liberalism was not in power to pass so good a law. It was not to be.

The committee decided, when it rejected those amendments, that it did not care to adopt scientific methods to find out what unemployment there was, what poverty there was, what illiteracy there was, what ill health there was.

I think I showed conclusively that already we had the agencies for finding out those facts, but agencies which, because of the multiplicity and complexity of their character and methods, could not give us the desired results. I stated that, in the aggregate, considering the State, county, and municipal expenditure and the expenditure on the part of the Federal Government necessary to unify all of these agencies, that the cost would be less if we should adopt a scientific census. But the argument was made that it would cost the Federal Government too much.

After I was told that it would cost too much for this Republic to know as much about the condition of its citizens as the commercial insurance companies know about their insured, some of my very good friends on the other side—and they are my very good friends, and I excuse them because of the political necessities—put giant hoops upon a huge new pork barrel, which may not be any twenty-five or fifty million dollar pork barrel in the future, but perhaps a billion-dollar post-road pork barrel; and with scarcely any delay they passed a road amendment to the Post Office bill, which carried at least three times the amount which it would have been necessary to spend to know the actual condition and the needs of the people of this Republic.

Of course, I know that I was confronted with the constitutional argument that it was not for the Federal Government to know these facts, which was tantamount to arguing that a census, instead of being effective, ought to be ineffective, because all I was asking, as I said last evening, was that common-sense methods be put into a senseless census.

I have said something in condemnation of the committee system as it is now employed. I stated that only by the blind acceptance of the findings of our committees could we pass in the short time remaining even a few of the important measures which we have before us. I said that this system as it sometimes operates is an evil one, because it enables committees to rush through legislation without the fair judgment of the Senate upon it and because it enables committees to suppress legislation in committee which should be acted upon by the Senate. I indicated that this deplorable system had reached its highest development during the last six years, and particularly during the last few months.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] had his qualifications as a statesman examined and passed upon many times before he was finally returned by his great Commonwealth to represent her once more, in part, in this body; and the American people who knew his name and of his world-wide reputation as an authority on international questions rejoiced when they learned that the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania had returned him, a man prominent as a lawyer, experienced as a diplomat; a man who had been preeminent as Secretary of State; a man whose judgment was so sorely needed by the Nation in this crisis, to the Senate of the United States.

On the 3d day of last December the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] introduced here a resolution which, in my judgment, contained the proper solution for the international question, so far as the resolution went; and I think that because of his experience in diplomatic affairs the Senator from Pennsylvania, after deliberation, did not think it best to go any further at that time. It was a rational solution; it was a solution which would have met the world situation which the Senator knew existed. That is my judgment. It may not be the judgment of all, and it probably is not. But I say that when the Senator from the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Mr. PHILANDER C. KNOX, on the 3d day of December last, introduced a resolution bearing upon the international situation, courtesy to that Senator, respect for the great Commonwealth which he represents, a due consideration for the proper interests of the Republic, all demanded that the resolution should receive immediate and careful consideration by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

You know the history of that resolution. Explain it how you will, the fact remains that this resolution to-day lies neglected on the files of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It has never been reported. I do not wish to do the committee any injustice, but it is my opinion that the resolution was never even seriously considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations. If the chairman of that committee, for whom I have the highest regard, were here he could correct me if I am in error; but as a result of what I have seen since I have been a Member of this body I do not believe the whole Foreign Relations Committee ever sat and seriously and earnestly, with a view to action, considered that resolution.

If this resolution had been adopted and its recommendations heeded, I believe the great Republic would to-day be at peace with her enemies, that our armies would be moving rapidly homeward, that our country would be going on swiftly toward her rehabilitation, and that the reconstruction of the world would also have started on, and certainly all this might have been far advanced. I want to tell the Members on the majority side that, however much the ten thousands of tongues of a subservient press may clamor an excuse as the newspapers bow in obedience to the mandates of a bureaucrat in the Post Office Department, the American people know in their hearts that this method of killing important legislation is not the proper way to conduct the business of this Republic. Any man who thinks it is, and who may try to pillory me because I know it is not, will attempt in vain to convince the people that this sort of a committee system is a proper one by which the public's business should be done. You may seek to explain and extenuate it in very many ways. Sophistry is a very subtle thing. It is very agile, supple, and acrobatic.

But I tell you that the voting from power last November of the party which is named Democrat was no accident, for that party had ceased to observe its noble traditions and its cherished doctrines. Not Washington and Hamilton and the great Federalists only, but Jefferson, the great Democrat, seem to have been forgotten by your present leaders. The doctrines of Jefferson were first repudiated as being out of date, and then you reached the altitudes of wisdom from which you dared to intimate that the words of Washington in that matchless message of farewell, spoken as he launched a new-created Nation down the swelling tides of time, are no longer applicable to these changed conditions. With how few regrets and with how little of true reverence do some make vain attempt to wrap the noble figures of these two unequaled statesmen in the vast winding sheet of oblivion, while consigning their inspired teachings to the junk heap with all the useless and outgrown political theories of the past.

It is, however, the very nature of words of inspiration that they are launched full freighted with eternal truth, that they carry within them a deep significance which may not at the time they are spoken be full apparent, and that amid all the seeming change of outward circumstance they find their universal application. You may yet encounter that quality of inspired words and changeless and eternal truth before our situation is entirely cured.

I do not wish to defeat the census bill. I told the chairman of that committee, however, that I could not promise to indefinitely delay my observations upon what I consider to be the condition of the country at this time simply because he could not, even by most earnest endeavor, get the census bill before the Senate. I did feel obliged to discuss, and to discuss at some length, the question which I did not have an opportunity to discuss while that bill was pending in the Senate—the subject of national reconstruction—and I did feel that, in view of this disposition to rush legislation through and to bring this session to a close, I should now at least express my opinion as to the propriety of such a method of procedure. I hope I have registered my protest against such a program. I hope I have convinced you that at no man's order will I become particeps criminis in such a plan.

I referred to the holding in committee of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania dealing with the foreign situation. I find fault with that. Perhaps it was to be expected that the plan which I suggested, embodied in a resolution which was introduced early in January, should not be considered. I shall not complain of that. I thought then and I still think that a compromise between what I had in mind, what the Senator from Pennsylvania had in mind—and he should be first and foremost—and the views which some Members on this side of the Chamber had in mind to express when those measures should be reported would have been proper and helpful. I do think these two resolutions were entitled, at least out of courtesy, to an examination and to a report by the Committee on Foreign Relations, even although that committee had deliberately decided to abdicate its important function as a part of this advisory body in the making of treaties. I do feel that, even though that committee had deliberately decided to abdicate its function, it might at least have paid the great Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and my very humble self the compliment of noticing the resolutions referred to it upon our motions.

The members of that committee know that I say this in no unkindness. They are my friends, many of them, I hope all of them; but it is my duty to call attention to the error. I have said to my other friends in the Senate, as I now say to my friends upon that committee, that we begin to tread a dangerous path when we move toward the Senate's abdication of its functions.

I want to advert to one other thing, and here perhaps I am in a hopeless minority, perhaps a minority of one. Perhaps I am in that minority because my understanding has been "unperverted" by legal learning; and I say that with all due respect for the law—the law, which is the "perfection of reason"; the law, the study of which develops such minds as have some of the learned who do me the courtesy now to listen to me. Perhaps I am in the minority because I have not a legal mind and because I do not know how to wind in and out amid precedent and phrase with the skill, the agility, and the subtlety which would enable me to show that the plain, simple, accurate, grammatical language of the Constitution does not mean what it seems to say.

It is not necessary for me to read to the Senate of the United States the first amendment to the Constitution of the Republic. Perhaps there are some who have forgotten it. I hope some did forget it or that it is true that my lack of legal learning leaves me shut away from some light which guided others when they started down the long and dangerous way of passing legislation which could be used to deny the people of the United States the right to freely and fearlessly discuss, not the President's affairs, not the affairs of the Senate, not the affairs of the House of Representatives, but their own governmental business.

You may fail to distinguish monarchies and despotisms and disorganized democracies from this matchless free Republic, but loose and inaccurate language does not change the fact, and in a republic, let me remind you, the President is not the sovereign. This is not a sovereign Senate; over yonder is not a sovereign House of Representatives. The sovereigns lie out yonder—100,000,000 of them. We are a Senate representing sovereign States, which are in turn mere creations of a sovereign people.

You may try to stand the Republic upside down; you may attempt to balance the pyramid upon its apex in your dreams; but the fathers built not a tottering and unstable structure balanced upon its point, with all of the weight and power above. They built an everlasting pyramid of government, and in that government, try to pervert it or to subvert it as you will, the fact remains that the people are yet sovereign. When that people declared in language which I understood, in language which prevented me from voting for the espionage act—when they declared as they adopted the Constitution of this Republic:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances—

The sovereign people spoke, and through all the years that sovereign has been speaking with a mandate which you can not sit here and disobey unless you either violate your oaths or explain away that language by some legal subtlety. I could not explain it away, and therefore I voted against the espionage act. I have never regretted that vote. I was in the minority, but I am happy that on that occasion I was in the minority with Jefferson; I was in the minority with Hamilton; and I rest content, even though some of the reactionary papers tried to persecute me, some of the very papers the editorials of which I have been several times tempted to introduce here as examples of the violation of that act by those who did not need to fear the punishment, editorials calculated to bring into contempt representative government.

I have here an editorial from a paper which once attacked me because I opposed the enactment of the espionage law, that editorial being headed "Why the Senate?" asking that question as it joined in the then popular outcry raised by those who sought for selfish ends to discredit popular government and popular sovereignty. That paper was safe; it knew well where to place its adulations; it knew well where to fawn and praise; it knew when to be brave, when to criticize, and when to condemn. The Postmaster General has not yet excluded that paper out from the mails.

I did not vote for the espionage law. I thought it unconstitutional; I thought it far beyond the delegated powers of Congress to enact a statute which should in its effect say to this sovereign people, to the people of this great Republic, "We are at war now; be still; in war this is not the people's government; this Government belongs to Washington, and we can run it without your advice."

I desire to hear the voice of the people. If I can ever merit it, I want to hear its word of encouragement; but, more than that, I ask to hear its condemnation; I am willing when I disobey its mandates to feel the burning lash of punishment. I believed the espionage law was an unconstitutional act. I did not blame those who voted for it. I must believe that they did so because of some legal knowledge which threw a different light upon the simple words of the Constitution, which seemed to forbid me to vote for the measure. I thought it was a dangerous measure. I have already said in allusion to this question, and I must refer to it once more, that I thought it was dangerous, because the language of it was so broad, that it would make possible persecution and unjust prosecution. To avoid this danger I tried to have written into the law this language: "That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or inhibiting the right of the individual citizen to speak what is true, from good motives, and for justifiable ends."

I have in my hand a report of the Attorney General of the United States, which refers to what happened during the pendency of my amendment. I shall not characterize this part of that report, a report issued by the Department of Justice to the American people to inform the American people as to the operations of that Department of Justice, as misleading or false, but I wish to call your attention to it.

I have stated that the amendment which I offered was in essence this—that it would have allowed the truth of any statement to be offered as a defense in case of an attempted punishment for words. A man called before that Department of Justice could say, "But it was true, and I thought it was my duty to tell the truth." This is what the department reports concerning that incident:

> In the course of the pendency of these amendments it was proposed to incorporate a provision under which antiwar utterances or propaganda would not be punishable if made with good motives and for justifiable ends.

That was presumably written by a lawyer, and a lawyer knows that the best defense in a libel case is the proof of the truth of the statement, and the Department of Justice knew that the essential feature of my amendment was that it allowed the truth of a statement to be offered in evidence. And yet, in its official report to the American people of that incident, it merely states:

> Would not be punishable if made with good motives and for justifiable ends.

And further—

> The experience of this department has shown that some of the most dangerous types of propaganda were either made from good motives or else that the traitorous motive was not provable.
> The department realized that the proposed clause would, in effect, destroy the value of the espionage act as a weapon against propaganda. And upon this representation Congress enacted this statute without this proviso.

That is a very interesting thing to have in the RECORD. Here is a Department of Justice that wanted to have the privilege of prosecuting people who even told the truth, and the RECORD will show, if you compare the language of my amendment and the language of the Department of Justice as it records the incident, whether or not the Department of Justice told the whole truth about this incident.

I contended that the language of this act, as we passed it, was so broad as to make possible unjust prosecutions. Constitutional lawyers on the other side contended that it was not so, and that there would be no difficulty whatever in placing a clear and definite construction upon the language of the statute. Sometimes, if a man waits long enough, his judgment may find vindication, and this is what the Department of Justice states in its report about the language of this statute:

> The unusually broad language of the espionage act has given rise to differing and conflicting interpretations at the hands of United States attorneys and United States commissioners in different parts of the country, resulting in serious confusion as to what authoritative definition is to be placed upon certain clauses of this act.

I shall not burden you with telling you the whole story, which is, in short, this—that the language was found by the department to be so broad and subject to such "conflicting interpretations," that the Department of Justice had to send out notices to all of the United States district attorneys not to prosecute any cases until the cases had first been submitted to the Attorney General for him to determine whether or not, in his judgment, the party using the language had violated the law.

Senators, do you realize what it means for the legislative body of a great, free Republic to pass a law making speech a crime, a law which enables a Government to throw men into prison for words, by a statute so broad that it rests in the discretion of one man to say whether or not the speaking or writing of those particular words constituted a crime?

We did not have much time to tell the American people about this at the last election. Our congressional candidates on the Republican ticket were not discussing such issues. While many of them desired to come back here to serve the Republic in its hour of trial, I do not think many of them were thinking much about the great issues of the campaign. They were trying to sell liberty bonds. There was no extended political campaign; but that great public mind out there sensed something. The people had not been told by the campaign speakers of all the facts. The people had not been told all the truth by the papers; not all the truth and nothing but the truth. The American people will know about these facts later. There is a campaign coming, and before the next presidential campaign the American people will get the whole truth. They had information enough, however, to cause them to throw from power the Democratic organization which had passed this autocratic law. Under this espionage act, susceptible of so many differing interpretations, many must have been prosecuted and imprisoned for words spoken without malice or evil intent, while many were no doubt prevented from speaking the truth, which it was their duty to speak, because of a fear that they might by some chance fall under the ban of such an elastic, despotic, and arbitrary statute.

Early in last January I introduced a bill to repeal this law, but this bill was not reported from the committee. It never was even perhaps considered by the committee. That committee is a committee made up of experienced men. I do not say that the bill should have been reported and passed, although I think it should have been; but I say that under the proper functioning of the committee system that bill should have been reported and voted upon, so that the American people might know the men who in time of peace would keep in force a statute which can deny the people the right to discuss their own governmental affairs. I had a right to have my recorded vote show that I was for restoring to the American people the right to speak, that I was for allowing them to exercise their constitutional right to assemble and to petition for the redress of their grievances. I had a right, and my friends on this side of the Chamber had a right, to have a record vote upon that bill.

A distinguished member of that committee, a man learned in constitutional law, a man who reveres the Constitution of this Republic, a man who is my friend, and who, I hope, respects my judgment even when he differs with me, and whose judgment I respect even when we disagree, thought that I was mistaken and that I should not urge the repeal of the espionage law. I said to him recently, in effect, "Senator, we face a serious situation. We have enacted a drastic law with language so broad as presumably to prevent sedition and the stirring up by agitators of social unrest; but the unrest is here. What shall we do now?"

"We have seen in this Chamber the mass of literature written by the Reds, Bolshevist literature, anarchistic literature, socialistic literature, and we know magazines are springing up everywhere, preaching change or revolution." He said, "The situation is serious, I know." I replied, "There is one of two courses to follow. You must either go forward or you must go back. You must enact more drastic, more despotic, more repressive legislation, and then more and more; you must club more, throw more into prison, be more brutal in your methods, or you must go back; repeal the present law, and trust the people."

My policy was to go back. I was willing to take the responsibility of going back to a system which would allow the people to fearlessly speak and freely assemble. I trust the popular will and judgment. I know the masses of our people believe in the Republic as it was intended to be, and I believe that they will preserve it. I know that if you permit them to speak freely that there will be some discordant notes, some voices anarchistic, socialistic, destructive; but on the whole, if you let them speak, I believe they will in the end speak their love for the Republic.

My bill to repeal was never reported, but it was not many more days before a policy was decided upon, not many days before from the Judiciary Committee there was reported the so-called red-flag bill, making it a crime to raise the red flag on the soil of this Republic, and further curtailing the right of free speech.

Oh, Senators, that we should have lived to see the day when any Member of the Senate of this Republic should think it necessary to pass a law making it a crime to raise the red flag in the place of our country's flag. Senators, something is radically wrong. Senators, we must search our hearts and search our records to see if perchance when we were following not the dictates of our conscience but the dictates of a bureaucrat in the Department of Justice we did not fall into the pit; search our hearts and search our records, to see if we are not possibly responsible for the condition which has led to the wearing of the red flag in some American hearts. This is the question: If that red flag is in the hearts of some of the American people, has the Government, by its mistakes, planted it there? I do not believe it is in many hearts. I do not believe that it will often wave if we repeal this espionage law.

The red flag is a revolutionary flag, a protest against evil conditions. It is needed in some countries. It is not needed here because the red, white, and blue flag is our revolutionary flag. We have had our revolution. We rid ourselves in that revolution forever of the conditions against which the red flag must ever be a protest.

Senators, why is it that any man on American soil should wear a red flag in his heart or wish to fly it in place of the Stars and Stripes? Are we in any way to blame? We are certainly at fault because we have not properly educated some of our people in a knowledge of our institutions. I am referring to the aliens who have not been by proper education assimilated. We are to blame because when this whole question of limiting the freedom of speech was before us we did not seek to be guided by the lamp of experience.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Will the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. KING. In the interests of accuracy, and I know the Senator desires to be accurate, I wish to invite his attention to the bill which the Judiciary Committee did report a few days ago.

Mr. FRANCE. I shall be very glad to have the exact language. Of course, I am discussing merely the general principle; I am not discussing the exact language of the measure, because I did not happen to have it right at my hand, but I shall be very happy to have it read into the RECORD.

Mr. KING. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] making the display of a red flag under certain circumstances an offense. That bill, together with the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Washington, was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and the part with reference to the flag, as it came from the Judiciary Committee and which constitutes section 2 of the bill as reported by the Judiciary Committee on the 15th day of this month, reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the display or exhibition at any meeting, gathering, or parade, public or private, of any flag, banner, or emblem, symbolizing, or intended by the person or persons displaying or exhibiting the same to symbolize, a purpose to overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property, or by the general cessation of industry, the Government of the United States or all government, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

I should like to state to the Senator that a further amendment was offered which strikes from the proposed bill submitted by the Judiciary Committee the words "or by the general cessation of industry." In view of the fact that the Senator stated that the Judiciary Committee had reported a red-flag bill, I wanted, in the interest of accuracy, that the Senate should be advised of the exact words of the bill bearing upon that subject which was reported by that committee.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say to the Senator that I am pleased to have the language of the measure read into the RECORD. Of course, we all know that the flag of anarchy is the red flag.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. In connection with the question which was asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I desire, if I may, to call the Senator's attention to two or three paragraphs, which I will, with his permission, read.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, may I yield to the Senator from Ohio without losing the floor, as he desires to make some remarks?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not wish to take the Senator off his feet.

Mr. FRANCE. I yield, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator referred a moment ago also to a bill he had introduced for the repeal of the espionage law. I want to read an extract from a letter which I received the other day from a very prominent citizen of Cleveland, Ohio, in which this paragraph occurred:

Revolution is being talked constantly and the workmen of this city are being fanned into a flame for it. Yesterday an automobile truck paraded through the workshop district with fife and drum corps playing loudly and calling the attention of the workmen to the coming revolution and inviting them to attend a meeting to be held last night.

This letter is dated February 22. The writer sent to me certain literature which was spread broadcast in the city in anticipation of this meeting. A closing paragraph of one circular reads as follows:

War is the natural outcome of the present economic system, and as long as private property in production continues there will continue to be wars. War is the capitalist method for ending unemployment. But at the end of each war the unemployment becomes worse.

However, there is another method of ending unemployment, wars, and all the other ills of society. This method is the method of the rising working class—revolution.

Workers and soldiers, you must revolt and take everything for your own use instead of having somebody make profits out of you and having the power to dictate to you what you shall do and what you can not do.

There are only two courses open to you—another war or revolution. Which will you choose?

Allow me to read another paragraph from another speech which was circulated as a part of this propaganda:

Labor produces all wealth. Labor is therefore entitled to all wealth. We are going to do away with capitalism by taking possession of the land and the machinery of production. We don't intend to buy them, either. The capitalist class took them because it had the power to control the muscle and brain of the working class in industry. Organized, we, the working class, will have the power. With that power we will take back that which has been stolen from us.

When propaganda of this kind is being circulated, does not the Senator think that, instead of repealing the espionage laws, there should be some additional legislation to meet this particular situation?

Mr. FRANCE. I thank the Senator from introducing into the RECORD some concrete evidences of the very condition of which I have been speaking. I have been discussing the question whether it is better to go forward and enact more drastic legislation or to go back, repeal, and trust the people. We live in a Republic which is a constitutional Republic; we have laws which make violence a crime, which make murder a crime, which make riot a crime. All of those acts were crimes before this war. They will be crimes after the repeal of the espionage law.

I have been trying to say, regardless of how the situation has been created, that it is here, and that you must enact more drastic legislation or you must go back to the Constitution, go back to the principles of the Republic, and let men speak their views, trusting the love and loyalty and sanity of our people.

I quoted the other day, in my address to the Senate on the espionage act, the words of Jefferson on the subject of free speech. The Senator, by what he indicates would be his policy, shows once more that when the teachings of Washington were consigned to oblivion those of Jefferson were also. I have on my desk an encyclopedia of Jefferson's words. I shall not detain you to read his words concerning the sedition law and freedom of speech. If Senators who are followers of Jefferson would read that encyclopedia more they might not think Jefferson, after all, so much out of date. Jefferson said on one occasion:

If there be any among us who wish to dissolve this Union or to change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated, where reason is left free to combat it.

Senators, no man on this floor can properly accuse me of being in favor of riots, of revolution, of disregard of the Constitution. I have not violated the Constitution in my votes. There is the test. Search my record, and I do not think you will find that I have cast one vote against the language of that Constitution, even when I had to suffer for voting in the minority for the protection of the fundamental law of our country. I believe that the real revolutionist in this Republic is the man who disrespects and disregards the Constitution of the country, and I care not where he is, or whether he be a ragged, illiterate, oppressed workman, suffering from the injustice of conditions which legislative bodies of this land have allowed to exist, protesting in his physical hunger against a system which he believes is not giving him justice, or whether he sits in an upholstered chair in some legislative body and votes against the fundamental law of his country because some one tells him to do so, and he is afraid to disobey.

You are complaining now of a condition similar to that which Alexander Hamilton predicted would follow the sedition act of 1798 and which the Republican Party, the liberal party of the Republic, foresaw might come when we voted here for my "speaking of the truth" amendment to the espionage act. This the party of Hamilton knew such a condition would come, because we did not think that Washington and Hamilton were out of date.

In 1798 Congress, only 11 years after the Constitution was adopted, thought the Constitution was out of date. Hamilton was living then. He saw the "alien and sedition" measures introduced into the Congress, and he had no sooner seen them than he wrote these words:

Let us not establish a tyranny. Energy is a very different thing from violence. If we make no false step, we shall be essentially united. But if we push things to extremes, we shall then give to faction body and solidity.

Frothy words do no harm; factional opinion does no harm. Hamilton saw the danger of giving to discontent body and solidity, and that is what you did with the espionage law, because you thought you knew more than Hamilton. Hamilton wrote those words in 1798. The Congress disregarded them. He was not mistaken then, as I have said before. His prophecy then proved true, for in a few short months was born for the first time, as a result of giving to faction "body and solidity," the doctrine of nullification and secession which ultimately led to civil war.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FRANCE. For a question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does not the Senator feel now that he can permit the census bill to be passed?

Mr. FRANCE. I have here now some letters which I had not intended to introduce into the RECORD when I first began.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will not the Senator answer my question?

Mr. FRANCE. I thought the Senator had taken his seat.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does not the Senator feel that he can permit us to pass the census bill?

Mr. FRANCE. I have assured the Senator that I think the census bill is perfectly safe.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is the safety of the dead.

Mr. FRANCE. Well, history will prove whether that is true.

I want to tell the Senators a significant fact; and I wish the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Pomerene, had been able to remain to hear the answer which I wished to give to his question. When I introduced the bill to repeal the espionage law, I began to get letters from all parts of the country. Most of those letters came from those who, during the last months, have been in a small minority. Many of them had come from those who hate war because of their religious beliefs; men of peace, who felt the hand of this law most heavily; those who were more radical internationalists than some of you gentlemen who are now talking the same internationalism, if of a more conservative character. Some few lawyers wrote to me, but many of our more conservative people were probably in doubt as to what policy we should pursue, whether we should go ahead and enact more drastic laws or go back and trust the people. But, Senators, soon after this bill which the Senator from Utah, Mr. KING, has read in part, was reported to the Senate, my mail changed; and from the most conservative citizens, including lawyers, in the country came to me words of warning, that we had better not be rash, that they saw the real danger of pressing things so far that actual violence might be invited.

I will read you one of those letters, but I will not give you the name of the writer; and I will not put it into the RECORD. It is from a lawyer in New York City, living at a conservative address, and this is only one of many letters, showing that even the conservative men now see the danger which Hamilton saw and which I pointed out to you in his words so many months ago. This letter reads:

DEAR SIR: The theory of constructive crime, I believe, was invented by Lord Justice Jeffries in his bloody assizes following the Monmouth insurrection in 1685.

Jeffries's innovation in criminal jurisprudence was the predication of criminality upon the supposed dangerous tendency of acts or opinions instead of upon tangible wrongs, demonstrable, committed by the accused. As in prosecutions under our espionage act, it was easy for juries composed entirely of political adversaries, and charged by a judge who was also a political adversary, to infer from the character of the defendant's opinions that criminal harm would be a "natural and probable" consequence of their expressions.

Mind you, this is a conservative man, who had not protested against the espionage act, who wrote only after he saw that the policy was to go forward and carry this inaugurated policy to its logical conclusion. He mentions the espionage act first in his letter, and then he continues:

The provisions of the so-called antianarchist bill now pending seem calculated to perpetuate the rediscovered technique of punishing for principles. The victims of the espionage act have not been spies. I venture to suspect that the antianarchist bill is not aimed at anarchists. Whatever its aim, its tendency will be to continue the persecution of legitimate political agitation. I hope very much you are going to oppose it vigorously.

I have a mass of letters from conservative men on this bill. I want to read one more letter from the State of Indiana, showing that the conservative men are now alarmed; and I can match every letter which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] receives from misled fanatics, who wish their country well, but who have not realized the importance of conserving its fundamental principles and of its Constitution. I can match every letter which he reads from one of those fanatics, who want to suppress this evil by unconstitutional means, with a letter from a conservative lawyer, which points out the danger of the continuance of this un-American policy. This letter reads:

> We understand that you are a member of a committee considering the passage of a peace-time sedition act. We want to protest to you against the passage of this infamous measure.
> It is not our purpose to defend lawlessness, as you can see by our stationery. We have been for a quarter of a century practicing law, and are still practicing law, and will continue to uphold law and order as against lawlessness. It is not a protest against the expressed purpose of the bill, but it is a protest against the passage of the bill, and the construction the courts will place upon it, and the interpretation to be placed upon it by the prosecuting attorneys of the several districts in the enforcement of the law. The law should not be made so broad that it will suppress free speech in this country, and the bill, as I apprehend it, if it is passed, does that very thing.

Mr. President, I had not the slightest idea that I would take so long in these preliminary observations upon the vices of the committee system, which enable the Judiciary Committee of this Senate, for example, not only to disregard a bill referred to it by a Senator and fail to report it, but afterwards to report a bill subsequently introduced, representing a totally different policy, before the Senate had an opportunity to fully discuss the question first submitted.

We must without discouragement or delay face the great task of national reconstruction.

I met here recently an enthusiastic young fellow who has been working heart and soul to have the adult illiteracy or Americanization bill passed, which you have not passed. You have not had time to take up the illiteracy bill and the need for it is pressing. I thought this young fellow was discouraged and I said, "Do not be blue. We are going to get after this illiteracy problem yet. Do not be blue." "Oh," he said, "I am not blue." He said, "When a man tells me not to be blue I say I am not blue, I am red, white, and blue."

In the reconstruction of the Republic we must beware of the danger of this new so-called yet undefined democracy.

Senators, I have held in my hand in the laboratory a crystal tube of beautiful sweet amber-colored culture fluid—of such concealed and concentrated poisonous potency as would cause it, if properly distributed, to spread pestilence and death on every hand. But, Senators, let me say to you that such physical poison is not more dangerous to the body than this political poison which is being disseminated over this country and over the world is to the state, the poison of a democracy undefined, disordered, hating in its despotic heart the limitations of the Constitution; the democracy which dares to despise the fundamental law; the democracy which holds that the majority is always right and that it hence has a right to do anything which it pleases with the minority. Such democracy is not the goal of history.

Mr. President, we live in days when narrow creed looking to partisan ends is not enough. We need a political philosophy looking to history's purposes.

We can not solve the stupendous problems of national and the world's social reconstruction until we become filled with a rational faith in the "form and substance" of Republican government.

We need a whole new national and international policy formulated in recognition of the fact that historic evolution; of which this war is but one of the violent stages, has been steadily toward the establishment of a Government which should be stable, because a true resultant of the free interplay of individual forces; permanent, because broad, based upon a popular will, freely and intelligently expressed, preserving liberty by a constitution properly defining, limiting, and distributing its various powers, yet so integrated in all its parts and so coordinated in all of its functions as to eliminate chance as it extends with absolute certainty and scientific precision to every citizen the very maximum of opportunity for healthful life, expression and free expansion, self-development, achievement, and happiness. Such was this Republic designed by the fathers to be, and such the Government which it is our duty to defend, nurture, and perfect, that the hopes of the fathers may be brought to full fruition. Such is the American ideal of government. It is practical, because under its inspiration we have builded the greatest of all nations. It is rational because it is in harmony with universal law. It is indestructible, because when fully realized it will be eternal truth expressed in social form.

We have not yet realized this ideal of government, nor have the great principles enunciated by the fathers become vital and incorporate in all the departments and functions of our governmental structure. We have not yet fully applied these great principles to modern problems and current pressing social needs.

This has been a war for liberty, but political liberty, dear as it is to every American heart, is not enough. Men must be free, at least in this Republic, from the conditions that deprive of equal opportunities.

I know that some of you believe that these restless ones are all foreigners. It is not so. Some of them are our best citizens. I know that you think that a very large majority of these restless ones are demanding "equality of circumstance." This is not true. The Americans who went to the front to fight have no such idea. The true American does not ask equality of circumstance; he only asks that the purposes of this Republic be fulfilled.

Lincoln correctly called ours—

> That form and substance of government whose leading object is to elevate the condition of men; to lift artificial weights from all shoulders, to clear the paths of laudable pursuit to all; to afford an unfettered start and a fair chance in the race for life.

And it is in furtherance of that purpose that we should continue to work here in extra session until we have solved some of the grave reconstruction problems which confront us.

Senators, I do not ask you to pass this resolution informing the President that it is the judgment of the Senate that we should remain in session in order that we may adopt socialistic or bolshevistic legislation designed to give equality of circumstance to all who are Americans. The boys back home without employment, those walking the streets of New York, begging money and selling matches, do not ask for that. The men who marched down into the valley of the Marne and their mothers and their fathers who waited in agony at home do not ask for equality of circumstance; but they ask, and I ask for them, that we stay here in session seeking to give them what they have a right at our hands to demand—conditions affording absolute equality of opportunity.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask the Senator if he will not permit us to pass the census bill, and then continue his remarks on some other measure?

Mr. FRANCE. I would lose the floor. The Senator knows that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; the Senator will not lose the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. I do not blame the Senator for wishing me to do so.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator will not lose the floor; he will not lose it under any consideration.

Mr. FRANCE. I feel that I can almost assure the Senator that his bill will pass. I do not wish to take any advantage of the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It will be impossible to hold the right of way much longer, I will say to the Senator, and he will soon make it impossible for the bill to pass.

Mr. FRANCE. I am not asking for the immediate passage of my resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Will my friend, the Senator from Maryland, yield to me?

Mr. FRANCE. With pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. I have listened to all of the Senator's speech, and I want to say here that amidst a great deal of that speech with which I do not agree there are some golden grains of truth interspersed here and there—not many, but there are some. [Laughter.] I am not speaking in the language of flattery, but I have hope still. I have sat here, like a lone Indian on a promontory, on guard, trying to pass the Indian bill. I still have hope that when the conference report on the census bill is disposed of we can pass the Indian bill, which, I think, could be done in about three hours and a half. I want the Senator to understand that I would not be so presumptuous or so ill mannered as even to suggest that he shorten his really interesting speech; but I do hope that all Senators will remain here, so that when his speech is concluded we can take up this bill and pass it to-night.

Mr. FRANCE. I hope they will remain. I thought I was making myself clear, but I have not; because if I had made myself clear I know that the distinguished Senator from Arizona would agree with me entirely. If I had been able to express what is in my mind and heart, the Senator would agree with more than a fraction of what I have said, because, after all, our differences are merely such differences as those between the waves of the sea. You get up here and propose measures and

I combat them, or you oppose my motions and there is a stormy sea of debate, but beneath the superficial discord is the great ocean of a brotherhood in this Republic where we find the deeps of mutual interest and understanding.

The Senator has misunderstood me in another respect. I have not been trying to kill legislation. The doctrine of the discontinuance of the session comes from that side of the Chamber, not from this. I am worn and weary also. We have been working here under the stress of war and near the hot furnaces of doubt and trial, and we are all very tired. I want to go home to the Maryland hills and look out over the beautiful Chesapeake as much as the Senator from Arizona wants to go into the invigorating air of his own magnificent State. I am not pleading that this legislation should not pass. I am willing to stay here day and night until by law this session expires, and I am willing, if I can get the measures which, in my heart, I believe should be enacted before this fiscal year ends, to work day and night even until I fall in the exhaustion of death, or until July or on to December. I can not be justly charged by any man from that side of the Chamber—in that party which has fallen into the delusion that it would be safe for Congress to adjourn until July or December with the Republic in this condition—with trying to kill legislation.

I am pleading for more legislative time; and if the Senators on that side go home and break the quorum to-night, when they are advocating that the legislative bodies of this Republic shall adjourn until July or December, they will violate the faith which the people of this Republic have in them.

I think I probably have not made myself clear at all if any of the Senators on that side believe that my aim is to impede legislation. I am willing to stand here until I fall after exhausting every parliamentary resource to get an extra session of this Congress on the 5th day of March, in order that we may properly meet the serious situation which exists in this Republic and which I tell you does not exist only as a result of war. The war did not cause all of the difficulty. I believe in my heart that this condition has been caused by the grave mistakes of the executive and the legislative departments of this Republic, and I take my share of the blame.

Senators, I know that from 1914 until this Republic declared war our people were divided in opinion. If you doubt that, study the history of the period. But, Senators, when this Congress voted, upon the recommendation of the President, for war all substantial divisions disappeared and we became a united people, as we had never been before, but later, by a series of blunders which were inexcusable, we permitted discord, misunderstandings, intolerance, class conflict, bitterness, to interfere with the proper development of that great spirit of sympathy, mutual understanding, and of desire for cooperative effort which were so manifest everywhere soon after our declaration of war.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be a very good thing for this Congress to pass what is known as the Americanization bill before we adjourn? Is not that about as essential as any measure before us?

Mr. FRANCE. Most certainly; and while the Senator was absent from the Chamber I adverted to the fact that the adult illiteracy bill was one of the bills which we could not pass, because, under the decree and under the Democratic policy we are expected to adjourn until December, and, by so adjourning, kill legislation which our people need, and demand immediately, at our hands.

What did we do to disintegrate the unity of spirit of our people? What did we do to disorganize this mighty Republic, rising in all her splendor to put on her shining armor for the vindication of her inalienable rights, and for a demonstration that she was a Nation which dared to fight when her rights were trespassed upon and violated?

Our people were united. Of course, this is a great Republic of more than 100,000,000 people on a vast continent extending from ocean to ocean, with varying differences and circumstances and systems of training and tradition and education, with too much difference, I think, in the latter. Differences of opinion are not only legitimate but necessary. As we all know, the Republic is stable because it is the true resultant of difference of thinking on the part of the people, of various individual opinion and multitudes of thoughts and expressions, of mind beating against mind, word against word, thought against thought, will against will. There must be in a true Republic such normal differences of opinion.

One Sunday afternoon, nearly three years ago, I was in a great American city, with its teeming hundreds of thousands of men of all circumstance and condition. I knew that city well. I knew its rich, I knew its poor, I knew the misery which was there in some of the hovels which a reactionary city government had allowed to exist and to be called homes—mere slovenly pens where men dwelt in poverty and ignorance and degradation almost on a level with the beasts. I walked through a street which was a cross section of that city and noting a sign upon a theatre I entered and found a seat in a vast auditorium which was crowded from pit to topmost gallery. It was an open forum meeting such as were permitted to be held in the old days, in the days far back in 1916 before we concluded that we were wiser than our fathers when they said that the principal pillar of free government is freedom of speech, of expression, and of assembly.

This was before we had discovered this doctrine, which has been advocated on the other side of the Chamber, that one-man governments are more efficient than Republics, and that the free expression of differences of opinion is extremely dangerous.

As I waited in this great auditorium a frail little woman came out upon the stage and began to speak. She began to speak of poverty. She spoke of the London slums, of the degradation in American cities, of child labor, and of the little spirits in pale and wan bodies which never knew of free and happy play in the open sun. The audience was in large part composed of men, but when this woman had finished speaking the thousands there had been most deeply moved. She had begged for justice for little children. She had asked only for the equal opportunity which it is the purpose of the Republic to assure. The speaker was but a spirit in a fragile human shell, but a mighty soul filled with courageous devotion and a love for humanity. She had been traveling up and down the country for many months preaching, not anarchy, not socialism, not demanding an equal circumstance, but demanding a fair chance, an unfettered start for women and the children of the poor in the race of life.

I think that little woman, Rose Pastor Stokes, traveling up and down the Republic did some good. She certainly made some friends. After war was declared that little woman wrote an indiscreet editorial for a western paper. It was the expression of a proper human emotion at an improper time, the expression of that very emotion that is being given expression to-day when you plead for a permanent peace.

Senators, it was the same heroic, sacrificing, devoted spirit of that little woman which found different expression when our troops charged resistlessly at Chateau-Thierry. It is the spirit which longs for liberty, for world advancement, for equal opportunity. It was indiscreetly expressed by her I know, but do you think that this indiscreet article in that paper would have stopped the great Republic from calling any part of its Army to the colors?

Senators, that editorial would not have kept one single soldier from responding to his country's call. Men had to fight this war. The women helped, but the brawn and bone and courage of men were needed, and the American men had it; and you lacked faith in their spirit and courage when you feared that words of anguish wrung from a tender woman's heart would keep them from going to their duty. She wrote this editorial, and the rough hand of the Department of Justice fell upon her, and she was dragged into court, tried, convicted, and given a heavy prison sentence. I shall not discuss whether, in the abstract, that was justice, but I am sure that all the people who knew her and of her work resented it when they learned that there had been laid upon her the rough and inconsiderate hands of the law and that she was to be sent to prison for mere words.

Senators, you know the story of our court-martials. You know how the failure to pay allotments left little festering sores here and there. I shall close. I am not speaking as a partisan when I ask you to pass that resolution merely expressing your sentiments, if they are your sentiments, to the President, your fellow partyman, and friend, that this Congress should remain in session to repeal some of this drastic legislation to cure some of these crying evils, to heal some of these festering sores.

I am willing to yield to the Senator from Texas if he will assure me, and those on the other side of the aisle will assure me, that the conference report presented by the Senator from Texas will be agreed to at once.

During the delivery of Mr. FRANCE'S speech,

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. KENYON. I observe a number of soldiers in uniform who are unable to get into the galleries. I ask unanimous consent that any man in uniform be admitted to the Senators' gallery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

At the conclusion of his speech, Mr. FRANCE said:

I will yield, Mr. President, for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and that the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. SMOOT. The conference report has been agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is an amendment by the House, and I move that the Senate concur in it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the record will have to be changed, then.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Secretary has at his desk the amendment of the House to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read before the Senate agrees to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the House.

The SECRETARY. To the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in executive departments and independent governmental establishments preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines, and the widows of such, if they are qualified to hold such positions.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is substantially the amendment which the Senate placed in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Simply one word. I do not object to it at all, but I am sorry to see that the change was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House which has just been read by the Secretary.

The amendment was concurred in.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. I make the usual request; that is to say, I request that the formal reading of the bill be disposed with and that the bill be read for committee amendments only, and that the committee amendments be disposed of first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

Mr. SMOOT. On February 18, 1919, the Senate passed a resolution directed to the Secretary of the Interior requesting information. Secretary Lane on February 26, 1919, addressed a letter to Hon. James M. Baker, Secretary of the United States Senate, in answer to that resolution.

Mr. President, I have never seen that done before in the history of the Senate, and I am going to ask the Senate that all this correspondence be returned to the Secretary of the Interior, with a request that he direct his response to the resolution in the ordinary and usual way.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I would like to assure the Senator from Utah that no disrespect was intended by the Secretary of the Interior in this matter, for there is no man in official life in Washington who more desires not only to show respect by word but by action than the Secretary of the Interior, and if an error has been occasioned such as the Senator points out, I assure the Senator it was a clerical error and not an intentional one, and the Secretary of the Interior will be glad, indeed, to conform to the suggestion of the Senator, in order that he may show to the Senator, as to every other Member of the Senate, that he is deferential and in no wise intended to be contumacious by addressing a document, instead of addressing it to this body, to one of its employees.

I only rise at this time to say to the Senator he may rest assured that it was an unintentional error.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to assure the Senator from Illinois that I fully agree with him as to all that he says about Secretary Lane. I have no thought in my mind in the way of condemnation of this way of answering the resolution. Perhaps I might say that it passed over the desk of the Secretary of the Interior without his noticing it. I am perfectly willing to give him the benefit of the doubt. Thousands of letters are signed, I suppose, by him every day or so, and I take it for granted that he does not read all of them. I trust that is the way it occurred.

Mr. LEWIS. I have no doubt it did.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must know that I have said nothing which would indicate in the least that I have any feeling over the matter, but I do believe that the Senate ought to be respected in the request made of it, and that the answer should come to the Senate rather than to an employee of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I think, Mr. President, that the Senator from Utah has correctly apprehended how the error arose, surely clerical and inadvertent, and we will get such a response from the returned document as will fairly indicate that. I join in the request because I want the record corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah and the Senator from Illinois will indulge the Chair for a moment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the Senator from Montana will indulge the Chair. The Chair suggests to the Senators that they look at the report. The Chair thinks that there are some matters in relation to it that may change the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SMOOT. "Some reason," did the Chair say?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may be pardoned for so doing, he suggests to the senior Senator from Utah and to the Senator from Illinois that they examine the report. There may be some confidential matters, the Chair will state, which, perhaps, induced the course which was pursued by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Chair that I recognize that it is stated in the letter that it is a confidential matter, but I am quite sure that the Secretary could address the confidential matter to the President of the Senate just as well as he could to an employee of the Senate. I have never known—at least I do not now remember—of such an occurrence ever having before happened.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I knew nothing about the resolution to which the Senator has referred nor about the response to the resolution until to-night. It was all new to me until to-night. I only had a minute or two to hastily glance at the communication. It appears to be confidential. I do not know what the practice of the Senate has been heretofore, but it seems to me that it is not inappropriate to address a response of that kind to the Secretary of the Senate, who is supposed to lay it before the Senate. That is the duty of the Secretary—to lay any communications before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. How can the Secretary lay a communication before the Senate? The Secretary of the Senate has no right to lay any paper before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. The Secretary of the Senate can hand it to the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The communication should have been addressed to the Presiding Officer of the Senate in the first place.

Mr. MYERS. It seems to me merely a matter of etiquette; and to the correction of that error in etiquette I have no objection whatever. I only wish to concur in what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has stated, that I know the Secretary of the Interior meant no disrespect to the Senate, that he did not mean to depart in any way from the usual custom of official legislative etiquette, and that he only intended to comply with his official duties in a respectful and courteous manner, as he always does.

Mr. GORE. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. This is the regular order. If the Secretary of the Interior has departed from the etiquette of the Senate, and it is proper to have him conform to it, I suppose there can be no objection to his doing so.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply did not want to have this form of answer to a resolution recognized; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not quite understand the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] with respect to the communication.

Mr. SMOOT. My request is that the communication be returned to the Secretary of the Interior calling attention to the fact that the answer to the resolution should be directed to the Vice President, the President of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah requests that the communication just referred to be withdrawn from the Committee on Public Lands and respectfully returned to the Secretary of the Interior, and that it may be addressed in the manner indicated by the Senator's motion. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SWANSON. In order to carry out the arrangement that has been made, I ask unanimous consent that when the Indian appropriation bill has been passed the Senate then adjourn.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1919, not to exceed three regular Indian agencies shall be maintained among the Chippewa Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I offer an amendment striking that out, and I should like to state to the chairman of the committee the reasons; and then, if the chairman desires a vote on it, it can be taken.

This fund, amounting to about $6,000,000, in the Treasury of the United States was created under a treaty of the United States and an act of Congress putting the treaty in force, under which act of Congress it was provided that the principal sum should forever remain a trust fund and the interest only should be used for the following purposes——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator said "forever." I think the treaty provides "50 years."

Mr. KELLOGG. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is right—that it should remain a trust fund for 50 years, the interest only to be used, as follows: The fund was to be placed at interest at the rate of 5 per cent, payable annually, for the period of 50 years, after the allotments provided for in the act had been made, and the interest and permanent fund were to be expended for the benefit of the Indians in the manner following:

One-half of said interest shall, during the said period of 50 years, except in the cases hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors for their use; and one-fourth of said interest shall, during the same period and with the like exception, be annually paid in cash in equal shares per capita to all other classes of said Indians; and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall, during the said period of 50 years, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians, in their midst and for their benefit; and at the expiration of the said 50 years the said permanent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chippewa Indians and their issue then living, in cash, in equal shares: Provided, That Congress may, in its discretion, from time to time during the said period of 50 years, appropriate for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians a portion of said principal sum not exceeding 5 per cent thereof.

Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States held, in the case of Minnesota against Hitchcock—an original case in the Supreme Court of the United States—that that was a treaty between the Indians and the United States Government binding on both, and that the fund constituted a trust fund. The question is whether the Congress has any right to appropriate, from the principal of that fund, any sum for the ordinary expenses of running the Indian agency.

In 1917 this question came up and the House struck it out entirely. It came into the Senate, and the Senate committee inserted "$185,000." After long consultation with the Indian Department it was concluded to leave it at $175,000 for the year 1917, and during that time the Indian Department agreed to make an investigation of the situation and see whether the fund was necessary. I shall not take the time to-night to explain this long investigation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think the members of the committee understand the Senator's amendment, because I believe it has been discussed pretty thoroughly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it has.

Mr. ASHURST. And, so far as I am concerned, as chairman of the committee, unless some of the other Senators have an objection to offer, I am willing to accept the Senator's amendment. It relates particularly to a matter in his State, and was argued by him before the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the Chair understands that this is an amendment of the committee, and the end desired by the Senator from Minnesota will be accomplished by voting down the committee amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 45, line 13, to change the number of the section from 17 to 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 18, to insert:

That the trust period upon the lands heretofore allotted to the Mexican Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma, and the restrictions against taxation and alienation existing thereunder be, and the same hereby are, extended for the period of 10 years from the date upon which the existing period expires.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I make a point of order against that amendment, on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. It changes the existing law. It changes the existing status of the lands of the Indians. I will say, further, that the Secretary of the Interior has power, under existing law, to make an order extending this trust period. He can exercise that power at any time between this time and the 1st day of September. It is needless from that standpoint, but I object to it on the ground that it is legislation. It does not appropriate any money. It changes the law; and the facts and circumstances and conditions of the legal status of these Indians and their lands will be different, if this bill passes, than they would be otherwise.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not want to consume any time at this late hour. In fact, I would be guilty of a breach of propriety if I were to do so. I wish my friend would withdraw the point of order. I think it will lie. I think it is good, and I am not going to make any extended argument, but I think the trust period ought to be extended. I will not argue the question now. I think the Senator ought to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GORE. I do not want to petrify in the law what the Secretary has authority to do and has not done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator insist upon the point of order?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 47, line 4, after "$7,000," to insert "for improvement of water and engineering system, $20,000," and in line 5, after the words "in all," to strike out "$101,600" and insert "$121,600," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 550 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., including pay of superintendent, $94,600; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; for improvement of water and engineering system, $20,000; in all, $121,600: Provided, That $20,000 heretofore appropriated for roads and bridge on the Chilocco Indian Reservation in Oklahoma, or any unexpended balance thereof, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the construction or completion of such roads and bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 8, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, not to exceed the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the money on deposit to the credit of the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, to be expended for the support, education, and systematic vocational instruction of Osage children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 1, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, not to exceed $35,000 of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma and to pay out the same for necessary expenses in connection with oil and gas production on the Osage Reservation, including salaries of employees, rent of quarters for employees, traveling expenses, printing, telegraphing and telephoning, and purchase, repair, and operation of automobiles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 7, to insert:

That the provision in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, authorizing the expenditure of not exceeding $25,000 from unexpended Osage tribal funds heretofore appropriated for any fiscal year for the use and construction of a fireproof office building for Osage Agency is hereby amended to provide that not exceeding $35,000 of such unexpended Osage tribal funds may be used in the construction of such fireproof office building, including the removal of the present office building and rearrangement of interior of same for employees' quarters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 17, to insert:

There shall be held on the first Monday in June, 1919, at Pawhuska, Okla., a general election, at which there shall be elected a principal chief, assistant chief, and eight members of the Osage tribal council: Provided, That the principal chief, assistant chief, and four members of said council shall be full-blood Osage Indians, and four members shall be mixed-blood Osage Indians by blood, all as indicated on the approved rolls of said tribe, and shall be residents of the Osage Nation. In all cases where there is a tie in the vote of the council members on any matter, the principal chief, or in his absence, the assistant chief, shall have a vote. The officers so elected shall hold office for a term of two years from July 1, 1919, and such officers shall be elected biannually thereafter, each election to be held under rules and regulations approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and no officers so elected shall enter upon duty until their election shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior. In case of vacancy in the office of principal chief, by death, resignation, or otherwise, the assistant chief shall succeed to said office, and all vacancies in the Osage tribal council shall be filled in a manner to be prescribed by the council, in accordance with the provisions of this act as to Osage blood, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to remove from the council any member or members thereof for good cause to be by him determined. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I make a point of order against that, on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. For the purposes of the RECORD, Mr. President, I want to say to my friend, the learned Senator from Oklahoma, that he is making a mistake, in my judgment. However, I do not want to put my opinion as to the condition in his State against his own opinion; but let me give the situation.

These Osages, if I understand the situation properly, are wealthy Indians. Each one of these 4,000 Indians has an income of $2,200—each man, woman, and child.

Mr. CURTIS. They have an income of $4,000 each.

Mr. ASHURST. Four thousand dollars. The half-breeds, it is asserted, overthrow the will of the full bloods, and very frequently when the full bloods, who are a splendid type of Indian, attempt to do something they are overthrown in their council or otherwise by the half-breeds. This has appealed to me as the most beneficient and just legislation, that four members of the council and the chief of the tribe and the assistant chief should be full bloods; and I appeal to my friend here, at this hour of midnight, when I have sat here, as I say, seven long days urging that this bill be brought up, to withdraw his point of order and let this legislation go to conference. It ought to go to conference.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in the abstract my sympathies would be with the full-bloods in a contest as against the half-breeds or the other Indians; but I object to this not only on the ground that it is general legislation but in the interest of world democracy. If these Indians are ever to learn to stand alone and to walk alone, we ought not to direct them as to whom they are to choose as their officers in an election. I did suggest to the chairman of the committee privately that if he would accept an amendment to this providing that all existing members of the senate and house of representatives should be reelected without opposition I would not make a point of order against it; but here we are undertaking to direct an election to be held amongst these Indians. They either ought not to be allowed to hold an election at all or else they ought to be allowed to hold an election.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, facetiousness after 12 o'clock or near 12 o'clock is never pardonable except at banquets that are not "dry," and I am not going to indulge in anything of the kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 50, after line 20, to insert:

All that part of the act approved June 28, 1906, entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes," (34 Stat. L., 539), which reserves to the Osage Tribe the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals covered by the lands for the selection and division of which provision is made in that act, is hereby amended so that the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals covered by said lands are reserved to the Osage Tribe for the period ending December 31, 1956: Provided, That the minerals upon the allotted lands shall become the property of the individual owner of the surface of said lands at the expiration of said period unless otherwise provided for by act of Congress.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I feel compelled to make a point of order against that, on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to be heard on that. That is estimated for. It is in the big Book of Estimates. It is in the book which the Interior Department sent to the Treasury Department. It is on page 406 of the Book of Estimates; and, under our rules, if an item is estimated for, or reported favorably from a standing committee, it is impervious to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator permit the Chair to inquire whether or not that rule would govern where it relates to legislation that is not purely of the character of an appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Chair will find, if he will examine the rule, that legislation on an appropriation bill, if it is estimated for by a department, is rendered impervious to a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Treasury Department can not put general legislation in an estimate without any appropriation of money. There is no money appropriated for this at all. It is purely legislation, without any appropriation at all.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to say merely a word on the point of order. I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order on the ground that it is general legislation. The act of 1906 reserved the oil, gas, and other minerals in the Indian tribe for 25 years, with the reservation that Congress should extend that time if it saw fit. Now, Congress is simply carrying out the act of 1906. It is not general legislation. It does not change existing law. It simply carries out the act, extending the time as the act authorizes.

I am not expressing myself on the merits of this amendment, because I will frankly say that it is one I have not fully made up my mind upon, as I stated in the committee. I have some doubt about it; but I must say that I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. It certainly changes existing law and is subject to a point of order on that ground. You can not change existing law on an appropriation bill where the item does not appropriate any money.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, as the Senator from Kansas has said, it is just an extension or rather carrying out of a provision of the act of Congress. It seems to me that if the merits of this proposition should be considered by the Senator from Oklahoma he would not be inclined to insist on his point of order. If I recall the testimony when this amendment was inserted, it developed this situation. The time for holding the oil in trust for the tribe was limited to a definite period. In operating those lands they sell a lease for a given specified time and as long as oil and gas may be found. It is the judgment of the department that that period of time will not enable the lessee to extract all the oil or gas. So when the leases are put up for sale the amount of bonus which is offered is very much limited by reason of that, and it ought to be. It is the purpose of this amendment to protect the Indians, to enable the Indians to get full value for their property.

Moreover, the surface of these lands has been allotted to different Indians. Some of it, and quite a lot of it, has passed into the hands of individual white owners, and under the terms of the statute all the mineral and oil which is in existence beyond this period of time becomes the property of the individual owner, and it would transfer to the individual owner the mineral right to take it away from the tribe, whereas the tribe has the full beneficial interest in it at present.

Of course, these allottees, the individuals whose land has been allotted and which has become immensely valuable, are very much interested in defeating this amendment, but I submit that for the good of the tribe, the women and children, the children yet unborn, these lands ought to be held for the benefit of the tribe and not be given away through negligence on the part of Congress to any other allottee or transferee of an allottee.

I submit, Mr. President, that the point of order can not be well taken, because it is incumbent upon Congress to look after that situation, and I think it is merely carrying out the intention of Congress. I hope the amendment is not subject to a point of order, because on the merits I was greatly impressed with the importance of putting this amendment on the bill.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I did not undertake to discuss the merits of this matter. The merits of it would take considerable time to discuss. The fact is that the proposal to continually extend this time has prevented the officers of the Interior Department from properly leasing the land which has oil and to develop that oil as rapidly as it ought to be developed. The very reason why I am opposed to it on its merits is because I want the department to lease the land and have the land open for the production of oil so that those people may get the benefit of it while they are alive and not wait for some remote, future period for the recovery of the oil values. We want to have our State developed. I think there is not a single Member of the Oklahoma delegation who is not opposed to extending this right at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let me be heard for just a moment and offer a solution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. OWEN. I shall yield the floor. I have made the point of order because it is identical with the Kickapoo case. I stand on the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I will be a member of the committee of conference. I have entire confidence in both Senators from Oklahoma to do absolute justice. Let the amendment go to conference, and if we find that the department comes before the conferees, as the department will, and asserts that this legislation is absolutely necessary to protect the Indians' rights, as I believe it to be, although the trust period does not expire for some time yet——

Mr. GORE. In 1931.

Mr. ASHURST. Why not let it go to conference? The conferees will do substantial justice. I appeal to the Senator from Oklahoma to let it go to conference. I think that is a fair way to treat the matter. There it can be discussed. The argument made by the Senator from New Mexico, it seems to me, has great force, and I am sure it has appealed to every Senator sitting here. It is an argument of immense force.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to read the provision of the law:

Provided further, That the oil, gas, coal, and other minerals upon said allotted land shall become the property of the individual owners of said land at the expiration of 25 years, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will pardon the Chair. Is it the Senator's contention that if there shall be a general statute designating the period within which lands may be opened it is not general legislation upon an appropriation bill to extend the period?

Mr. CURTIS. The contention I make is that the original act of Congress authorizes Congress to extend the time. Now, Congress is simply extending the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would not that be general legislation?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Why should it be taken from the class of general legislation because Congress is authorized to extend the time? Congress would have the power anyway without the authorization.

Mr. CURTIS. Congress would have the power, but the right is specially reserved in the act that we are extending, and, so far as general legislation is concerned, it applies only to one tribe of Indians and is not general at all in its character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will pardon the Chair. The Chair does not mean to be discourteous in interrupting the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I am glad to be interrupted by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to learn the rule correctly. Does the Senator think that in order to be general legislation it must extend to a multitude of persons or parties within the same class?

Mr. CURTIS. It has been the ruling both in the House and in the Senate that it was special and not general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Supreme Court, if the Senator will pardon the Chair, has held, for instance, that legislation with reference to insurance companies, if it embraced all the insurance companies of that class, was general, in contradistinction to special legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. This applies only to one tribe. As I said, I simply expressed myself on the point of order. On the merits of the case I have not fully made up my mind, as I stated a minute ago, and I do not care to express any opinion.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks it is general legislation, and sustains the point of order.

The next amendment was, under subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 51, line 10, to change the number of the section from 18 to 19; in line 12, after the word "employees," to strike out "$185,000:" and insert "$205,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available"; and, in line 21, after the word "leases," to insert "excluding oil and gas leases," so as to read:

SEC. 19. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $205,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes through the Secretary of the Interior, showing in detail the expenditure of all moneys appropriated by this provision: Provided further, That hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural and mineral leases, excluding oil and gas leases, made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. GORE. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question.

Mr. GORE. As the Chair perhaps observed, my colleague and myself both rose on this point. We are both very much opposed to this proposition, as is the entire citizenship of our State. I will state in a word the ground of our objection.

One-third of all the Indians in the United States live in the State of Oklahoma. The Five Civilized Tribes live in the State of Oklahoma. Some of them at least have always been civilized, as far back as their history runs or as knowledge of the white man extends in relation to those tribes. There are some 70,000 of these civilized Indians. They had a vast estate in that country. There is a Commission for the Five Civilized Tribes, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The present occupant of that office used to be the register of the Treasury, but he is an Indian by blood. Prior to that he was president of a college. He is one of the most exemplary men in the State of Oklahoma. I might almost say, as I could without extravagance, that he is an ideal man for this position. An Indian by blood, every impulse of his heart beats in sympathy with the interests of the Indian. There could not be a better guardian of their interests and their welfare.

There are vast mineral properties belonging to these Indians. These lands have been allotted in severalty. They are still leased, however, subject to the approval of the Interior Department; that is, so far as the restricted Indians are concerned. Certain Indians have had their restrictions removed. Other Indians are known as restricted Indians. Leases affecting their property must pass through the Interior Department and must obtain the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. There is an enormous amount of business originating in that section, involving millions of money.

I do not object, no one objects—indeed, I would insist as strenuously as anyone—that matters affecting the interests of the Indians which are contested ought to go through the Department of the Interior, or, at least, there ought to be an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. But it is our contention that the detailed business which is uncontested ought to be subject to the approval of the commissioner for the five tribes, and if he is not a man qualified for that service then somebody ought to be appointed who is.

In our State at least we have grown weary of this long-range Government 1,600 miles away. In other days an Indian could not buy a set of chain harness without having the matter come to the Interior Department for approval. There has been some liberalization of those rules. Larger jurisdiction has been committed to the local authority in Oklahoma. When I say local authority I mean the Commission for the Five Civilized Tribes.

It is our contention that oil and gas leases which are uncontested ought to be subject to the approval of the Commission for the Five Civilized Tribes. Where there is a contest, where there is a protest, where there is a complaint, where there is a controversy, it ought to go, we will admit, to the Secretary of the Interior. When these uncontested claims come to the Department of the Interior here in Washington what is done? The report is made by appointees of the department in Oklahoma.

They look over the land, they investigate the situation, and they submit a report. Now, when there is no contest, why should not the Commission for the Five Civilized Tribes be permitted to pass judgment? Why oblige those papers to come to Washington through this tedious process and let a clerk here in the Interior Department, with a record submitted by the appointee of the department sooner or later, pass judgment upon a matter that is not in controversy and that is not contested?

Now, we are merely insisting upon a larger measure of local government, only that measure of local government which would not impair or jeopardize the rights or the interests of the Indians. This way of centralizing authority at some remote state of government, withdrawing it from local authorities, is not consistent with the alleged spirit of the times.

Mr. ASHURST. The amendment is not subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, much as I regret to take five minutes or even two minutes at this unseasonable hour, my duty requires me to say that I earnestly appeal to every Senator here to vote for this amendment. With all the earnestness I am capable of summoning I appeal to every Senator here to vote for the amendment and for the reason I shall state.

I mean no reflection on the splendid delegation from the State of Oklahoma in the House and in the Senate, but here is the situation: Lands that contain immense stores of oil and gas are becoming progressively more valuable each year. I assert that leases, contested or uncontested, which propose to lease lands valuable in coal or oil or gas should be passed upon by the Department of the Interior.

I have a record before Congress of being a most inveterate opponent of all kinds of red tape. I am opposed to red tape, but there are matters which are infinitely serious that run to the very vitals of legislation. On a matter of this seriousness, much as I like to disagree with my esteemed friend from Oklahoma, I am profoundly convinced that the Senate would make a grievous and serious error if it were to leave the jurisdiction of passing upon oil and gas leases to the commissioner in Oklahoma. The pressure in my State is intense upon him. We ought to relieve the agent down there, able, honorable, and conscientious though he is, from the pressure that will be put upon him to approve this lease or that lease. He ought not to be required to run the fire that all politicians are obliged to run. We have to run certain gantlets ourselves.

We ought not to require that agent down there to do it. I am here to testify that he is an able and honest and resourceful man, but the duties that are required of him are too vast; they are too great, too enormous in extent, fraught with too much consequence, to leave it to his judgment alone.

I am not going, for reasons that will be obvious, to have the roll called on the amendment, and I could have no personal interest in the matter. I am about to leave the chairmanship of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is a splendid committee. We have had our quarrels and we have had our differences and have shaken our fists at times at each other, but we are all animated by the same desire to do good to these tribes, to try to save all the property for tribes of Indians who are unable to withstand the advancing white man's methods of civilization. We have done it to an immeasurable extent. In the past 8 or 10 or 12 years the Indians' property rights have been safeguarded.

As to this tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, I had a letter just a few days before he died from Joseph H. Choate, distinguished lawyer and statesman. I think the last letter he ever wrote was a letter which he addressed to me as chairman, which I put into the RECORD, urging me last year not to consent to any legislation which would leave such stupendous burdens upon the local agent in Oklahoma.

I have large respect for the Senators who oppose the amendment, but my personal respect and affection for men must be subordinated to what I believe to be my duty. I am going to leave this chairmanship and pass it over, I believe, to better hands, and I should profoundly regret that the last bill I am to pilot through the committee and through the Senate is a bill which would not contain this amendment, which means so much to the Indians of Oklahoma. I say this with the greatest respect to Oklahoma's two Senators. They are statesmen of a high type, and I do not blame them for standing here and battling for what they conceive to be in the interest of their State and their people; but there is a duty that we have to perform as trustees for these Indians, and I ask the Senate to adopt this amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, these lease forms are printed forms with all the safeguards that the department could conceive of written into them. When these lands are leased to people who want to take the chance of drilling on them and there is no contest whatever, no question arising, after all, some employee of the Government puts his approval on the lease and writes "O. K.," and it goes. Whether that is done by a clerk at Muskogee or a clerk in the Pension Office Building here or in the building on Eighteenth Street is immaterial, except in the matter of time, requiring the mail to come here, over sixteen hundred miles, and to go back sixteen hundred miles, thus putting these people under a long-range government. After all, it is a question of human agency passing upon it. These forms are printed and the examination is made by a local officer down there. Mr. Parker receives the same salary as does the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and is a man of equal ability. It is only to relieve the State from this long-range government; that is all. The entire Oklahoma delegation desire to have the work there facilitated. There can be no danger of any harm to any of the Indians. Whatever values are there which might be developed under speculative drilling contracts will be developed under the one case as well as under the other. So we appeal to the Senate to sustain the Oklahoma delegation in their wishes on this matter and to reject this amendment. It says "uncontested."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 51, line 24, after the word "leases," to insert "except oil and gas leases," so as to read:

But all such undisputed claims or uncontested leases, except oil and gas leases, now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 25, after the word "act," to insert "except that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, within 30 days after the passage of this act, to investigate the claim not to exceed $200 growing out of a contract between John Calvin Gray as an enrolled member of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and Henry W. Blair as attorney, and in case such claim is found to be valid and the contract approved in accordance with existing law, the said Secretary may, in his discretion, apply any amount that may be found due under this paragraph, or from any funds standing to the credit of said John Calvin Gray as an enrolled member of the Choctaw Nation to the payment of such fee, but the amounts due hereunder to other enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall not be held in abeyance to this claim, but shall be paid promptly without reference thereto," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $150 per capita, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs, as provided herein, shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act except that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, within 30 days after the passage of this act, to investigate the claim not to exceed $200 growing out of a contract between John Calvin Gray, as an enrolled member of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and Henry W. Blair, as attorney, and in case such claim is found to be valid and the contract approved in accordance with existing law, the said Secretary may, in his discretion, apply any amount that may be found due under this paragraph, or from any funds standing to the credit of said John Calvin Gray as an enrolled member of the Choctaw Nation to the payment of such fee, but the amounts due hereunder to other enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall not be held in abeyance to this claim, but shall be paid promptly without reference thereto: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $8,000 out of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal funds for the expenses and the compensation of all necessary employees for the distribution of the said per capita payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 1, after "$85,000," to insert:

Provided, That when any probate attorney shall render service of a legal nature in connection with any estate of a restricted allottee or his heirs, wherein such estate is of the value of $1,000 or more, the court having jurisdiction thereof shall allow from the estate a reasonable fee which, in his discretion, is sufficient to cover the value of the service so rendered, and the amount so allowed shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States, and report shall be made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior on or before the first Monday of December of all moneys collected and deposited as herein provided.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is general legislation changing existing law. The United States is paying these probate attorneys, and there is no reason why they should tax the Indian estates in addition to the salaries they are receiving.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that the point of order is well taken, and it is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 55, line 2, after the word "of," to strike out "this" and insert "the"; and in the same line, after the word "act," to insert "of May 25, 1918 (40 Stats., p. 564)," so as to make the clause read:

The sum of $225,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations, and the Quapaw Agency in Oklahoma, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of the act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat., p. 564), limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 21, before the word "That," to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $25,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 U. S. Stat. L., p. 67), and of the improvements thereon, which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes: Provided, That not to exceed $2,500 of such amount may be used in connection with the collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings: Provided further—

So as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $25,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 U. S. Stats. L, p. 67), and of the improvements thereon, which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes: Provided, That not to exceed $2,500 of such amount may be used in connection with the collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, no moneys shall be expended from tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year at salaries at the rate heretofore paid, and one attorney each for the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Creek Tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue during the ensuing fiscal year the tribal and other schools among the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes from the tribal funds of those nations, within his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, to expend funds of the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole Nations available for school purposes under existing law for such repairs, improvements, or new buildings as he may deem essential for the proper conduct of the several schools of said tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 11, to insert:

For the salaries and expenses of not to exceed four oil and gas inspectors and necessary clerks and field assistants, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to supervise oil and gas mining operations on allotted and tribal lands in the State of Oklahoma from which restrictions have not been removed, and to conduct investigations with a view to the prevention of waste, $17,500: Provided, That this amount shall be reimbursed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe from the royalties received for the benefit of the Indian allottees.

Mr. GORE. I make the point of order that this amendment is general legislation. It is similar in character to the one as to which the Chair just sustained the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 58, line 3, after the word "Congress," in parentheses, to strike out, "Provided, That this item shall not prohibit other sales as provided by existing law," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reoffer for sale between September 15, 1919, and November 15, 1919, the unsold and forfeited tracts of coal and asphalt deposits in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations upon the same terms and conditions as provided in the act of February 8, 1918 (Public, No. 98, 65th Cong.).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 22, to insert:

That the sum of $1,666.65 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the possession of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Tribe of Indians not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse William R. McIntosh for services rendered as coal and asphalt mining trustee for the Choctaw Nation during the months of October, November, and December, 1915, and January and February, 1916: Provided that no part of such sum shall be payable to William R. McIntosh for which disbursement there is any authorization by existing law.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to this amendment. I will explain it to the chairman, though I have already explained it to him.

I presented the two matters to the Committee on Indian Affairs. One embodied in the bill is in behalf of Mr. McIntosh and embodies an appropriation of $1,666.65, while the one which I send to the desk is in behalf of Mr. Moore and is for $392.60. They stand exactly on the same footing.

Mr. ASHURST. It comes out of the Indian funds and not out of the Treasury, and the Indian tribe favors it.

Mr. GORE. I understand the tribe desire it to be done. It is an obligation that can not be paid without legislation, and the services were rendered. I filed both sets of papers at the same time with the Committee on Indian Affairs, but the chairman of that committee says that this set of papers was, for some reason, overlooked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment of the committee the following:

That the sum of $392.60 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in possession of the United States belonging to the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Jacob B. Moore, of Ardmore, Okla., for probate expenses incurred and paid by him in the performance of his duty as attorney for the Chickasaws under a contract between him and Douglas H. Johnston, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, approved by the President of the United States December 1, 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that this amendment ought to be submitted as an independent amendment, but if there is no objection the Chair will treat it as an amendment to the committee amendment. The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Oregon," on page 59, line 9, to change the number of the section from "19" to "20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 17, to insert:

S. Stats. L., p. 448), and to use the same for the purpose of making a per capita payment of $25 to the Indians entitled thereto, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and he is further authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the additional sum of $25,000 of said funds for the purchase of cattle for the Rosebud Indians on the reimburseable plan, also under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this amendment was recommended and favorably reported by the Interior Department? I refer to the Yakima irrigation project amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; it is earnestly recommended by the Interior Department. I recall it very well, but I can not turn for the moment to the page of the hearings in which it was recommended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

For the construction of a road from the village of Odanah, in the Bad River Reservation, to the south line of said reservation, $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be reimbursable under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may cooperate with the State of Wisconsin in the construction of said road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 2, to insert:

That the relinquishment executed on the 8th day of May, 1914, at Hayward, Wis., by John Stone, a member of the Lac Court 'd Oreilles Band of Chippewa Indians, by which he relinquished all his right, title, interest, and inheritance to the allotment of Maggie Grover, deceased, allotment No. 761 of said band of Indians, and described as follows: The west fractional one-half of the northwest quarter of section 18, in township 39 north, of range 8 west of the fourth principal meridian, Wisconsin, containing 74 acres and seventy-three one-hundredths of an acre, be, and the same hereby is, validated, and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue a patent to the above-described land to Steve Grover, the father of the aforesaid Maggie Grover, deceased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 75, line 19, to change the number of the section from 24 to 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 18, to change the number of the section from 25 to 26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 78, line 21, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the appropriation of $301,000 be reduced to $151,000. The item relates to the Crow Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is entirely right about that.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, line 21, after the word "Crow," it is proposed to strike out "$301,000" and insert "$151,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment providing as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Victor M. Locke the sum of $1,290.26 as balance in full due him for salary and expenses as principal chief of the Choctaw Nation.

That amendment was given to me by one of the Members of the House. I do not know what the facts are, but I assume that it is all right.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At what part of the bill does the Senator desire the amendment inserted?

Mr. OWEN. On page 51, after line 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two paragraphs went out there on a point of order, so that the amendment will come in on page 49, after line 17.

Mr. OWEN. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to offer a slight amendment that I ought to have spoken to the chairman about, but I have not. I have been so busy that I have overlooked it. This is a matter that I think probably has been called to the attention of the committee by this Mr. Bishop who is here representing the Indians of the Northwest, especially those of northwest Washington.

There are a great many old and indigent Indians in Washington who have to be cared for by their relatives, and also many of them by the county, and I am going to propose an amendment which I know is subject to a point of order. I do not think it is estimated for, but I hope the chairman will allow it to go in, so that it may be considered in conference, because I understand the department is favorable to the proposition that I am going to suggest.

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask the Senator kindly to present it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is on page 6, line 9, where I propose to increase the $375,000 to $385,000, and insert:

Of which $10,000 shall be used for the care and support of old and indigent Indians in western Washington.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$375,000" and insert:

$385,000, of which $10,000 shall be used for the care and support of old and indigent Indians in western Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Will not that require some other change in the phraseology?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think not.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Mr. President, there are a few other amendments—one or two.

I call attention to page 61; and I wish to say, first, that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] had some amendments, and I do not recall that he handed to the chairman copies of the amendments. If he did, I have, unfortunately, in the general confusion, misplaced the amendments; but I know that on page 61, line 5, he desires to have the numerals "$8,000" changed to "$10,000." I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 5, strike out "$8,000" and insert "$10,000" and change the total accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, Mr. President, I offer, on behalf of the Senator from South Dakota, the matter which I send to the desk, which has already passed the Senate, to be added to the bill, and ask that it be inserted at the appropriate place at the end of the South Dakota items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authorities of any religious organization engaged in mission or school work on any Indian reservation for such lands thereon as have been heretofore set apart to and are now being used and occupied by such organization for mission or school purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have one other amendment, which has been sent to me from the Department of the Interior since the bill was reported. I ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 3, page 6, after the word "six," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the provisions of Article IX of the agreement with the Nez Perce Indians of Idaho, dated May 1, 1893, and ratified and confirmed by the act of Congress approved August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 286–330), prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to those Indians or its introduction upon their lands, are hereby extended for the period of 10 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the justification of the amendment be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUSTIFICATION.

Said Article IX of the agreement with the Nez Perces is as follows: "It is further agreed that the lands by this agreement ceded, those retained, and those allotted to the said Nez Perce Indians shall be subject, for a period of 25 years, to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country, and that the Nez Perce Indian allottees, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, shall, for a like period, be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of intoxicants to Indians."

As the 25-year protection would expire on August 15 of this year (1919), it is desired that the proposed item of legislation be enacted in order that said Indians and lands be protected for a further period of 10 years. This legislation should be enacted without regard to what is done in the matter of general prohibition in order that there may be no possible chance of there being a period following August 15, 1919, when said Indians and their lands are not protected by the provisions contained in said section 9.

DENVER, COLO., February 24, 1919.

INDIAN OFFICE, Washington:

Nes Perce agreement extending liquor provisions to former Nes Perce Reservation included ceded lands expires August 15 next. If possible urge that you have proviso inserted in present Indian appropriation bill extending prohibition provisions 10 years from that date. This is very important in order to protect Nes Perce Indians. Superintendent Breid here to-day concurs in urging immediate action on this matter.

LARSON.

Mr. ASHURST. That completes, as far as the chairman is concerned, the amendments presented originally from the floor.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I want to call attention to an amendment which I am requested to present to the Senate, providing for payment to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, the sum of $7,000, being in full settlement of the claim of the said Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford against the said Creek Nation for legal services rendered the said Creek Nation employed by authority of an act of the national council of the Creek Nation, approved January 7, 1898, the said sum of $7,000 having been appropriated in payment of said services by an act of the national council of the Creek Nation, approved October 18, 1900.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, at the time these services were rendered the Creeks were making their negotiations with the United States with regard to allotting their country, and these attorneys represented them and advised with them while they were negotiating, on the other hand, with representatives of the Interior Department.

They appropriated the money for the payment of this bill by an act which I will submit for the RECORD, and all the papers bearing upon it, together with the reports of Mr. John Wright, who passed upon it on the 17th of October, 1900; but at that time the acts had to be approved within 30 days by the President of the United States under an act of Congress. The matter came up to the President on the last day of the 30 days, with a recommendation by the Secretary of the Interior, on a technical ground, against the payment, so that they have never been paid for it.

The Creeks wanted them paid, and the Government officers recognized that they had rendered the service; and the matter has been favorably reported in the House of Representatives, to accompany H. R. 906. I ask to have the report of the House committee put into the RECORD. I do not know whether or not the chairman had occasion to examine this report.

Mr. ASHURST. I know in a general way about the claim. It is against the Creek Indians?

Mr. OWEN. It is against the Creek Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. The Indians have no objection—that is my information—and I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 906) making an appropriation from the tribal funds of the Creek Nation to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, in payment of legal services rendered by them to the Creek Nation of Indians, having carefully considered the same, reports the bill back without amendment and recommends that the bill do pass.

Your committee find—

That Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford in 1898 were a firm of eminent lawyers in the Indian Territory, now Oklahoma; that the Creek Nation was one of the Five Civilized Tribes; that by an act of the constituted authorities of the Creek Nation through its council, approved by the principal chief, of date January 7, 1898, the Creek Nation authorized the employment of said firm to represent the Creek Nation in all matters before the various courts and the departments; and that the said firm rendered services satisfactory to the Creek Nation in the making and approval of the early treaties, represented the nation in suits before the various courts, and in all things advised the Creek authorities in compliance with the terms of their contract.

That the Creek Council by an act approved by the principal chief on October 22, 1900, appropriated the sum of $7,000 in payment of said services rendered; that when said act of the Creek Council approved January 7, 1898, was passed it was not necessary to have same approved by the President of the United States; that before the act of October 22, 1900, making the appropriation to compensate said attorneys for their services was passed by the Creek Council, Congress, by the act of June 28, 1898, made the approval of all acts of the Creek Council by the President of the United States necessary before said acts were effective; and that this act was recommended for disapproval by the Secretary of the Interior purely upon technical grounds.

Inasmuch as the Creek National Council had the authority by the act of January 7, 1898, to employ said firm, and inasmuch as there appears to be no dispute but that the services were rendered in accordance with the contract satisfactory to the Creek authorities, and inasmuch as the Creek National Council after investigation appropriated by the act of October 22, 1900, $7,000 in payment of said services, we recommend that the bill do pass.

Attention is invited to the last paragraph of a letter dated November 16, 1900, of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs transmitting said act of the Creek Council appropriating the aforesaid money, which is as follows:

"It may be proper, however, to add that the said beneficiaries have rendered services to the Creek Nation and the Creek people appear to be anxious to pay for such services, and that, therefore, the act should, if no objection thereto appears, receive the approval of the President."

The following letter of the Secretary of the Interior gives a history of the subject matter of the bill and shows the present attitude of the Interior Department:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 8, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: In response to your request of February 17, 1916, for a report on H. R. 10872 for the information of your committee, which is entitled "A bill making an appropriation to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, in payment of legal services rendered by them to the Creek Nation," introduced in the House of Representatives on February 4, 1916, by Mr. HASTINGS, of Oklahoma, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of an act of the Creek National Council adopted by the house of warriors on October 17, 1900, concurred in by the house of kings on October 18, 1900, and approved by P. Porter, principal chief of the Creek Nation, on October 18, 1900, which had heretofore been submitted to the President and was disapproved on November 17, 1900, by the then President William McKinley.

It appears from the records of the Indian Office that said claim is based upon alleged services rendered by Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford at the special instance of the then Creek chief, Isparhecher, the incumbent prior to P. Porter, his successor as principal chief of the Creek Nation, and said services are alleged to have been rendered to protect the rights of the Creek people.

All the information contained in the records of the Indian Office bearing on the merits of the claim are to be found in letters, copies of which are transmitted herewith for the information of your committee.

(a) Letter of Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, attorneys at law, South McAlester, Ind. T., dated November 1, 1900.

(b) Letter of P. Porter, principal chief of the Creek Nation, Muskogee, Ind. T., dated November 7, 1900, addressed to the United States Indian inspector.

(c) Letter of J. George Wright, United States Indian inspector for the Indian Territory, dated November 15, 1900.

(d) Letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated November 16, 1900, to the Secretary of the Interior.

(e) Letter of the Secretary of the Interior, dated November 17, 1900, submitting the contract to the President for his disapproval because it was not executed or approved as required by section 2103, Revised Statutes.

(f) Letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, dated November 19, 1900, returning to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for proper disposition the act of the Creek National Council proposing to appropriate $7,000 for the payment of the services of said attorneys, which was disapproved by the President on November 17, 1900.

In view of the record of disapproval by the President on November 17, 1900, of the claim as then presented by said attorneys, and as 15 years have elapsed since the disapproval without any further action being taken by said attorneys to renew the claims, which seem to be without merit, I recommend that no further action be had on H. R. 10872.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SOUTH MCALESTER, IND. T., November 1, 1900.

Hon. J. GEORGE WRIGHT,
United States Indian Inspector, Muskogee, Ind. T.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of October 31, asking us to submit to you a statement of the legal services rendered by us to the Creek Nation, beginning on or about the 7th day of January, 1898, is at hand. In reply, we beg leave to state that from January, 1898, we represented the Creek Nation of Indians in all matters pertaining to the powers of their tribal government. We have been before the United States Court for the Northern District of the Indian Territory at Muskogee in many cases touching the law of interior pastures. Among the cases involving the construction of this law were Baldridge Brothers v. Creek Nation, W. F. Crabtree v. Creek Nation, D. A. Lee v. Creek Nation, and others.

We appeared for and represented the Creek Nation in many cases touching their schools and adjusted many conflicts between their school officers and other authorities of the Creek Nation. We represented the Creek Nation and appeared in court in many cases touching the question as to whether or not the passage of the Curtis bill had the effect of discharging all persons convicted by the Creek tribunals, the Curtis bill having no saving clause with reference to these pending suits. Some of these cases we were compelled to follow to the United States Court of Appeals for the Indian Territory. We represented the Creek Nation in negotiating a treaty with the Dawes Commission. We encouraged in every way the making of this treaty, and one member of our firm was present nearly every time the treaty was under consideration. The time finally came for the approval of the treaty, and a member of this firm was present, and the delegates from the Creek Nation and members of the Dawes Commission, and every provision of the treaty was gone over one by one, and the approval of the Indians was secured. We feel that we were largely instrumental in bringing these people to a point where they would treat at all with the United States Government, the former chief, Isparhecher, being especially stubborn in regard to these matters.

During the period of these services we were compelled to visit the town of Okmulgee during several sessions of the council and visited the different courts trying and hearing the issues above mentioned; this required much time and the expenditure of much money. All of these services were rendered by us at the special instance and request of the Creek chief, Isparhecher, and were necessary to be performed in order to protect the rights of the Creek people.

The Creek treaty negotiated between the Creek people and the Dawes Commission, to which we referred above, did not finally become effective, although adopted by the Creek people; but, as is well known, it was largely the model and basis for the subsequent treaty actually made and now pending before Congress.

As stated above, the Creek full bloods were much averse to treating with the Government at all, and we believe that it will be conceded on all hands that the services rendered by us in bringing these full bloods to an appreciation of their position and fostering a friendly spirit between them and the United States Government led up to and was the prime cause of the treaty finally being made. Since the negotiation of the treaty above referred to opposition in reaching an agreement with the United States Government on the part of the full bloods has well-nigh passed away, only a few still holding out.

From January, 1898, until Chief Porter was elected we were constantly in the service of the Creek Nation. We were offered many cases against the nation which would have been lucrative to us, but we could not, of course, accept any employment of this nature, being disqualified by virtue of our employment by the Creek chief.

We have not been paid for our services, and you are doubtless familiar with the facts touching our surrender to the Government, through you, of warrants held by us. We may add that this appropriation was passed at Okmulgee through the Creek Council by practically a unanimous vote, and we are quite sure that the council, together with the present chief, were not only willing but anxious that we be paid, this appropriation being in full settlement of all claims held by us against the Creek Nation for legal services.

If you require us to make any further statement, please let us know without delay, as we are anxious to conform to the requirements of the department in this regard.

Very truly, yours,

STUART, LEWIS, GORDON & RUTHERFORD.

MUSKOGEE, IND. T., November 7, 1900.

Hon. J. GEORGE WRIGHT,
United States Indian Inspector, Muskogee, Ind. T.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 31st ultimo asking information about the appropriation made by the National Council of the Creek Nation, just adjourned, in favor of Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, to pay them for services as attorneys for the Creek Nation, I have to state that their claim for services was presented to the executive office with the request that it be transmitted to the council for consideration; and inasmuch as it had prior to that time been presented to the council by my predecessor, Chief Isparhecher, and as it was a matter that arose during his administration, I referred the council to him and to Roley McIntosh and David Anderson, the latter two gentlemen being at that time delegates of the Creek Nation, for information respecting the matter, and the council passed the act after due investigation (as I presume) by a committee appointed by the council for the purpose, and the act was signed by me as an act of the national council.

In submitting the matter to the council I requested them to give it consideration, and should they find that if in honor they were bound for the payment of it they should make the necessary appropriation, as claims of that character grow with age.

Should the department approve of this course of the Creek Council, such approval will be satisfactory to me.

Very respectfully,

P. PORTER,
Principal Chief Creek Nation.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 15, 1900.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith an act of the Creek Council, approved by the principal chief on October 22, 1900, which appropriates the sum of $7,000 in favor of Messrs. Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, attorneys at law, employed by authority of an act of the National Council of the Muskogee Nation, approved by the principal chief January 7, 1898, said sum to be in full settlement of all claims against the Muskogee Nation under any contract made under said act, and provides that the same shall be paid out in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the disbursement of Creek funds.

Attached to this act is a certificate from the clerk of the house of kings (senate), showing that the vote in favor of this act by said body was 21 to 7, and that in the house of warriors (representatives) the same passed by a vote of 72 to 1.

In connection with this act I have the honor to report that the act of the Creek Council, approved by the principal chief January 7, 1898, appropriated $20,000 for the employment of attorneys to represent the Creek Nation and authorized the principal chief to enter into a contract for such a purpose, and a contract, dated March 3, 1898, was entered into with Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford by the then principal chief of the Creek Nation whereby they were to represent the Creek Nation in all matters pertaining to their interest and affecting their government before the Congress of the United States and the departments at Washington, and especially to represent said nation in all habeas corpus matters then pending before the court of Indian Territory, in consideration for which they were to be paid $20,000.

In partial payment thereof this firm was paid in Creek warrants $8,000, but the act of the council appropriating such money not having been submitted to the President for approval, as required by law, and as the contract with these parties had also not been submitted to the department as required by section 2103 of the Revised Statutes, they were advised, under date of June 29, 1899, by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, that such contract came within the provisions of section 2103 of the Revised Statutes and was, therefore, considered null and void because not executed and approved as required by that section, and they were furnished a copy of an opinion, dated June 27, 1899, rendered by the Assistant Attorney General and approved by the honorable Secretary, to that effect.

Said attorneys were, therefore, requested to deliver to me, within 10 days from the receipt of my communication, for the use and benefit of the Creek Nation, all the money, warrants, evidences of indebtedness, and other things of value received by them, directly or indirectly, from the Creek Nation under said contract.

In compliance therewith, as per my report dated July 27, 1899, this firm returned to me $5,988.50, and subsequently, as per my communication of February 23, 1899, I forwarded a communication from them, asking that they be allowed 30 days' additional time to submit further facts with reference to the balance, $2,000, which they had received. I was advised by the department, under date of October 16, 1899, that their request to retain the $2,000 for services rendered could not be considered, and that they must comply with the demand to return all moneys received by them under said contract.

Subsequently I was informed personally by the honorable Secretary that I might allow them a reasonable length of time to return this $2,000, in view of the fact that they had promptly returned $5,988.50, and in further view of their expressions to me that they were not able to deliver the balance at that time.

The total amount paid them up to that time was $8,000, in warrants of $1,000 each. One of these warrants, however, was never negotiated by them. Therefore, there is only $1,000 due from them under the previous order of the department above referred to.

The $7,000 now appropriated is, therefore, to refund them for this amount, including the amount returned by them.

I would respectfully refer to page 88 of the pamphlet laws of the Creek Nation, 1893 to 1899, inclusive, for information concerning the act of January 7, 1898, above referred to.

In connection with the act now submitted, I addressed a communication to the principal chief on the subject, asking for further information in reference thereto, and I inclose herewith his reply, in which he states that the claim of these parties for services was presented to his office with a request that it be transmitted to the council for consideration, and as it had, prior to that time, been presented to the council by his predecessor, and was a matter that arose during his administration, he referred it to the council, and the council passed it, after due investigation by a committee appointed for that purpose.

He further states that in submitting the matter to the council he requested them to give it consideration, and should they find that if in honor they were bound for the payment of it to make the necessary appropriations, as claims of that character grew with age. He also states that if the council's course is approved by the department such approval will be satisfactory to him.

I also requested Messrs. Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford to submit a statement showing the legal services rendered by them to the Creek Nation under their contract, and I inclose herewith their reply, wherein they state that from January, 1898, they represented the Creek Nation in all matters pertaining to their tribal government; that they have been before the United States Court for the Northern District of the Indian Territory in many cases touching the law of interior pastures, and also in other cases cited; and that they also acted as attorneys at the time agreements were being negotiated with the Dawes Commission, and also visited different courts trying and hearing various cases, all of which required much time and the expenditure of much money. They also state that they rendered material benefit to the Creek Nation, as also to the United States Government, in negotiating an agreement, and they state that they have not been paid for their services, the warrants having been returned to me as above set forth.

I am not sufficiently familiar with the services rendered by these attorneys to make an intelligent recommendation as to the merits of this act, but inasmuch as they rendered services to the Creek Nation at various times, and after having done so the matter has now been investigated and passed upon unanimously by the Creek Council, who appear to consider that they are in honor bound to pay this claim, and as the same will undoubtedly be prosecuted by these claimants until finally adjudicated, I am inclined to recommend that the same receive favorable consideration. However, the act is respectfully submitted herewith for such consideration as the department deems proper in the premises.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. GEO. WRIGHT,
United States Indian Inspector for the Indian Territory.

(Through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.)

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, November 16, 1900.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith an act of the Creek or Muskogee National Council, approved by the principal chief October 18, 1900, providing for an appropriation for and payment to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, attorneys at law, of the sum of $7,000 for services heretofore rendered by them for the Creek Nation.

This act was received in this office on November 16, 1900, together with the report of the inspector of the Indian Territory, giving a full history of the transaction, and inclosing communications received by him from the principal chief of the nation, and also from the beneficiaries under the act.

In view of the fact that this act was approved by the principal chief on October 18, 1900, and because it has been held by the department that the President must approve it within 30 days after the date of its approval by the principal chief, if at all, the office transmits it without further comment than that contained in the inspector's recommendation.

It may be proper, however, to add that the said beneficiaries have rendered services to the Creek Nation, and the Creek people appear to be anxious to pay for such services, and that, therefore, the act should, if no objection thereto appears, receive the approval of the President.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 17, 1900.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: Herewith I transmit an act of the Creek or Muskogee National Council, approved by the principal chief October 18, 1900, appropriating the sum of $7,000 out of the general funds of the nation to pay Messrs. Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, attorneys, for services heretofore rendered by them to the Creek Nation.

For the reason that these services were rendered under a contract coming within the provisions of section 2103 of the Revised Statutes, but which was not executed or approved as required by that section, I respectfully recommend that the act be disapproved.

This act has only come to my office to-day, and I find upon an examination of the statute (30 Stat., 84) that if you concur in my recommendation that the act be disapproved it will be necessary for the disapproval to be made to-day, this being the thirtieth day after the passage of the act.

Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Be it enacted by the National Council of the Muskogee Nation, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated the sum of $7,000, out of the general funds of the Muskogee Nation not otherwise appropriated, in favor of Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, attorneys at law, employed by authority of an act of the National Council of the Muskogee Nation approved January 7, 1898; said sum, when paid, shall be full settlement of all claims against the Muskogee Nation under any contract which has been made under said act of the national council approved January 7, 1898.

Said sum to be paid in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the disbursement of Creek funds.

Adopted October 17, 1900.

AMOS MCINTOSH,
Speaker, House of Warriors.
A. P. MCKELLOP,
Clerk.

Concurred in October 18, 1900.

T. W. PERRYMAN,
President, House of Kings.
LEE MCNEVINS,
Clerk.

Approved, October 18, 1900.

P. PORTER,
Principal Chief.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 19, 1900.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

SIR: The act of the Creek Nation appropriating $7,000 in favor of Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, attorneys at law, was disapproved by the President November 17, 1900, and it is transmitted herewith for proper disposition. The United States Indian inspector for the Indian Territory has been advised of the action taken, in a letter herewith inclosed for your information, to be forwarded.

Respectfully,

THOS. RYAN, Acting Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, Mr. President, I just want to make a short statement.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is going to propose an amendment in which I confess I am deeply interested—not personally at all, but interested as a Senator. It has passed the Senate, and I take considerable pride in the fact that I was in a manner its author. It passed the House once and passed the Senate, but the same bill never passed both Houses. It is the bill, Mr. President, which provides for metalliferous mining on Indian reservations. It is not subject to a point of order, because it has been reported favorably from a standing committee of the Sixty-fifth Congress. It lacked only 13 votes of receiving a two-thirds vote in the House; and although the hour is late and the Senators are not numerous in attendance, I should like to see it offered. It has been the subject of more thought and more close investigation than any other one particular bill that I know of since I have been here.

It provides that the Secretary of the Interior and the President shall not have any power to create reservations; that the Congress alone shall create the reservations; and I hope it will be put on the bill and allowed to go to conference. It has passed the Senate practically unanimously, and is not subject to a point of order. One or two Senators objected perfunctorily. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is very much interested in it and asked me to present it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, that bill embodies some provisions which I have been interested in for years. In fact, I became especially interested in it when I was connected with the Department of the Interior. It provides for the development of the metalliferous ores on Indian reservations. It will enable the Indians themselves to get employment, and it provides for royalties to be paid to the Indians; and the bill has been thoroughly worked out.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this applies only to Indian reservations?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWANSON. Does it limit the power of the President outside of Indian reservations?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, no; not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, a new section, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States or to any association of such persons or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation within the States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, or Wyoming, heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals, which leases shall be irrevocable, except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms.

That after the passage and approval of this act, unallotted lands, or such portion thereof as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine, within Indian reservations heretofore withheld from disposition under the mining laws may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be subject to exploration for the discovery of deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals by citizens of the United States, and after such declaration mining claims may be located by such citizens in the same manner as mining claims are located under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the locators of all such mining claims, or their heirs, successors, or assigns, shall have a preference right to apply to the Secretary of the Interior for a lease, under the terms and conditions of this act, within one year after the date of the location of any mining claim, and any such locator who shall fail to apply for a lease within one year from the date of location shall forfeit all rights to such mining claim: Provided further, That duplicate copies of the location notice shall be filed within 60 days with the superintendent in charge of the reservation on which the mining claim is located, and that application for a lease under this act may be filed with such superintendent for transmission through official channels to the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That lands containing springs, water holes, or other bodies of water needed or used by the Indians for watering live stock, irrigation, or water-power purposes shall not be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to entry under this act.

That leases under this act shall be for a period of 30 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease.

That in addition to areas of mineral land to be included in leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to the lessee the right to use, during the life of the lease, a tract of unoccupied land, not exceeding 80 acres in area, for camp sites, milling, smelting, and refining works, and for other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the lease.

That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is hereby authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

That any successor in interest or assignee of any lease granted under this act, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original lessee hereunder.

That any lease granted under this act may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this act or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

That for the privilege of mining or extracting the mineral deposits in the ground covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States, for the benefit of the Indians, a royalty which shall not be less than 5 per cent of the net value of the output of the minerals at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the minerals from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease, at the rate of 25 cents per acre for the first calendar year thereafter; 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively; and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year.

That in addition to the payment of the royalties and rentals as herein provided the lessee shall expend annually not less than $100 in development work for each mining claim located or leased in the same manner as an annual expenditure for labor or improvements is required to be made under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the lessee shall also agree to pay all damages occasioned by reason of his mining operations to the land or allotment of any Indian or to the crops or improvements thereon: And provided further, That no timber shall be cut upon the reservation by the lessee except after first obtaining a permit from the superintendent of the reservation and upon payment of the fair value thereof.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of mining, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require; and any person making any false statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury.

That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservation where the leased land is located, which moneys shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their benefit, unless otherwise provided by treaty or agreement ratified by Congress: Provided, That such moneys shall be subject to the laws authorizing the pro rata distribution of Indian tribal funds.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary and proper for the protection of the interests of the Indians and for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the right of the State or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee.

That mining locations, under the terms of this act, may be made on unallotted lands within Indian reservations by Indians who have heretofore or may hereafter be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage their own affairs; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to lease such lands to such Indians in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit other Indians to make locations and obtain leases under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in regard to the working, developing, disposition, and selling of the products and the disposition of the proceeds thereof of any such mine by such Indians.

That hereafter no public lands of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise, for or as an Indian reservation except by act of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there is one other matter I should like to call the attention of the chairman to. A year ago, on the 23d of March, 1918, there was an amendment put on the Indian appropriation bill to pay a balance of interest due to the Cherokee Nation. I should like to offer this amendment and to submit for the RECORD the report which was made upon it a year ago. It passed the Senate a year ago.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read, and let the report go in the RECORD.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have the report of the Secretary of the Interior bearing upon it go into the RECORD. It is not very long. The amendment provides for the payment of a balance of interest due.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will go into the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill S. 988, "A bill providing for the payment of certain interest on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation," having carefully considered the same, recommends that with an amendment the bill be passed. The bill as amended reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the general deficiency appropriation act of June 30, 1906 (34th Stat. L., p. 664), so far as the said act provides for the payment of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation, with interest (40 C. Cls. Repts., p. 252), be, and the same hereby is, so amended as to allow additional interest to be paid upon items 1 and 4 of said judgment, and upon the funds arising from said items 1 and 4, respectively, as follows, to wit: On the amount of the fund which arose from item 1 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the amount of the fund which arose from item 4 of said judgment, as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee national fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the original principal sum of item 4 of said judgment, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1903, and on the amount of the interest thus accruing interest at 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1905, to May 14, 1906; and on the aggregate of the sums of the interest for the last two periods herein above mentioned, interest at 5 per cent from July 2, 1906, to the date of the passage of this act; and the sum of $27,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the interest above allowed, is hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid to the Cherokee Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amount arising from item 4 of said judgment, with interest thereon as herein above provided for, to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief to receive the same, said payment to be made immediately upon the approval of this act."

The Secretary of the Interior, in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, dated July 5, 1917, recommends that an appropriation be made to pay the interets upon the funds arising from items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, be made as provided in said bill.

The judgment and decree of the court covering said items 1 and 4 of said judgment are as follows:

Item 1. The sum of $2,125, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent from February 27, 1819, to date of payment.

* * * * * * *

Item 4. The sum of $20,406.25, with interest thereon from July 1, 1903, to date of payment.

"The proceeds of said several items, however, to be paid and distributed as follows:

"The sum of $2,125, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent from February 27, 1819, to date of payment, less 5 per cent thereof contracted by the Cherokee Nation to be paid as counsel fees, shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the Cherokee Nation, and shall be credited on the proper books of account to the principal of the 'Cherokee school fund' now in the possession of the United States and held by them as trustees.

"The sum of $20,406.25, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to date of payment, less 5 per cent thereof contracted by the Cherokee Nation to be paid as counsel fees, shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior and credited on the proper books of account to the principal of the 'Cherokee national fund,' now in the possession of the United States and held by them as trustees."

The Cherokee school fund and the Cherokee national fund were each 5 per cent interest-bearing trust funds under the general law. The funds arising from these two items of judgment were duly paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, but were not credited to the principals of the said interest-bearing trust funds until May 26, 1910. No matter what may be the final outcome of the claim of the Cherokee Nation to interest on all of these judgment funds under the agreement of 1891, there is no question but that the two funds arising from items 1 and 4 are entitled to interest from the day they were paid into the hands of the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the Cherokee Nation, to wit, from July 2, 1906, until May 26, 1910, when they were credited to said interest-bearing trust funds.

Also, it appears from the Secretary's letter that no interest was allowed on the original principal sum of item 4 of said judgment between July 1, 1893, and July 1, 1903; that failure to allow such interest was due to a clerical error in the wording of the court's decree. Your committee finds that to be the fact and that the Cherokee Nation is clearly entitled to interest on said original principal sum for the period of time between July 1, 1893, and July 1, 1903, and to the additional interest as provided to be paid by this bill (H. R. 4699).

Following are copies of letters from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the merits of the bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, May 17, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: Reference is made herein to your informal inquiry as to the report on S. 988, a bill providing for the payment of certain interest on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation, and to the report on S. 10, a bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States. In compliance with your request there are transmitted herewith for your information copies of the reports of May 2, 1917, setting forth the views of the department relative to said bills. There is also inclosed copy of the report of the same date on S. 11, this last-mentioned bill being also one concerning certain claims of the Cherokee Nation.

Sincerely, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives.

MAY 2, 1917.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made herein to S. 988, entitled "A bill providing for the payment of certain interest on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation," and to your request of April 9, 1917, for my views thereon.

Said bill provides for the allowance and payment of certain interest claimed to be due the Cherokee Nation on the funds which arose out of items 1 and 4 of the judgment of May 18, 1905, of the Court of Claims, in favor of the Cherokee Nation in the case of said nation against the United States (40 Ct. Cls., 252–363). The bill further provides that the payment of the sum claimed to be due the Cherokee Nation as interest on said item 4 be made to Mr. Frank J. Boudinot, attorney at law, as compensation for services and expenses alleged to have been heretofore performed and incurred by him on behalf of the Cherokee people.

The Court of Claims by its judgment and decree of May 18, 1905, awarded the Cherokee Nation the following sums:

Item 1. The sum of $2,125, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent from February 27, 1819, to date of payment.

Item 2. The sum of $1,111,284.70, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent from June 12, 1838, to date of payment.

Item 3. The sum of $432.28, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent from January 1, 1874, to date of payment.

Item 4. The sum of $20,406.25, with interest thereon from July 1, 1903, to date of payment.

The judgment and decree also made provision as to the payment and distribution of the proceeds of said items of award. Said decision of the Court of Claims was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States on April 30, 1906 (202 U. S., 101), with a modification, however, as to the distribution of the fund arising out of item 2 of the award. The act of Congress of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 634–664), making appropriation for the payment of the above-mentioned judgment, provided for the payment of the principal sum of $1,134,248.23 as set forth in said judgment, together with such additional sum as might be necessary to pay interest "as authorized by law." The act of Congress of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 907–938), provided that the interest on item 2 of the judgment should be carried "up to such time as the roll of the individual beneficiaries entitled to share in said judgment shall be finally approved by the Court of Claims," and an appropriation was made for said additional interest. It appears that the roll of individual beneficiaries was finally approved by the Court of Claims on March 15, 1910. It appears from the books of the Indian Office that the sum of $4,972,902.04 appropriated by the deficiency act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 664), was on July 2, 1906, under Treasury Warrant No. 11, credited to the Cherokee Nation under the title, "Judgment, Court of Claims, Cherokee Nation," said sum being the aggregate of the following items of the judgment:

Item.	Principal.	Interest.
1	$2,125.00	$9,395.46
2	1,111,284.70	3,825,751.46
3	432.28	708.21
4	20,406.25	2,888.68
Total	1,134,248.23	3,838,743.81

It further appears from the books of the Indian Office that there was credited to the Cherokee Nation on April 19, 1910, under Treasury warrant No. 58, the sum of $161,324.92, being additional interest on item 2 of the judgment as provided for by the deficiency act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 938). The Comptroller of the Treasury in an opinion dated May 25, 1916, stated that while he was not advised as to the payments in the case, he presumed that in accordance with the decisions of his office the interest on the various items in the court's decree was computed as follows:

Item 1. At 5 per cent on original principal from February 27, 1819, to December 29, 1905, and at 4 per cent on original principal plus amount of interest to December 29, 1905, from December 30, 1905, to May 14, 1906.

Item 2. At 5 per cent on original principal from June 12, 1838, to March 15, 1910.

Item 3. At 5 per cent on original principal from January 1, 1874, to December 29, 1905, and at 4 per cent on original principal plus the amount of interest to December 29, 1905, from December 30, 1905, to May 14, 1906.

Item 4. At 5 per cent on original principal from July 1, 1903, to December 29, 1905, and at 4 per cent on original principal plus amount of interest to December 14, 1906.

The comptroller further states that under existing law there was no authority for computation of interest on the various items of the above-mentioned judgment on any other basis than as above indicated. Copies of the comptroller's decisions of July 11, 1906, January 29, 1909, April 2, 1910, and May 25, 1916, relating to the question of interest on the several items of the above-mentioned judgment of the Court of Claims are inclosed for your information. The matter of the computation of interest on the several items of the above-mentioned judgment of May 18, 1905, of the Court of Claims has been the subject of some correspondence with persons interested in the Cherokee Nation. It has been contended by some that the interest was not computed in accordance with the orders of the court or of the terms of the agreement of December 19, 1891, of the United States with the Cherokee Nation, ratified by the act of Congress of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., 612–640).

In the decree of the Court of Claims it was provided that the proceeds of item 1, less 5 per cent thereof, contracted by the Cherokee Nation to be paid as counsel fees, should be paid to the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the Cherokee Nation, and be credited on the proper books of account to the principal of the "Cherokee school fund." It was also provided in said decree that the proceeds of item 4, less 5 per cent thereof, contracted by the Cherokee Nation to be paid as counsel fees, should be paid to the Secretary of the Interior and credited on the proper books of account to the principal of the "Cherokee national fund." Said Cherokee school fund and Cherokee national fund were each, under the provisions of the act of April 1, 1880 (21 Stat. L., 76), 5 per cent interest-bearing trust funds. The proceeds of items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims were included in the amount placed to the credit of the Cherokee Nation on July 2, 1906, under the title "Judgment, Court of Claims, Cherokee Nation," which account, as carried on the books of the Indian Office, did not bear interest. It appears, however, that by certificate of the Auditor for the Interior Department, No. 17264, dated May 26, 1910, the sum of $33,769.99, being on account of certain amounts arising under items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims, was transferred from the above-mentioned noninterest-bearing account, and the following credits were correspondingly made, bearing interest at 5 per cent per annum:

Cherokee school fund, $11,174.53; Cherokee national fund, $22,595.46.

If said sums had been placed to the credit of these last-mentioned funds on July 2, 1906, when received, they would have borne interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from that date as a part of the Cherokee trust funds. The failure, therefore, of the Government to cause the transfer to be made to said trust funds, as provided in the decree of the Court of Claims, until May 26, 1910, caused a loss to the Cherokee Nation of the interest on said amounts from July 2, 1906, to May 26, 1910. It has also been claimed, in reference to item 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims, that the interest provided for in said item should have been from July 1, 1893, instead of from July 1, 1903, and that the provision in the decree as to the interest was in conflict with the statement contained in the opinion of the court as to such interest, and that the date named in the decree from which the interest should run was a clerical error. The Comptroller of the Treasury, in his opinion of May 25, 1916, states that the failure to allow interest on item 4 from 1893 instead of from 1903 was no doubt due to a clerical error in the wording of the court's decree, and that there appeared to be merit in certain proposed legislation looking to the correction of such error.

In view of the comptroller's opinion of May 25, 1916, that the failure to allow interest from 1893 to 1903 on item 4 of the decree of the Court of Claims was no doubt due to a clerical error in the wording of the court's decree. I see no objection to legislation looking to the correction of such error and providing for the payment to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of the amount of interest which the Cherokee Nation failed to receive through said error. Neither do I see any objection to legislation providing for the payment to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of the amount of interest which said nation failed to receive on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims through the failure of the Government to cause the transfer of the proceeds of said items to be made to the Cherokee interest-bearing trust funds before May 26, 1910.

In reference to the payment which S. 988 provides shall be made to Mr. Frank J. Boudinot, attorney at law, for services and expenses said to have been performed and incurred in behalf of the Cherokee people, I am not advised as to the services or expenses for which said compensation is contemplated. If said proposed payment is for the settlement of the claim of Mr. Boudinot for compensation for services and expenses in the matter of obtaining the exclusion from participation in the allotment of lands and distribution of funds of the Cherokee Nation of intermarried white persons described in the suit entitled "Cherokee intermarriage cases, Red Bird et al., citizens of the Cherokee Nation by blood, v. The United States" (40 Ct. Cls., 411; 203 U. S., 76), your attention is invited to the report of March 25, 1910, of the then Secretary of the Interior, and to the report of May 10, 1910, of the then Acting Secretary of the Interior, as set out in Senate Report No. 550, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and House Report No. 2077, Sixty-first Congress, third session. Copies of said reports are inclosed for your convenient reference thereto. In view of the facts set forth in said reports, I am of the opinion that the provision for the payment to Mr. Frank J. Boudinot, as set forth in S. 988, should be eliminated from said bill.

In view of the above concerning the question of interest claimed to be due the Cherokee Nation, I am of the opinion that S. 988 should be amended by the insertion of the word "additional" before the word "interest" in line 10, page 1, of said bill, and that said bill should be further amended by the omission of all the provisions therein following the colon on line 2, page 2, thereof and by the substitution of the following in lieu thereof:

"On the amount of the fund which arose from item 1 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the amount of the fund which arose from item 4 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee national fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the original principal sum of item 4 of said judgment, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1903; and on the amount of interest thus accruing interest at 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1905, to May 14, 1906; and on the aggregate of the sums of the interest for the last two periods hereinabove mentioned, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to the date of the passage of this act; and the sum of $27,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the interest above allowed, is hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid to the Cherokee Nation."

I recommend the enactment of S. 988 if the same be amended as above suggested.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 2, 1917.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made herein to S. 11, entitled "A bill to amend the general deficiency appropriation act of June 30, 1906, and the act of Congress of March 4, 1909, regarding payment of judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of Cherokee Nation," and to your request of April 10, 1917, for my views thereon.

Said bill provides for the allowance and payment of certain interest claimed to be due the Cherokee Nation on the funds which arose out of items 1 and 4 of the judgment of May 18, 1905, of the Court of Claims in favor of the Cherokee Nation in the case of said nation against the United States (40 Ct. Cls., 252–363). The bill further provides that the payment of the sum claimed to be due the Cherokee Nation as interest on said item 4 be made to Mr. Frank J. Boudinot, attorney at law, as compensation for services and expenses alleged to have been heretofore performed and incurred by him on behalf of the Cherokee people.

This matter is the subject of my report of even date on S. 988. A copy of my letter of even date to you concerning said S. 988 and containing my views as to legislation providing for the payment of additional interest on said items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation, is inclosed for your convenient reference thereto.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

MAY 2, 1917.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made herein to S. No. 10, entitled "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States," and to your request of April 10, 1917, for my views thereon.

Said bill provides jurisdiction for the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine the claim of the Cherokee Nation against the United States for interest, in addition to all other interests heretofore allowed and paid, alleged to be owing from the United States to the Cherokee Nation on funds arising from the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905 (40 Court of Claims Reports, p. 252), in favor of the Cherokee Nation.

The claims of the Cherokee Nation to certain additional interest on items 1 and 4 on the above-mentioned judgment of the Court of Claims are the subject of S. 11 and S. 988, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and of my letters of even date to you concerning said bills. A copy of my letter of even date to you concerning S. 988 and setting out the facts relating to the above-mentioned judgment of the Court of Claims and the allowance and payment of interest thereon is inclosed for your convenient reference thereto.

In view of the facts disclosed, I saw no reason why an appropriation should not be made for the payment of certain additional interest on items 1 and 4 of the above-mentioned judgment in favor of the Cherokee Nation, and therefore recommended the enactment of S. 988 provided it was amended as suggested in my letter. S. 10 includes, however, the claim of the Cherokee Nation for additional interest on the other items of the above-mentioned judgment of the Court of Claims.

It has been claimed on behalf of the Cherokee Nation that the accounting officers of the Treasury should have computed the interest on item 2 of the decree of the Court of Claims up to December 29, 1905, the date of filing of the transcript of the judgment of the Court of Claims with the Secretary of the Treasury and added said interest for a new principal upon which interest should have been computed from December 30, 1905, to March 15, 1910, and it is claimed that as a result of the alleged error in the method of computation there is still due the Cherokee Nation the sum of $478,801.94 as interest on said item 2. It has been further claimed that interest should be allowed on this last-mentioned sum from March 15, 1910, until paid.

In reference to item 3 of the decree of the Court of Claims it has been claimed that the amount thereof, representing a part of the proceeds of the sale of the Cherokee strip, should have been distributed among certain Cherokee interest-bearing trust funds in the Treasury, and that as no interest has been paid on the proceeds of said item 3 since July 2, 1906, the Cherokee Nation is entitled to interest thereon at 5 per cent to the present time.

The question of whether the Cherokee Indians are entitled to additional interest claimed by them to be due on said items 2 and 3 of the above-mentioned judgment of the Court of Claims is not one upon which I am prepared to express an opinion. I see no objection to legislation to provide for the adjudication by the Court of Claims of the question of whether the Cherokee Indians are entitled to any additional interest on said items 2 and 3. I suggest, however, that said S. No. 10 be amended by the elimination of the words "by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief" on lines 20 and 21 of page 2 of the bill, and by the substitution in lieu thereof of the following words, "under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law," and that said bill be further amended by the elimination of the provisions on page 3 of the bill following after the word "cause," on line 1 of said page 3, and by the substitution therefor of the following provision: "The attorney for the Cherokee Nation shall be paid such fee as the Court of Claims may find reasonable, provided that in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amount stipulated in the approved contract nor amount to more than 10 per cent of the sum, if any, to which the Cherokee Nation shall be found entitled. The amounts recovered for the Cherokee Nation, if any, shall be disbursed under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior to the parties entitled thereto in manner prescribed by the Court of Claims."

I see no objection to the enactment of S. 10 if the same be amended as above suggested.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 5, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. CARTER: Reference is made herein to H. R. 4699 entitled "A bill providing for the payment of certain interest on items one and four of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation," and to your request of May 28, 1917, for a report thereon for the information and use of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives. Said bill provides for the allowance and payment of certain interest claimed to be due the Cherokee Nation on the funds which arose out of items 1 and 4 of the judgment of May 18, 1905, of the Court of Claims in favor of the Cherokee Nation in the case of said nation against The United States (40 Court of Claims, 252–363).

The claim of the Cherokee Nation to additional interest on items 1 and 4 of the above-mentioned judgment was the subject of S. 988, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session. A copy of my letter of May 2, 1917, to Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate, in regard to said S. 988, and containing my views as to legislation providing for the payment of certain additional interest on said items 1 and 4 of the above-mentioned judgment, is transmitted herewith for your information. The principal facts relating to said judgment of the Court of Claims, and to the allowance and payment of interest thereon, are set forth in said communication.

H. R. 4699 contains, on page 3, lines 6 to 12, inclusive, the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amount arising from item 4 of said judgment, with interest thereon as herein above provided for, to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation, acting through its principal chief, to receive the same, said payment to be made immediately upon the approval of this act."

In reference to the matter of the collection and disbursement of tribal funds and as to the tribal government, your attention is invited to the provisions contained in sections 64, 66, and 67 of the agreement of the United States with the Cherokee Nation, contained in the act of Congress of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 716–727), and to the provisions of sections 17 and 28 of the act of Congress of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137, 143, 148).

The tribal government of the Cherokee Nation has been abolished, the services of the principal chief being retained only until the tribal affairs have been completely closed, there remaining a few matters still undisposed of. The provision of H. R. 4699 above quoted does not state the purpose of the payment to the tribal agent provided for therein. It is not shown whether the payment to the proposed tribal agent is to be for the purpose of settlement of claims against the Cherokee Nation, or for the purpose of distribution per capita to the members of the tribe.

In view of the above-mentioned provisions of existing law as to the collection and payment of Cherokee tribal funds, placing the supervision of said matters under the Secretary of the Interior, and of the status of Cherokee tribal affairs, I see no reason why provision should be made for the payment to a tribal agent of any additional interest which may be allowed the Cherokee Nation on the above-mentioned judgment of the Court of Claims. I believe that any such additional sum which may be allowed the Cherokee Nation as interest on the above-mentioned judgment should be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Cherokee Nation to be disposed of under existing law for the benefit of the Cherokee Tribe. I therefore recommend that the above-quoted provisions contained in lines 6 to 12, inclusive, on page 3 of H. R. 4699, be eliminated from said bill. In view of the facts set forth in my report of May 2, 1917, on S. 998, concerning the claim of the Cherokee Nation to additional interest on the above-mentioned judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, I recommend the enactment of H. R. 4699 provided said bill be amended as indicated above.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Hon. C. D. CARTER,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this payment is to be made entirely out of Indian trust funds, is it?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee our Father in heaven, for every laudable ambition, every high and holy aspiration, which has and is now leading us onward and upward to larger intellectual, moral, and spiritual attainments; and we most fervently pray that Thou wilt continue to lead us as individuals and as a people to right living, that the differences between men, classes, and conditions shall be rightly adjusted, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POINT OF NO QUORUM.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that point for a moment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his point?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withhold it temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withholds his point temporarily.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a memorial address on the late Col. Roosevelt, delivered before the joint session of the Iowa Legislature by Hon. N. E. Kendall, who was a Member of the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Congresses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered on the late Col. Roosevelt before the Iowa Legislature. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, how long an address is this?

Mr. RAMSEYER. It probably took 40 minutes to deliver it. Furthermore, under the circumstances under which it was delivered, it may be considered as an official tribute of the State of Iowa to Col. Roosevelt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I think every State may possibly be in the same position as Iowa. I do not believe in encumbering the RECORD. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

REPEAL OF LUXURY TAXES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report (No. 1152) from the Committee on Ways and Means accompanying House joint resolution 439, for the repeal of the luxury taxes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. GARNER. He only desires it to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred House joint resolution 439, to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House without amendment and recommend that the resolution do pass.

In presenting the conference report upon the revenue bill to the House the chairman stated that he would introduce a resolution to repeal section 904 of the bill after it became a law.

The purpose of section 904 was to encourage thrift and economy and to prevent extravagance as well as to provide revenue. It was understood that these consumption taxes were levied as war taxes only. This was a proper tax in time of war, but your committee believes that in time of peace it can not justify the placing of the burden (1) on the retailers of the country of keeping the necessary additional accounting system to collect the tax from the taxable sales in order to properly return the tax collected to the Government; or (2) such a heavy tax upon the consumer.

Your committee is unanimous in recommending the passage of this resolution.

Section 904 of the revenue act of 1918 reads as follows:

"SEC. 904. (a) That on and after May 1, 1919, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of so much of the amount paid for any of the following articles as is in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article, when such article is sold by or for a dealer or his estate on or after such date for consumption or use—

"(1) Carpets and rugs, including fiber, except imported and American rugs made principally of wool, on the amount in excess of $5 per square yard;

"(2) Picture frames, on the amount in excess of $10 each;

"(3) Trunks, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

"(4) Valises, traveling bags, suit cases, hatboxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

"(5) Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

"(6) Portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

"(7) Umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades, on the amount in excess of $4 each;

"(8) Fans, on the amount in excess of $1 each;

"(9) House or smoking coats or jackets, and bath or lounging robes, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

"(10) Men's waistcoats, sold separately from suits, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

"(11) Women's and misses' hats, bonnets, and hoods, on the amount in excess of $15 each;

"(12) Men's and boys' hats, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

"(13) Men's and boys' caps, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

"(14) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' boots, shoes, pumps, and slippers, not including shoes or appliances made to order for any person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle, on the amount in excess of $10 per pair;

"(15) Men's and boys' neckties and neckwear, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

"(16) Men's and boys' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $1 per pair;

"(17) Women's and misses' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $2 per pair;

"(18) Men's shirts, on the amount in excess of $3 each;

"(19) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' pajamas, nightgowns, and underwear, on the amount in excess of $5 each; and

"(20) Kimonos, petticoats, and waists, on the amount in excess of $15 each.

"(b) The tax imposed by this section shall not apply (1) to any article enumerated in paragraphs (2) to (8), both inclusive, of subdivision (a), if such article is made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory, or (2) to any article made of fur on the hide or pelt, or of which any such fur is the component material of chief value, or to (3) any article enumerated in subdivision (17) or (18) of section 900.

"(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of the sale and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 502."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On that, Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves all points of order on the House joint resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the resolution accompanying the report.

The SPEAKER. The report is ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BORLAND.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Sunday, March 2, between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock, to deliver memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of our deceased colleague, Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that there shall be a meeting of the House on Sunday, March 2, at 11 o'clock a. m., and that the time from 11 to 12 o'clock be set aside for the delivery of memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of the late WILLIAM P. BORLAND, a Representative from Missouri. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Had not the gentleman better make that from 10 o'clock to 11? Would it not be just as convenient?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I doubt if it would be as convenient.

Mr. GARNER. That difference of one hour on Sunday would mean a good deal.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the gentleman would have no objection to providing that it would not interfere with conference reports, so that there would be an hour for these exercises on that day at that time?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; we realize the condition, and we do not want to interfere, but our plans are already made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that on Sunday, the 2d of March, there be a meeting of the House at 11 o'clock a. m., and that the time from 11 to 12 be set aside for the delivery of memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of the late WILLIAM P. BORLAND. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House. Is there objection?

The motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill (H. R. 14516), disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FLOOD, Mr. LINTHICUM, and Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

The sum of $32,700,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman from Kentucky state how much of this fund has been expended?

Mr. SHERLEY. There were two appropriations made, one of $60,000,000 and one of $40,000,000, to carry out the housing program——

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. The point of order comes too late. There has been discussion upon the provision.

Mr. LONDON. I do not believe it comes too late. As soon as I caught the purpose of the remarks of the gentleman——

Mr. SHERLEY. That was just too late. As soon as discussion of a paragraph has begun the point of order is too late.

Mr. LONDON. I was on my feet, expecting to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the proposition was under discussion.

Mr. SHERLEY. There were two appropriations made, one of $60,000,000 and one of $40,000,000 to carry out the housing program in connection with the war needs of the Government. A statement was made by the officials of the bureau under the Department of Labor that they would wind up their work and have a balance of something over $30,000,000. We had a hearing, in which they presented their financial statement, and from that financial statement it was apparent that the amount here proposed to be repealed was not needed, and that the balance was amply sufficient to carry out all the projects that they proposed to carry out.

Mr. WALSH. There was $60,000,000 appropriated at first?

Mr. SHERLEY. Sixty million dollars first and forty million dollars afterwards.

Mr. WALSH. The $60,000,000 was all expended, and there is this amount remaining from the later appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. The two amounts were both appropriated in the same fiscal year and constitute one fund.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Legislative——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 37, after line 8, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"To enable the superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds to revise the plans and estimate of cost for carrying out the extension of the Capitol Building in accordance with the report contained in House Document No. 385, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, and supplementary reports, $2,500, to continue available during the fiscal year 1920."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the Fifty-eighth Congress there was a commission appointed, consisting of Mr. Cannon, Mr. Hepburn, and Mr. Richardson, and of Senators Wetmore, Alger, and Gorman, to consider the question of the extension and completion of the Capitol Building. As Members are aware the Capitol Building has never been completed according to its original design. The central part of the building, between the two wings, according to the original plans should be brought farther out onto the Plaza. The work of this commission was very elaborate, with drawings and estimates as to cost. The report was the result, as it should have been, of the most careful consideration of matters affecting the Nation's Capitol in which we all take such very great pride.

The purpose of the amendment is to enable the Superintendent of the Capitol to revise the estimates and plans in connection with that improvement so that if Congress shall want subsequently to undertake this work and provide thereby not only for the greater beauty of the Capitol but for that change which is needed in connection with the Supreme Court and its activities, it would have the data when it comes to do it. It in no sense binds Congress to anything except that it enables the Superintendent of the Capitol to take these plans and bring them up to date as to the amount that will be required.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recollect, this proposition was before the House 12 years ago. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], then Speaker of the House, was its sponsor. I believe it involved an expenditure of $1,750,000, or thereabouts, but there was at that time strong opposition to the project of extending the front of the Capitol. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the old Capitol is not erected according to the original plan?

Mr. SHERLEY. My understanding is that the front of the Capitol, as it now exists, does not represent the entire original plan.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the reason for reviving this project when it has been dormant for 10 or 12 years?

Mr. SHERLEY. Speaking for myself, because it has been dormant. I think it highly desirable that the Capitol should not have as the center a plaster front. The wings are marble but the center is simply plaster. There is also a mechanical reason in connection with the foundation of the whole Dome of the Capitol. The science of building now has advanced very greatly and the knowledge of weights and strength is much more accurate. It is quite possible that sooner or later there will have to be some work done on the Dome of the Capitol, simply as repair work, and there are many who believe that the Dome ought to be in marble so as not again to be in a condition of imitation as to outward appearances.

There has been a bill introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], who has taken a lively interest in the Capitol and its beauty, and is pending before the Committee on Appropriations for an appropriation to carry out this work. I believe that the committee was not warranted at this time in asking an appropriation of the House to carry out the work under the program nearly 15 years old. The committee thought it highly desirable that we have the Superintendent of the Capitol, Mr. Woods, to whom the Nation is indebted for the preservation of many things of architectural beauty and historic interest, to revise the figures and estimates and make a report to Congress, and then the future Congress can do what it chooses.

Under authority to extend my remarks I desire to insert the following letter from the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds upon this question of the extension of the Capitol, and also to include a portion of the report made by the joint commission, to which I have heretofore referred.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT
UNITED STATES CAPITOL BUILDING AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1919.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Some time ago I brought to your attention, personally, the question of the extension and completion of the Capitol Building, asking that you give it your consideration, and expressed hope that the subject might meet with your approval. I did all this on the basis of a former action on the part of Congress and subsequent report expressed in House Document 385, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, being a report entitled, "Extension and Completion of the Capitol Building."

This report, presented to Congress on March 3, 1905, and referred to the House Committee on Appropriations, was the result of the deliberations of a joint committee named by Congress in the sundry civil act of April 28, 1904. The printed copy I inclose and hope that it may be of service to you. Indeed, I hope you may make it of record again, as the report is short and contains all the important data necessary to consideration of the subject in case you or your committee desire to consider it.

The action of the joint commission, as set forth in the report of March 3, 1905, was based upon a report of the consulting architects chosen by the commission, Messrs. Carrere and Hastings, of New York. These architects made a supplementary report to the commission respecting the reconstruction of the present cast-iron dome into one of marble. This supplementary report does not appear to have been presented in the commission's report to Congress. Nevertheless, it is worthy of attention, because the architects deemed the reconstruction of the dome as necessary to the completion, so to speak, of the Capitol. I hope it may be accorded a place in the RECORD, along with the report first alluded to. I therefore add it to the first report.

You will understand, of course, that the estimates of cost in these reports are subject to revision under the conditions of present market prices for material and labor.

A short time ago Hon. A. J. MONTAGUE introduced a bill providing for the extension of the Capitol, based on the reports hereinbefore named. I understand that this bill has been referred to your committee.

The whole matter has lain dormant since the year 1905. I therefore beg to recall to you our conversation, with the hope that the subjects of it may be taken up and considered by you and your committee, and that such consideration may result in an authorization to proceed with the work.

One recommendation in the report (page 3 of the report, paragraph marked 4), relating to the "placing a sculptural group in the House pediment," etc., has already been carried out.

Very respectfully,

ELLIOTT WOODS,
Superintendent United States
Capitol Building and Grounds.

[Document No. 385, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session.]

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF THE CAPITOL BUILDING.

Mr. Hepburn, from the joint commission, submitted the following report relative to plans for the extension and completion of the Capitol Building:

The joint commission established by the sundry civil act of April 28, 1904, to inquire into and report on plans for the extension and completion of the Capitol Building, beg leave to report.

The sundry civil appropriation act of April 28, 1904, contains the following provision:

"A joint commission composed of three Senators, namely, Hon. George P. Wetmore, of Rhode Island, Hon. Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, and Hon. Arthur P. Gorman, of Maryland, and three Members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, namely, Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois, Hon. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, and Hon. James D. Richardson, of Tennessee, which is hereby created, is authorized to inquire and report to Congress at its next session plans in detail and estimates of cost for the extension and completion of the Capitol Building, in accordance with the original plans therefor by the late Thomas U. Walter, with such modifications thereof as they may deem advantageous or necessary, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including the employment of such professional and other services as they may deem requisite, and for such other expenses as said joint commission may authorize or incur, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the direction and supervision of said commission, or such commission as may be authorized by Congress, shall conduct the making of all contracts for said construction, whenever and not before the same shall be authorized by Congress, after proper advertisements and the reception of bids, and said superintendent, subject to the direction and approval of such commission, shall employ such professional and personal services in connection with said work, when authorized as aforesaid, as may be necessary. Any vacancy occurring by resignation or otherwise in the membership of said commission shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said commission."

The joint commission as constituted by the act met on April 30, 1904, and organized by the election of Hon. George P. Wetmore, of Rhode Island, as chairman.

The firm of Carrère & Hastings, architects, of New York City, were appointed consulting architects to the joint commission, with instruction to study the problem involved and submit preliminary designs and also the necessary complete plans and estimates contemplated in the act creating the joint commission, the same to be based on the plan for an extension of the central east front of the Capitol, designed by the late Thomas U. Walter and dated February 20, 1865.

The consulting architects were also requested to consider and report on the question of—

(1) Refacing with white marble such portions of the present west front of the Capitol as are now built in sandstone, preserving the present design;

(2) Replacing with white marble the two broad flights of terrace steps on the west of the Capitol; and

(3) Placing a sculptural group in the House pediment to correspond in character, size, and finish with the sculptural work now existing in the pediment of the Senate wing.

The architects were directed to report as their work progressed, and during the past summer and autumn meetings of the commission were held to receive and consider preliminary reports.

Under authority of the sundry civil act of March 3, 1903, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds had constructed a plaster model of the Capitol Building as it exists to-day, with movable sections showing two of the three plans of the late Thomas U. Walter for an extension of the central east front. The commission has had constructed in addition models illustrating the designs submitted by the consulting architects.

At a meeting of the commission on February 19, 1905, the consulting architects submitted their report (Appendix A). They recommend the adoption of a plan marked "Scheme A" as being in their opinion the most conservative and in every way the best solution of the architectural problems involved in correcting the defects of the east façade, to which Mr. Walter called attention in his report of 1865.

Scheme A provides for moving the entire central east front forward only so far as necessary (12 feet 10 inches) to bring the main wall of the building at the center, under the extreme projection of the Dome, and give the Dome the apparent support which it should have, at the same time adding one column on each side of the central pediment, broadening the pediment accordingly, so that it will dominate the two pediments of the Senate and House wings. It also proposes to reproduce the present east front in white marble. In this scheme no consideration has been given to increased space within the building. Nevertheless, the moving of the wall easterly 12 feet 10 inches gives on the main floor to the east of the Supreme Court a series of alcoves, back of the present screen, for retiring or robing rooms, and a similar series of alcoves to the east of Statuary Hall, as well as on the floor above. In the basement this additional projection would add to the size of the adjacent rooms, enlarging and improving them, especially in the case of the law library, under the Supreme Court. In the central section of the building two spacious rooms are obtained on either side of the main entrance, with windows opening on the portico, giving 12 additional rooms for committee or other purposes, those on the first and second floors being well lighted and all very accessible. The estimated cost of scheme A is $800,000.

The architects also submitted an alternative plan, scheme B, as illustrating what they believe to be the least objectionable manner in which the central east front can be extended for the purpose of securing any considerable room space within the building.

In scheme B the central portion is projected 32 feet 6 inches easterly from the walls of the Supreme Court and Statuary Hall, a wide corridor east of the Rotunda, connecting the Senate and House wings, is provided, and the building will gain 54 large rooms, 18 on each of the three floors. The estimated cost of scheme B is $1,075,000.

The joint commission recommends the adoption by Congress of—

(1) Scheme A, as to the extension of the central east front of the Capitol:

(2) Also recommends the refacing with white marble such portions of the present west front as are now built of sandstone, the present design to be reproduced in every detail;

(3) Replacing with white marble the two broad flights of steps on the west of the Capitol from the upper terrace to the foot of the embankment where the garden begins; and

(4) Placing a sculptural group in the House pediment to correspond in character, size, and finish with the sculptural work now existing in the pediment of the Senate wing.

The estimated cost will thus be:

East front extension, scheme A (see Appendix A)	$800,000
Reproducing the west front in white marble	425,000
Reproducing west terrace steps in white marble	50,000
Sculptural treatment of the east pediment of the House wing	55,000
Total	1,330,000

A statement of the expenses of the commission to date is attached hereto, marked Appendix B.

Chairman.

APPENDIX A.

REPORT ON THE EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL, 1904.

To the Joint Commission of the Senate and House for the Extension and Completion of the United States Capitol Building:

GENTLEMEN: We feel deeply the responsibility imposed upon us in reporting to your commission in regard to any changes to be made in the Capitol Building of the United States, a building so interesting from the artistic as well as from the historic point of view, and which, though it may have some architectural faults, is, nevertheless, one of the most monumental and beautiful edifices in this country. We find ourselves therefore hesitating whether we should advise the reproduction of the east front of the building in marble to harmonize with the rest of the Capitol, preserving the design practically as it exists to-day, or whether we should recommend enlarging the building in accordance with Mr. Walter's plans of 1865.

In his report as architect of the Capitol extension, dated November 1, 1864, he states:

"Now that the new dome and the wings of the Capitol are approaching completion, it must be apparent to everyone that the extension of the center building on the east to the line of the new wings becomes an architectural necessity. I have therefore prepared plans for thus completing the work in harmony with what has already been done, and will place them in the Capitol for future reference.

"I do not suppose, nor would I recommend, that any action be taken by Congress in reference to such an improvement until the war is ended and the financial conditions of the country becomes settled and prosperous; but inasmuch as it is my purpose to retire from these works as soon as the Dome is finished, I deem it incumbent upon me to leave upon record my views as to their final completion."

When we read this report accompanying his plans of 1865 we were impressed with the feeling that Mr. Walter had been influenced, perhaps under pressure from Congress, by the desire to obtain increased accommodations within the building, and that he would have recommended a somewhat different treatment if he had had under consideration only the strictly architectural necessities of the design. We feel very sure that it would be better to reproduce the present design in marble, as nearly as possible as it now stands, than to carry out Mr. Walter's plans of 1865 in their entirety.

It seems remarkable, when considering the history of this building, that so beautiful and harmonious a design should have resulted from the successive additions made to the original building, the result of which is certainly a monument to the skill of Mr. Walter. Whatever faults there may be in the design are distinctly the outcome of the limitations which were imposed upon the architect in adapting the new conditions to the building as it then existed. The Dome had to be designed in proportion to the enlarged building, and yet Mr. Walter found himself compelled to place this larger Dome upon the masonry foundations and walls of the smaller Dome. Owing to the fact that the foundations were built on most unfavorable soil, he very naturally hesitated to add upon these walls any unnecessary masonry weight or to disturb in any way the existing masonry where it could be used and adapted to the new conditions. He felt very strongly, however, as we do, the defect that on the east front the Dome does not appear to be supported; in fact, it overhangs the wall of the building and seems to rest partly upon the portico. He was right in wishing to have this defect corrected and, also, in wishing to add another column on either side of the central motive on the east front of the building, thus increasing the width of the pediment and making the central motive with its pediment predominate over the two wings with their pediments. While we feel, therefore, that the direct elevation of the east front of the Capitol recommended by Mr. Walter should be carried out in every respect, we are at the same time certain that could Mr. Walter have given more time and further study to this great problem, unhampered by practical limitations, he would have been finally persuaded not to project the central building with its pediment any farther east than absolutely necessary to give the Dome the apparent support which it now lacks.

In our judgment, one of the most impressive views of the Capitol is obtained when one sees the entire east front and the Dome together, which is only possible while standing fairly close to the building and to the east of either the Senate or House wing. Now, if the central building were brought too far forward it would mask the Dome and destroy this very picturesque and yet imposing view of the Capitol, and there would be no point from where the entire height of the Dome could be seen in its relation to the rest of the building, which is now possible on the east front.

We also believe that if this central building were carried far forward toward the east the architectural effect of the entire east front would be injured, even when considered without regard to the Dome. In a monumental scheme of this character three parts or architectural motives are much simpler, and a broader and better composition, than five parts. The extreme projection of this central building would completely destroy the present composition of three units, with its breadth and simplicity, and would not only produce a division with five members—the center, the two wings, and the intervening spaces—but would make these members practically equal in size and architectural value. That such a composition already existing on the west front is nevertheless rather imposing is to be ascribed to the fact that the Capitol is always so greatly foreshortened by the perspective, due to the fall of the land on the west—a result which could not be expected on the east front, where the foreground is level and the building can be seen in close proximity.

Another important reason for not making this great projection is that it would destroy the court-like effect of the east front where the two wings project beyond the simple and broad central building, one of the most picturesque and pleasing features of the Capitol wherever seen on the east, but especially when standing fairly close to the building and looking up at the Dome.

Lastly, it would seem most unfortunate not to be able, when looking diagonally toward this façade as one approaches from the north or from the south, to see the full length of the building as at present. The extreme projection of the central building would produce this result, for it would practically mask that part of the building beyond it, so that when approaching the Capitol from the south one would see the House wing and the central projection, while the Senate would be hidden from view by the projection of the central building. The same would be true with regard to the House wing when approaching the building from the north. We are, therefore, strongly of the opinion that if Mr. Walter had been entirely unhampered by practical considerations, and if he had written his report after the completion of the Dome and the two wings, he would have reached the same conclusion.

In view of these considerations, and after very careful study, we respectfully submit plan, Scheme A, as being, in our opinion, the most conservative and in every way the best solution of the architectural problems involved in correcting the defects of this façade, to which Mr. Walter called attention in his report of 1865.

Realizing, as already stated, that the composition of this façade, and especially the relation of wall surfaces to each other, should be changed as little as possible, we have moved the entire front of the central portion forward only so far as necessary to bring the main wall of the building, at the center, under the extreme projection of the Dome, and give the Dome the apparent support which it should have. At the same time we have added one column on each side of the main pediment, broadening the pediment accordingly, so that it will dominate the two pediments of the Senate and House wings, which Mr. Walter so strongly felt should be done.

In this scheme no consideration has been given to increased space within the building, and the problem has been solved strictly according to the architectural necessities of the case; nevertheless the moving of the wall easterly 12 feet 10 inches gives on the main floor to the east of Statuary Hall a series of alcoves which can be used to advantage for the additional storage of documents, and to the east of the Supreme Court a similar series of alcoves, back of the present screen, for retiring or robing rooms for the judges. Similar alcoves would also be obtained in both cases on the floor above, which could be reached from the central portion of the building and used for various purposes. These changes would in no way affect any of the internal arrangements or even the decorations on the main floor.

In the basement this additional projection has added to the size of the adjacent rooms, enlarging and improving them, especially in the case of the law library under the Supreme Court.

In the central section of the building two spacious rooms are obtained on either side of the main entrance, with windows opening onto the portico, giving 12 additional rooms for committee or other purposes, those on the first and second floors being well lighted and all very accessible.

We strongly recommend that whatever alterations are decided upon should be substantially in harmony with this plan, scheme A, and that in no event should the central portion of the building be made to project any farther eastward than shown thereon.

We have prepared an alternative plan, scheme B, partly to illustrate our contention that the building should not be projected farther eastward than absolutely necessary to give an apparent support to the dome, and at the same time to show what, in our judgment, is the least objectionable manner, if the architectural beauty and simplicity of the east front are to be preserved, of obtaining additional space within the building while retaining to the greatest possible extent the present character of the east front.

In scheme B the central portion has been projected 32 feet 6 inches easterly from the walls of the Supreme Court and Statuary Hall, adding to the building 14 spacious and well-lighted rooms on each floor, 7 on each side of the main entrance. These rooms are approached by a corridor of ample width connecting with both the Senate and House wings, the rotunda, and other important circulations of the building. This corridor, besides giving the Senators and Congressmen direct access to their respective committee rooms, also provides a new communication from one end of the Capitol to the other, which would be both private and convenient.

In order to obtain this through corridor and at the same time avoid the deep-recessed courts which would then exist between the Senate wing and the central building on the one side and the House wing and the central building on the other, we have indicated on the plan, scheme B, entirely new sections. Each of these new sections connecting the central building with the Senate and the House wings would contain four additional large rooms on each floor, opening into a court, supplying light from the east to the present passages connecting the main building with the Senate and the House wings. The colonnade now existing at this point is moved forward to form the easterly façade of the new connecting sections.

By reference to the plan it will be seen that under this scheme 18 large, well-lighted rooms are obtained on the main floor and a similar number on the gallery floor, available for committee rooms or other purposes. Eighteen corresponding rooms are obtained on the ground floor, some of which can be used for committee rooms and others for the services of the building.

From the practical point of view this plan commends itself to us very highly, as it provides ample and well-lighted additional space without disturbing the present internal arrangements of the building or its decorations. It establishes, besides, a new and important circulation between the two wings, serving the different new committee rooms. It produces a more interesting and satisfactory façade than could be obtained under the recommendation made by Mr. Walter in his report of 1865. It would be simpler and more dignified, and would preserve the breadth and monumental character of the easterly façade; but it would be much less interesting and picturesque. It would be such a great change from the present façade, so familiar to our people, and which they have learned to love and venerate, that we make this suggestion merely to meet the condition which has been imposed upon us by your commission of reporting a scheme with added space. We hope, nevertheless, that this alternative plan, scheme B, will not be favorably considered.

In order to facilitate the study of this problem by your commission we submit herewith a plan of the main floor of the United States Capitol and a large photograph of the east front showing the building as it exists to-day; also a complete elevation, at double the scale of the plans, showing the easterly façade as it would look in direct elevation with the greater width of the pediment obtained by the addition of one column on each side of the present pediment. Sketch perspectives and complete models of this façade are likewise submitted, further illustrating scheme A, scheme B, and the east front as it exists to-day.

In the preliminary estimates, which we append to this report, as requested by your committee, giving the cost involved in the execution of either of the schemes proposed, we have also included alternate estimates for refacing the present central building of the east façade with white marble to correspond with the Senate and the House wings, the present design being, of course, reproduced in every detail. One estimate submitted is for the reproduction of the façade in every detail just as it stands; the other includes the suggested addition of two columns and the widening of the east pediment, otherwise reproducing the present façade.

Estimates are also submitted, first, for the probable cost of a sculptural group in the House pediment to correspond in character, size, and finish with the sculptural work now existing in the pediment of the Senate wing; and, second, for refacing with white marble such portions of the present west front as are now built in sandstone, the present design being, of course, reproduced in every detail.

In accordance with your request we also submit an estimate for replacing with white marble the two broad flights of steps on the west of the Capitol, from the upper terrace to the foot of the embankment where the garden begins. We are strongly of the opinion that an error of judgment was made in using a dark material for these steps, and that the present effect is most injurious to the general harmony, dignity, and repose of this impressive front. This work would not disturb any of the white marble ramps and balustrades, and contemplates only replacing the bluestone steps and platforms with white marble.

In conclusion we should state that during the study of this important problem and the preparation of this report we have conferred from time to time with the Superintendent of the Capitol, and we are greatly indebted to him for his very valuable assistance.

We have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

CARRÈRE & HASTINGS,
Consulting Architects.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I wonder if the plan contemplates a change in the Goddess of Liberty that wears the Indian helmet.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that that was contemplated at all.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman is no doubt familiar with the history of that statue.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman will pardon me, I desire to inform the gentleman from Indiana that if he will read the Standard Guide of Washington he will find that it is not the Statue of Liberty but the Statue of Victory Armed, and that is why she wears a helmet.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Then it is evident that the best authority in the city of Washington on that subject is wrong. I am informed that the Goddess of Liberty should have worn a liberty cap, but the liberty cap was objectionable to Mr. Jefferson Davis, then Secretary of War, who prescribed the Indian helmet.

Mr. KING. That is entirely erroneous.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, when the matter was before the House there was strong opposition to adopting the report and extending the east front of the Capitol. This amendment merely proposes a revision of the estimates and enables the subsequent Congress to take such action as it sees fit on the report, and therefore I shall not press the point of order against the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Legislative drafting service: For salaries and expenses of maintenance of the legislative drafting service as authorized by section 1303 of the "revenue act of 1918," the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1919 is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1920, together with the further sum of $20,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer at this point, after line 14, page 37, a new paragraph, which is the amendment I gave notice yesterday that I would offer in connection with the creation of a joint committee on financial methods.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Insert the following after line 14, page 37:

"That a joint commission of Congress is created, to be known as the joint commission on financial methods, which shall consist of six Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and six Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. Any vacancy arising shall be filled in the manner of the original appointment, but vacancies shall not be created by the expiration of the term in Congress of any Member.

"It shall be the duty of the commission to inquire into the methods of the Government in connection with each of the following financial functions and their relation to one another in order to effect a proper correlation thereof and to recommend such changes in present methods as may be deemed necessary:

"(1) The preparation of estimates of appropriations and data explanatory thereof and their transmission to Congress.

"(2) The consideration of estimates of appropriations and the preparation and consideration of appropriations by the Congress.

"(3) The disbursement and expenditure of appropriations by administrative officials.

"(4) The auditing of accounts arising from the disbursements of appropriations and the reporting to and consideration by Congress of expenditures of appropriations, with especial reference to the establishment of a system of auditing and reporting of expenditures that shall be responsible to the Congress.

"The commission shall report by bill or otherwise to the two Houses of Congress, with any recommendation it shall choose to make, at such early date as may be practicable, and shall have the right to report at any time.

"The commission is authorized to sit during the session or recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section. It may demand and shall receive full cooperation and assistance from the administrative branches of the Government.

"The commission may select its officers and may incur such expenses as may be necessary, to be paid on proper vouchers approved by it and evidenced by its chairman, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $100,000, which is hereby appropriated and made available until June 30, 1920."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not delay the House at this time with a discussion of a budget system for the Government. I have had occasion a number of times to speak on the subject, and I shall at the conclusion of my very brief remarks ask to have permission to extend them in the RECORD by making a somewhat more elaborate statement as to my own personal views touching the character of the reforms that ought to be undertaken. The amendment that is proposed provides a joint commission of six Members of the House and six Members of the Senate, the idea being that this whole matter ought to be one in which the legislative body should take the initiative and have the control of recommendations that should be made touching what to my mind is the most important reform that can take place in connection with the Government of the United States. It provides that the Members who are appointed shall not cease to be members of the commission by virtue of ceasing to be a Member of Congress. The idea of that was simply to have a continuity of work, and in that connection, for fear anyone might misunderstand my own attitude in connection with it, I shall cease to be a Member of Congress on the 4th of March, but it is not my intention to accept, even if it should be tendered to me, a place upon this or any other commission that may be created by the Government of the United States, so that the provision that is here is put here without regard to any personal desire of any Member.

Mr. Chairman, I came into this Congress nearly 16 years ago. One of the first speeches I ever made as a very young Member was to call attention to the needs to my mind of a budget system, of a system that would require both the Executive and the Congress to consider the estimates for appropriations as a whole before they undertook to consider details, and to match outgo and income with some degree of consistency.

This Nation has been so wealthy in the past that the sums that it could raise by taxation were in excess of even the extravagance of any administration or of any Congress; but the time has come when that is no longer true and when there will be required the highest order of statesmanship to match the revenues to the Government that can be obtained by proper taxation with the expenditures that should be made in economically administering that Government. It is a thing that can not be determined immediately. My personal hope is that if this should become enacted into law the members of this commission will from time to time make separate reports on special matters, in order that the Congress might digest the proposals that come. One of the things in particular that I hope will come out of the recommendations of this commission is an independent audit, subject to the control of Congress and not to the administrative branch of the Government. [Applause.] That was the great reform that Gladstone put into the parliamentary procedure of England. It is the one thing that is essential in order to keep Congress advised of expenditures without compelling it to look to a lot of details; and, as I have repeatedly said to the House, the trouble is that with such a mass of detail as we have to consider here we do not have the time for the consideration of great policies of government, with the result that administrations determine policies and Congress simply votes money to carry them out. I believe that in a free country the real power of determining policy must rest with the legislative branch. There is a limitation upon what men can do, and if the Congress is required, in order to prevent waste, constantly to consider little items of detail in the various departments, it inevitably follows that it can not have the time for the consideration of those great, vital things that affect the very nature and structure of our Government. I hope that by a proper system of audit, of audit that is responsible to the Congress, we can have brought to our attention the things that need correction without the detailed consideration that is now required, and that that will give the leisure to enable this House—which, after all, is the real guardian of the liberties of the people, because it represents at short periods of time the popular will of the people—to take its true place in determining what shall be done and what shall not be done in respect to the great questions that confront this country and the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I followed the reading of the amendment as closely as I could in the confusion existing in the Chamber. Does this amendment provide that the Members to be appointed in the Senate and the House shall be divided between the two political parties?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not, and yet it is my idea that it should. Personally I have no objection to the insertion of an amendment that will so perfect the form. It is my belief that the Speaker of the House of Representatives ought to pick out six of the ablest men in the House—three from each side. This is not a matter of partisanship; it is a matter in which we are all equally concerned. Both parties are on record in favor of the reform. I think the Speaker ought to appoint three men on each side, and I hope the Vice President will do the same in the Senate, and that those men, having, as the amendment provides, a sufficient fund to get proper clerical assistance, and to have the departments subject to their orders touching help and information, may report from time to time to the Congress. The House of Commons in England recently created a committee for this very purpose, and one of the most interesting things is that in their last report—I think their ninth report—they are proposing a committee that bears a very close relationship to the Committee on Appropriations in this House, and the criticisms of their procedure are just as severe, if not more so, than any criticism I have heard against our own. And that, by the way, is a good illustration to those who think everything else is done better elsewhere than at home, of the old saying that far-off oxen have long horns. They have their problems there and elsewhere, and they are not solved. The problem of good government will never be finally solved. It will be a progressive matter. My idea and my hope is that there will be a commission of the character I have indicated.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman offer such an amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall be happy to do so. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, in line 5, after the word "Representatives," by adding the words "three of whom shall be of the majority party and three of whom shall be of the minority party"; and I offer after the word "Senators," in line 3, the same amendment.

I desire, under leave granted to extend my remarks, to reprint a speech made by me in the House of Representatives on February 28, 1913, which, for lack of time now to prepare a more comprehensive statement of the necessity for the creation of the joint commission proposed by this amendment, sets forth the main defects which I believe to exist in our present system of dealing with estimates, appropriations, and expenditures:

SPEECH OF HON. SWAGAR SHERLEY, OF KENTUCKY, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FEBRUARY 28, 1913.

"Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express to the Members of the House my appreciation of the opportunity afforded me to speak to them in these closing hours, when there is so much of legislation to be enacted, and my only excuse is that the subject of my speech I believe to be of great importance to the House and to the country, and I desire the intelligent criticism of my colleagues touching the proposals that I shall make relative to the procedure of the House. Two days ago the President of the United States sent a message to the House on the subject of a national budget. I shall not undertake in the limited time at my disposal to deal with the many phases of so vast a subject as that or to consider the message itself, but beyond some incidental remarks touching the general subject of a budget I desire to address myself to the proposition of creating a budget committee for this House in order that there may be a more comprehensive and effective consideration of revenue and annual supply bills.

"The United States is peculiar among all of the great nations of the earth in that it has never developed what might be called a budget system of government. At the time of our independence, England had not developed that system of responsible government that has since been the model for so many other nations, and a budget as a method of fixing responsibility was, in its modern sense, practically unknown. And yet the elements of a budget system are found in the Constitution itself. Article I, section 8, provides that 'the Congress shall have power to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises'; and section 9, paragraph 7, provides that 'no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be furnished from time to time.' By these provisions the legislative body, the only logical representative of a free people, is given primary and theoretically complete control over taxation and expenditure, but by virtue of other provisions in the Constitution giving to the President the power and duty to administer the law, with the right to appoint the chief administrative officers, such actual control over expenditures as is exercised by Parliament under the English system is impossible here.

"I shall not undertake now any discussion of the English system. It is sufficient to point out that its cardinal virtue lies in the fact that those who administer the laws are chosen from and are a part of the legislative body and hold their ministerial posts at the will of that legislative body.

"Yet constant reference is made to this system, and by some all proposals are to be measured by it. In so doing they seem to forget that government is a matter of evolution. Probably the cause of more failures to reform methods of doing government business—city, State, or National—is the fact that the man proposing the reform faces it from the outside rather than from the inside. Governments, like men, are always narrowed and restricted by habits—personal habits, if I may be pardoned for such a use of the word—habits that restrict their activity and their initiative just as they do every individual. Having in mind some of the habits of our Government, and particularly of this body, I have a proposal that, while not representing an ideal reform, is sufficiently simple, I trust, to enable it to be adopted and yet of sufficient importance to produce some real relief from our present intolerable system and in time lead the way to other reforms. But, before I read the proposal, let me very briefly outline our present practice, familiar though it is to most of you.

"The theory of the makers of the Constitution was a separation of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments, a separation that has continued and must continue in the absence of a radical fundamental change in our Constitution. And, as I have indicated, that makes unnecessary of consideration the many propositions that are presented that are predicated on the idea of a ministry that is the Government and comes out of and is answerable only to the legislative body; where they prepare and present a budget and on its legislative success or failure depend their ministerial lives. Here the President, chosen by all the people and absolutely free from accountability to Congress, save only through impeachment for malfeasance in office, selects his Cabinet officers, who by express constitutional prohibition may not be Members of Congress. These Cabinet officers are responsible to Congress in no true sense of the term, their tenure rests with the President, and while Congress may and does impose duties upon them, the proper performance of such duties can in no effective way be compelled by it. Among the duties so imposed is one requiring them to submit detailed estimates of needed appropriations for an ensuing year.

"The estimates must be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury by the 15th of October each year and by him submitted to Congress upon its opening in December of each year. It is made his duty to assemble them and to present them to the Congress in the form that has been usual in presentation of the estimates of the various departments; and if they are submitted to him in a form other than that in which they have heretofore been submitted, it is his duty to put them in the proper form, leaving to a footnote any suggested change in form. Recently it has been made also his duty to estimate the revenues of the ensuing year and the appropriations probably necessary for the maintenance of the Government; and if it is found that the appropriations will exceed the estimated revenues, then he shall certify that fact to the President of the United States, that the President in communicating to Congress may inform it how the appropriations can be curtailed or the revenues increased. Many other provisions of law exist touching the preparation of particular estimates, concerning which you are doubtless familiar. All of these various laws are ones limiting the discretion of the administrative officers. These limitations are frequently the cause of useless trouble and expense in particular cases, but Congress, having, as I have indicated, no real direct control over the departments and constantly finding abuses, is forced into continual limitations upon the discretion of all these officers. Congress, in brief, distrusts them, and they in return frequently assume an attitude of hostility toward its will.

"And this is a condition that is not simply the result of an improper presentation of estimates and expenditures, as stated by the Economy Commission in its budget report, but grows directly out of the facts I have just stated of Cabinet officers having a fixed tenure and a responsibility, not to the body granting the funds but to the executive who is to see to their expenditure. Now, in the preparation of the estimates of the departments each Cabinet officer acts on his own responsibility, and while they are all transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, he is simply the messenger for the various departments.

"John Sherman, one of the very greatest of the Secretaries of the Treasury that this country ever had, undertook to get the power to supervise the estimates of the other members of the Cabinet. But naturally every one of the other Secretaries objected to having a veto power given to anyone else over the budget that he presented, and so the matter failed. But Congress could well afford to give to one member of the Cabinet not only the power but to make it his duty to revise these estimates. And the reason of that would be this: You would then compel a certain consideration by the executive department of the budget as a whole. There is a tendency for each Secretary to consider the needs of his department only; and not unusually the sum total of the estimates to be submitted is found not by any consideration of the Government's power to raise revenue, not by any consideration of the relative merits of this department's demands as against that department's demands, but simply by the opinion that the head of each department has of its needs and then a sum in addition. And so I believe that one of the reforms that should be had and that could be had without in any way changing the present form of government would be to empower and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to revise the estimates. Of course we can not require the President. We can simply do as we did in this instance that I speak of, require the Secretary to communicate to the President that the President may, in turn, inform Congress. But the fatal mistake in the provision enacted was that it required the Secretary of the Treasury only to inform the President when he found the estimated revenues to be less than the estimated appropriations for the ensuing year. Now, the reason for it exists just as much in a case where the revenues of the country may be sufficient to meet the ordinary expenses as it does where we are likely to have a deficit in the revenues. And unless the duty is imposed upon him you will not have, other than through the initiative of some Executive desirous of bringing about reform, that supervision and consideration of the different items that go to make up a budget.

"I quite agree with the Economy Commission that the form in which estimates are submitted is not one calculated to give to Congress the information it most needs or desires. A rearrangement should be made of the estimates, but here it is well to bear in mind what I have said of the habits of government. This Congress has adapted itself to certain classifications. Some should be abolished, but some, though scientifically not defendable because of a fixed habit, should be retained.

"In some particulars we have a proper plan. The beginning of the fiscal year is near enough to the time when the estimates are submitted and near enough to the period at which those estimates are likely to have been enacted into law to bring about as much accuracy as possible in dealing with the future. In this regard I think the system is all that it should be. We have also passed stringent laws in regard to the creation of deficits, and have done much to require the keeping within the year of the expenses of the departments, and not to permit the borrowing from a future year for the expenses of a current year, with the idea of enabling the Government and the legislative branch of it to know without serious difficulty what the appropriations for a particular year happen to be. But much more can be done along this line.

"But the great reform to be made is, as I have said, to compel consideration by the Executive and his Cabinet of the estimates as a whole. It may be that Congress will insist on having the original estimates of departmental chiefs, though I do not believe it need to, but certainly, if possible, the Executive should be required to assume the responsibility of a budget proposal, and Congress can then take the responsibility of granting, curtailing, or enlarging such proposal. As it is now, there is no true central executive responsibility. Much of this reform could be had without change of law on the initiative of the President. It is his duty to advise Congress from time to time, and as a basis for such action he can require any information desired from administrative officers.

"But it is not as to the administrative side of the budget that I desire to chiefly speak, but of its legislative aspect, though they are so dependent upon each other as to make it necessary to constantly consider both.

"The estimates sent to Congress, as you know, are distributed to the various appropriating committees and these committees from time to time report bills appropriating such sums as are considered proper for the various governmental departments.

"Up until the Civil War the Committee on Ways and Means had jurisdiction over both the levying of taxes and the appropriation of the revenues. It very properly, from the standpoint of theory, had charge of those two highest functions of government, the levying of taxes and the spending of money raised as a result of the levy. But in 1865, largely on account of the tremendous labors that were being imposed upon that committee, a division took place, and there was created the Committee on Appropriations, and given to it exclusive power over the appropriation bills, leaving to the Ways and Means Committee the power it now has of exclusively considering the revenue bills. In this country it has been supposed by some people that there was not that same need for having a central authority over matters of raising revenue and matters of expenditure that existed in other countries. To my mind that is a mistake. It has been true, and probably will be true for many years, that Congress will levy taxes frequently for purposes and reasons other than the raising of revenue. But it ought to be true that somewhere in a legislative body there should be some central authority to consider the levying of taxes and the raising of revenue in connection with the appropriation of moneys for the maintenance of the Government. Nothing is stronger evidence of a bad system of government than the piling up either of huge surpluses, that are a constant invitation to extravagance, or the failure to provide sufficient revenues to meet the ordinary and necessary expenses of the Government. And to properly prevent that there must be cooperation somewhere between that power that first formulates the bill to levy the taxes and that power that first formulates the bill disposing of the money so raised. But we have not only separated these two functions of raising revenue and of disbursing revenue, but in 1880 we took from the Committee on Appropriations control over the Agriculture appropriation bill; and that was followed in 1885 by taking from them control over the appropriation bills relative to the Army, the Navy, Indian affairs, foreign affairs, and rivers and harbors; so that to-day the Committee on Appropriations has control of 6 out of the 14 supply bills, and you have seven or eight different roads to the Treasury; and as Mr. Tawney, the former chairman of the Appropriations Committee, very happily said, 'As many byways as there are members of these appropriating committees.' The result of that has been that there is not now any consideration in Congress of the appropriations as a whole.

"Only in these closing days of Congress has any consideration been given to the total of expenditure that is to be made for the ensuing fiscal year. In other words, after the act has been done and is in large measure beyond recall, there then comes a summing up to determine whether or not it has been a wise or a foolish act.

"Now, a more indefensible system can hardly be imagined, and all will unite in condemning it. But what of the remedy? And that brings me to my proposal. I have undertaken to provide in the resolution that I will read in a moment a means to compel a consideration by this House, and through that consideration by the country at large, of the broad fundamental question of how much shall be raised and how much shall be expended during a fiscal year; and that having that, we will then be able to consider not simply the details of particular supply bills, as we do now, but how far we want to pursue a given policy of government touching expenditures along one line or another. The resolution I have introduced is in language as follows:

"Resolved, That the following rule be added to the rules of the House, and to be known as section 6 to Rule X:

"6. There shall be a committee on estimates and expenditures, whose personnel shall consist of the following members: The chairmen and three ranking majority members and the ranking minority member of the Committees on Ways and Means and Appropriations, and the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committees on Rules, Agriculture, Foreign Affairs, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, the Post Office and Post Roads, Rivers and Harbors, and Indian Affairs. The chairman of said committee shall be selected by the members thereof. Said committee shall, as soon after the convening of each regular session of Congress as may be, report to the House the amount of revenue probably available for appropriation for the next fiscal year, and apportion the amount to the several appropriation bills within the jurisdiction of the committees empowered by the rules and practice of the House to report appropriations from the Treasury. This report, or supplementary reports to meet exigencies of the public service, may be made on any legislative day after the reading of the Journal, and when agreed to by the House shall limit the totals of the appropriations reported by the several committees.

"The proposal is substantially this: That instead of undertaking what I believe to be the impossible task of bringing back to the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction of all the supply bills, to create a committee composed in its personnel of the heads of the various appropriating committees. I gave to the Committee on Ways and Means representation greater than any other committee except Appropriations. I did that because the Committee on Ways and Means is properly charged with the great function of determining the amount of revenues that shall be available. I gave to the Committee on Appropriations a preponderance over other appropriation committees, not out of partiality for that committee, but because it has under its charge six of the great supply bills, whereas the other great appropriating committees have only one, except in the instance of the Committee on Military Affairs, which reports two supply bills. I also made as a part of that committee the chairman and the minority member of the Committee on Rules, because that is necessarily the great political committee of the House and should have a voice in a matter so fundamental as the arrangement of a budget.

"This committee would consist of 16 majority members and 10 minority members. It is urged that that is too large a number, but I desire to suggest to the House that it is really two committees, because the majority members would necessarily come to their conclusions in private, just as the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means now do, and they would then present to the minority members their proposal.

"A counter proposal of the minority would be made, and those two proposals would come to the House for adoption or modification. These reports would bring to the attention of this House and require the consideration by it of the real purposes of government and of legislation, for in the final analysis nearly every proposition that comes before a deliberative body is one either of taxation or expenditure.

"Now, I insist that one of the most vicious things that has occurred in America has been the constant raising of revenue without any consideration of the needs of revenue for the purposes of government, and, as a result of that—having a country whose tax limit has never been even approached, let alone reached—we have at various times piled up great surpluses in the Treasury, a constant invitation to extravagance in expenditures.

"This report when adopted should be made a limitation upon the power of any committee to report. As an illustration, the committee on the budget estimates that the revenues will amount to a thousand million in the ensuing year and that that sum should be the amount proper to be expended. Having determined that general amount, it then allots it, and it says to the Army, 'You will have $90,000,000.' It says to the Navy, 'You shall have a hundred and thirty million dollars.' Of course, I am speaking just in loose figures, and to the various other appropriating committees, you can appropriate such sums. The problem, then, that will confront the departments will not be simply how much can we expend—that has been determined—but how best can we expend that sum in the interest of the people of America? [Applause.] And instead of having the ingenuity of the department expended in trying to arrive at reasons for increased appropriations you will compel every department which comes with a particularly new or pet proposal of theirs to show something that can be eliminated or economized in in order to make room for the new proposal.

"Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman a question there.

"Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

"Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Suppose the Congress should think it desirable to engage upon some enterprise; for instance, if we should undertake to take the Mississippi River out of the rivers and harbors bill and undertake to prevent the floods in the lower river just as we undertake to dig the Panama Canal, would not the fact that the budget at the opening of the sessions had limited the expenses to a given sum for that year preclude the Congress from undertaking that work?

"Mr. SHERLEY. It would not necessarily, because the committee on the budget is given power to bring in supplemental estimates from time to time.

"Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It would not prevent any committee from bringing in such a bill without the consent of the budget committee previously obtained?

"Mr. SHERLEY. It would as to any appropriation not provided for in the original report or some subsequent report of the budget committee. Now, the resolution I read I do not think is complete, nor do I think it is entirely in the proper form. I am sure that it should be supplemented by a rule which would make subject to the point of order any bill reported by any committee appropriating a sum that was in excess of the amount allotted for such purpose; so it would be within the individual power of any single Member to recommit to the committee reporting it a bill which violates the rule that the House had adopted. In addition to that I am inclined to believe we are going to be forced to the position now occupied in the English Parliament, where it is no longer in the right of a single member to make a motion to increase any item in any of the supply bills.

"Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman says you make subject to a point of order an appropriation in amount in excess of the budget allowance. Now, would the gentleman also make it subject to the point of order to appropriate a sum less than the amount of the budget allowance?

"Mr. SHERLEY. By no means. I would not undertake to say these committees in working out their details should not make economies beyond that suggested by the budget committee. The whole function of the budget committee is not to usurp the work now being done by the various appropriating committees, because, in my judgment, there is no limited number of men, such as would comprise a committee of working size, sufficiently industricus and sufficiently intelligent to do the work of preparing the detail of all the supply bills that are to be appropriated by this Congress, and that is one of my answers to the proposal frequently made that you should give back to the Appropriations Committee entire charge. I say, if we do that, it will result in dividing that committee simply into subcommittees, and that those subcommittees would be as distinct for all practical purposes as the various appropriating committees are now.

"Mr. HAMLIN. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman, I think, and I believe he is along the right line; but it has been suggested—I have heard it suggested—that it might place too much power in the hands of a few men, and, as I understand the general scheme, this budget committee must report to the House, and the House must adopt its report before it is binding.

"Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is right. The budget committee's report would be binding only when approved by the House.

"Now, the criticism suggested by some and just mentioned by the gentleman really applies to the proposal urged in lieu of mine, of giving back to the Appropriations Committee exclusive jurisdiction of supply bills. That is what destroyed it before. That committee would determine what is the real function of the House alone to determine—the relative size of the various bills. Now, I believe in power and with it responsibility, but what I particularly want is the power of a party and not a committee of a party, and then, as a true sequence, party responsibility.

"In my judgment, a lot of the trouble in American public life now is not so much that a combination of men have too much power, but that many individual men have so much hidden power that no party can be held responsibility by the American people. I am a believer in party government. I believe the present condition of affairs we are passing through in America is altogether a temporary one. You can not agree to the idea, that we of Anglo-Saxon stock have been bred to believe in, of a true representative government unless you have party responsibility, and one of the curious features of evolution in America is that everywhere else than upon the floor of this House the tendency has been more and more toward the centralization of power, and with it responsibility. What is the meaning of the commission form of government in cities? What is the meaning of the constant tendency to lessen the number of officials? It is to give to a limited number of people power, and then give to the great body of the people the right to make those men who have been given this power answerable and responsible.

"Now, we have developed in America a peculiar system, a system of committee government largely brought about by the tremendous detail of legislation that comes in a great country like this. The result is that every old Member realizes that in committee is done most of the great creative work touching legislation. That is a condition that we could not change now if we would. But it ought to result not in taking away from committees power in the first instance, but in bringing their work before Congress, so that the whole body can pass judgment upon it and so as to create party responsibility. We had a debate in this House just a few days ago touching the size of the American Navy. That debate should not have happened on the naval bill. It ought to have happened in the consideration of a budget. This House ought to determine, the Congress ought to determine, in the first instance, how much it can and how much it is willing to expend for military purposes, whether for the Army or for the Navy, how much for peace, how much for the ordinary upkeep of the Government, and that determination should be made before we get into the details of bills.

"If that had been had, the question that would have been before this House for determination when the naval bill was up would not have been the size of the bill, but whether the particular items were proper items and whether that amount of money could better be expended in building a particular type of ship or another type or doing this particular work or that particular work. Instead of that you had a debate here that undertook, in a way, to review the general appropriations and whether we were running away beyond what Congress ought to appropriate during a single session.

"Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

"Mr. TILSON. I would like to ask just what part the gentleman has assigned here to the Senate? What would he do with the amendments brought in by the Senate?

"Mr. SHERLEY. That raises a question I expected to come to later, but will discuss now. It has been suggested that this plan would be of no avail because we fail to take into consideration the Senate, which is a body of equal power with this. I grant you that is a weakness, and it may be that the remedy for that is to have this committee on the budget to report a concurrent resolution, which shall be adopted by the House and sent to the Senate, and there considered by the Senate and if modified go through the ordinary course of conference, and finally be agreed to, and, when agreed to, shall mark the absolute limitations of the Congress.

"Some have suggested the idea of a joint committee made up of the House and the Senate, but knowing, as I said in the beginning, the habits of Governments, the habits of these legislative bodies, I did not believe it was practicable, at least at this time, to bring about such a joint committee of the House and the Senate. But this I do think would happen, even if we had no cooperation with the Senate: The very moment you focused public attention upon such a consideration as I have outlined would be the result of this budget committee's report, that moment you would stop most of the abuses that we all now recognize.

"Why is it the American people are so indifferent to expenditure? Is it that they are an extravagant people? Is it that they accept in a loose way the constantly repeated statement made here of a former Speaker, that this was a billion-dollar country, and therefore we should have a billion-dollar Congress? No. The reason the American people have heretofore not been interested in questions of expenditure is because they have never had brought to their attention in its broad aspect this question of expenditure. The only time the American people know anything about what we are going to spend is after we have appropriated it, just as this House only knows after it has ended its labors. If this House had known in advance it was liable to find itself with the total it now finds itself with, in my judgment you would have had a very different attitude touching these various supply bills, and when the people have learned of the expenditures there is no party upon whom can be rightfully placed the responsibility.

"While as to the personnel of this budget committee I am not indifferent, I am in no sense wedded to the proposal here made. It has been suggested by some that it would be well simply to have two majority members and one minority member of each of the appropriating committees. My own idea was that the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Appropriations were entitled to a larger representation, because they represented in their subsequent work larger interests than those of any other single committee.

"Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

"The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas). Does the gentleman yield?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

"Mr. ALEXANDER. If the resolution were agreed to and this budget committee created, would it not devolve upon this budget committee the duty of hearing all the claims made for appropriations, and would they not duplicate the work of the several committees or else take over to themselves that entire work? How would you manage that?

"Mr. SHERLEY. I think not, although I want to say that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, for whose judgment I have a very great respect, and who has had an experience away beyond that of any man here, has thought that that would be the result. Here is what I think: I believe that it would be easily possible for such a committee, having as a part of its personnel men who by previous experience as chairmen of the various committees were familiar with details, to consider the broad questions without hearing all of the people that these various committees now hear or determining all the details. And I suggest a further thought that the trouble now is with all of our appropriations that they are not based upon what we ought to expend or upon what the country ought to be willing to stand for in the way of taxation, but they are based upon what men who have the expenditures to make say they need or desire.

"I believe the time is coming in America when Federal taxation plus that already made by State and county and city is going to be sufficiently burdensome for the membership of this House to consider how far it is warranted in levying a tax; and whenever you reach that point, then you have got to consider—truly consider—a budget. Heretofore, with the idea of doing welfare work by virtue of taxation, we have gathered together such huge revenues that we have never had to consider the question of retrenchment, except occasionally in times of depression.

"Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

"The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

"Mr. ALEXANDER. I simply want the gentleman from Kentucky to understand that I am in entire accord with the purpose that he hopes to accomplish.

"Mr. SHERLEY. I am obliged to the gentleman for his interest and inquiry.

"Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

"The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

"Mr. HARDWICK. As I understand the gentleman's plan, it is that, with the exception of some Members from the Committee on Ways and Means and some from the Committee on Rules, the balance of the budget committee would be taken from the appropriating committees of the House. Of course, that is necessary to some extent; but does the gentleman consider that on this budget committee some balance or equilibrium ought to be maintained between the appropriating and the nonappropriating committees; or, in other words, between the fellows who want to hold things down and the fellows who want to increase appropriations? I ask the gentleman whether it would not be a good thing to hold a balance between the economists and the others who might not be economists?

"Mr. FITZGERALD. Where are they? [Laughter.]

"Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know. My private opinion is that they are not anywhere. [Laughter.]

"Mr. SHERLEY. The safety lies in the fact that you have to have the approval of the House of the budget committee's recommendation before it becomes effective. What I believe would happen is this, that the recommendations of the majority members of the budget committee would come before a caucus of that party and would be perfected and adopted in caucus, and that the minority proposals would come before the minority caucus and be approved there.

"Now, I know that there are men on this floor who absolutely differ with that idea, men who do not want what they say is caucus government. I answer by saying that what you need in America more than anything else is party responsibility. Who is answerable for large expenditures? We on this side load the blame on you, and you in return lay it on us. Each of us points to various and sundry votes that have been cast touching appropriations to support our position. But whenever a party comes in with a proposal touching the expenditures for the entire ensuing year, that moment it will make an issue, and an intelligent issue, on which the electorate of the country will determine who shall be given the reins of power.

"Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for an interruption?

"The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

"Mr. HAMLIN. I recognize that this is one of the most important propositions that has come before the House lately, and I am very much interested in it. I want to ask the gentleman this question: The country is growing from year to year, and of course appropriations and expenditures must keep pace with the growth of the country. Now, this budget committee, in parceling out the amounts of money that shall be permitted to be appropriated this year by the Naval Committee or the Military Committee or the Committee on Agriculture or any other committee, will have to take into consideration, will it not, the estimates of the different departments?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; of course.

"Mr. HAMLIN. Would they not have to hear evidence?

"Mr. SHERLEY. They ought to take up the estimates in one sense. I believe, as I said in the beginning, that this is only a step toward a full reform. What you must have finally is to have the administrative end of the Government present its budget to the legislative end, a statement of what it is willing to stand sponsor for and what it considers to be needed, and then let the legislative body, as it alone can do, determine the policy of how far it will warrant the proposals of the administrative end.

"Now, as to the hearing of evidence. The gentleman has in mind that that would require a consideration of details, just as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER]. I answer no. I believe it is possible to bring before the committee the broad, general question of expenditures. They would not have to go into the details. For instance, take the Committee on Fortifications. I speak of that because as chairman of that subcommittee I am peculiarly familiar with it. That bill carries, as a rule, somewhere from four to seven or eight million dollars a year, dependent somewhat upon the amount of new work that is to be undertaken, the maintenance funds, and so forth. The budget committee would not be required to do the detailed work of examining that my subcommittee does in determining whether a particular amount of money is necessary to buy searchlights or range finders in order to decide whether this Government, as a matter of policy, should spend $5,000,000 or $7,000,000 or $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 on seacoast defenses.

"The trouble is that we have all gotten a reverse idea of the functions here. We have gotten the idea that the policy of Congress is to be determined by estimates. I insist that it is the duty of Congress to determine how much it can afford to tax the people of America; and, having determined that, then to apportion the amounts to be used for the various purposes that they consider requisite and necessary.

"Mr. HAMLIN. In that I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky absolutely; but it occurs to me that in the evolution of this thing finally it might result in the budget committee of necessity going into details, and I want to say that I do not believe I would be averse to that idea. I do not know but what all of these appropriation bills ought to be reported from one committee.

"Mr. SHERLEY. My own judgment is that it is absolutely impossible for one committee to do it.

"Mr. HAMLIN. With a large committee you could subdivide it.

"Mr. SHERLEY. If you subdivide it, you have all the ills you now have, of a divided control over the matter; and what I am after is not simply the consideration by the same individuals of each individual bill, but I am after forcing the consideration by the Congress, and through it by the country, of totals. That is the important thing that must be brought about if you are to have a reform.

"Mr. HARDY. I understand the gentleman's whole theory is that the Government, as a wise business concern, should start off by saying how much money it may be able to raise and spend during the year, and then say to the departments, 'Make your estimates within that total range.'

"Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably. As I have said, this theory found expression when the Ways and Means Committee had not only charge of the revenue-raising bills, but it had charge of all appropriating bills; and it was only at the time of the Civil War that that power was taken away from the Ways and Means Committee. It is interesting to remember why. It was because the work became so heavy that they could not do it. Then what happened? The Committee on Appropriations had the entire jurisdiction of supply bills, and there came a great fight on a great leader who was chairman of that committee, and it was believed that Samuel J. Randall had gathered to himself so much power as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that in order to give the membership their proper share in the Government the Committee on Appropriations should be stripped of some of its power; and gradually, one by one, the appropriating powers that now find lodgment in these various other committees were taken from the Committee on Appropriations.

"Mr. HAMLIN. I understand that perfectly, I think; but here is the idea: How could this committee properly and fairly determine how much money the Rivers and Harbors Committee, for instance, could expend this year unless they went into the details of the work?

"Mr. SHERLEY. The thing to determine first is how much the Rivers and Harbors Committee shall spend; not how much they could spend.

"Mr. HAMLIN. I did not mean how much they could spend. I meant how much they needed and ought properly to have.

"Mr. SHERLEY. The Rivers and Harbors Committee is a very good illustration. River and harbor work, so far as it relates to contract obligations, ought to be determined by a settled policy that should bear a relationship to the necessary expenditures made along other lines of governmental activity. In other words, every question of expenditure is not simply a question of whether a particular thing is well to do, but whether that thing is well to do, having in mind the need or the desirability of doing some other particular thing. Therefore it would be perfectly easy for a budget committee to determine as a matter of policy that, say, $50,000,000 should be expended for river and harbor work. And it would not need, in order to determine that question, to go into the subject of how much money was needed for the particular work on Red River or how much was needed on the Missouri or the Ohio, but it would determine that, considering the revenues, we can afford to spend only so much, and then it would properly leave it to the Rivers and Harbors Committee to work out the details.

"Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

"Mr. EDWARDS. Does not the gentleman think that perhaps we would be up against this proposition: The budget committee would say that it might expend, say, $50,000,000 for the purpose of improving rivers and harbors, and there would be an incentive or inclination on the part of the committee to go up to it, when, in point of fact, the necessities might not require that amount?

"Mr. SHERLEY. That might be so; but they go up to that point and beyond it now. There would be this: If you carried along with this proposal the other proposal that it should not be in order, in the consideration of any supply bills, for a man to offer an amendment increasing the amount, the activity of the Committee of the Whole would be engaged in holding down the appropriation, whereas every man knows now that every chairman of a committee with a supply bill who comes out here does not have to fight to keep his bill from being reduced, but he has to fight to keep the Committee of the Whole from running away with it and increasing it. Why? Because the selfishness of individual men will always compel, whenever the House permits it, these men to increase expenditures.

"So you have to-day by the rules to protect the Committee of the Whole against the selfish opportunity of individuals. We are all alike; we live in an atmosphere where a man's success here is essential if he is to live. He does not have the opportunity a member of Parliament has, where he lives or falls with his party. Here every man has to show an individual activity under our present system, and as the result of a spur from behind he is constantly seeking to get something for his particular locality, and until you prevent that by the rules or cultivate a public opinion that will not judge Members by the amount of money they bring home to their districts, you will have the same tendency continued.

"Mr. EDWARDS. How many members does the gentleman say the budget committee ought to consist of?

"Mr. SHERLEY. I have stated 26 members.

"The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

"Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended 15 minutes.

"The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended 15 minuts. Is there objection?

"There was no objection.

"Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a question?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

"Mr. MURDOCK. Under our party government ordinarily the executive department is of the same party as the legislative department, or the majority in the legislature, and the executive department, by reason of patronage and other things, dominates more or less the legislative branch, and the origin to-day of appropriations is not generally on the floor but is in the departmental offices. They do make extravagant demands upon the legislative committees. As I understand the gentleman's proposition, it is—and I think it has virtue—that the initiative of the amounts to be expended will be, in fact, in the legislative body and not in the executive body?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Not entirely. It is true that no legislative body can, by virtue of its very numbers, by virtue of the multiplicity of its duties, know as the administrative officers can know the particular needs of a particular service. They only know in the first instance, and there must of necessity be given to the Congress through the administrative offices this information, and that is the true function of the budget from the administrative end. But this is a legislative function; having obtained that information, to determine how far, considering that every expenditure represents a tax, the resources of the country warrant the levying of taxes to raise given amounts, and how far a particular bit of governmental activity, though it may be worth while as an abstract thing, is warranted, having in mind the burdens of taxation and the need of certain other things.

"Mr. MURDOCK. Will it not actually follow under that proposition that the executive department, having in mind certain necessities and referring that to Congress as the needs of the department, will determine the budget and the amount of money to be expended, and will you not be traveling in a circle?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Not entirely. In the first place, the time has never been when Congress absolutely accepted the recommendation of the department, and it never will be and it never should be; Congress should always exercise a supervision over it. The trouble now is that you get nothing from the departments that approaches a budget.

"The Executive has absolutely neglected one of the chief functions of an administrative officer, and that is not simply to see that moneys appropriated are properly and economically expended, but to determine the needs of the Government as a whole. As I stated in the beginning, estimates are now made by district and local officers. They go on up through the heads of the departments and finally to the Cabinet officers, and then are by them sent through the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress. You have no real premier of the Cabinet, and you have never had practically a consideration by the Executive of a budget as such.

"Mr. MURDOCK. But you do have a maximum demand from all departments.

"Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but it largely represents an appetite rather than a theory of government.

"Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; and Congress largely follows it.

"Mr. SHERLEY. No; I do not think so; but it follows it somewhat, because its consideration of the estimates is just as faulty in method as the consideration by the President is faulty in the first instance. We, just as much as he, have failed to consider totals.

"Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

"Mr. AUSTIN. When the budget committee makes its report to the House will the House have any right to increase the amount carried in the budget?

"Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably; and that is the debate that ought to take place on the floor at the beginning of Congress, as to whether the party charged with responsibility has made a sufficient allowance for agriculture, a sufficient allowance for the Navy and the Army, or for pensions or for any other subject of appropriation.

"Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose the budget committee should decide in favor of an expenditure of $25,000,000 for public buildings and grounds, who would determine the items to make up that $25,000,000?

"Mr. SHERLEY. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

"Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, if a question as to what amount of money should be expended for agriculture or for the Navy or for the Army were to be debated at the beginning of Congress, how would you determine how much is required, unless you first have hearings such as the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Agriculture has, where the heads of the departments appear?

"Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think that you could have the debate that is properly had in the consideration of the details of a bill, but I think that you could have a pretty general debate as to how well you are following out a policy touching any one question. Let us take the Navy, for instance. I use that because that is in the minds of us all. Suppose the administration determines as a governmental policy that the Navy should be increased each year by the addition of two battleships, and we called that a naval program.

"The majority in control of the House brings in a proposal carrying so many millions of dollars for the Navy. Some gentlemen will ask those in charge of the bill if that contemplates the expenditure for one battleship or two battleships. The reply is made that the total is based on an expenditure for one battleship, and the question is asked why, and he is answered, then, because it is found that we have to expend so much for the Army and so much for agriculture and so much for the judiciary and so much for the ordinary upkeep, and so forth, that the probable revenues that the Government will have amount to so many millions, and that if we give to the Navy enough money to build two battleships we will have to cut some of these other items or increase taxation or have a deficit. That raises the question, then, not simply as to the desirability of two battleships, but as to the desirability of two battleships as against an Army of a certain size, as against certain expenditures for agriculture, and so forth.

"In other words, it brings a discussion of comparative merit rather than a discussion of particular items segregated from everything else.

"Mr. AUSTIN. Would it not reduce also the time consumed in this House in the consideration of appropriation bills?

"Mr. SHERLEY. I think it would; and that brings to mind another thought. I believe we have to get away from the plan that I have advocated and that a great many others have advocated heretofore of detailed specifications and limitation upon every appropriation. If the gentleman heard the first of my speech, he will recall that I said in substance that we treat every executive officer as if he were a suspicious character, and he treats us as if we were a lot of numskulls who knew nothing about the needs of the service, and out of that mutual suspicion comes half the trouble. Aside from the fundamental reason of absence of responsibility to us, one reason we have had to treat him as a suspicious character is because the form of making estimates and the form of reports of work done did not give us information as to whether it was well done or not, and so, for fear it might not be well done, we have taken away discretion and tied his hands, whereas the real system ought to be to give to an administrative officer some discretion and then require accountability.

"I do not wish to further delay the House, but I want to make this suggestion while it is in my mind. I do not suggest this plan as the ultima thule of government, and I do not suggest it as the best that can be had, but I submit to this House that we do need a change, as the present condition is intolerable [applause], and I ask my critics to suggest something better if they are not pleased with this, and I shall be perfectly willing to modify it; but the time has come for action on the part of Congress. Let us look to some system better than the antiquated method we now have.

"Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Appropriations have thoroughly discussed this plan and approved of it?

"Mr. SHERLEY. No; there are nearly as many opinions in the Committee on Appropriations as there are members of that committee. The other one most frequently urged and which is held by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Fitzgerald, and by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is to return to the old condition where the Appropriations Committee had exclusive jurisdiction of all supply bills.

"I have already referred several times to that proposal and its fatal defect. To my mind, no plan is effective that does not provide for the consideration of the total sum to be appropriated prior to a consideration of individual supply bills. This is true, even though one committee have exclusive jurisdiction of supply bills.

"Now, if the advocates of the Appropriations Committee propose a submission by it to the House of a budget, then every argument they advance against my plan applies equally to theirs with the added difficulty of taking from other Members powers they now have and giving to the already overburdened members of the Appropriations Committee such additional powers.

"I do not for a moment believe that the members of these other committees will ever consent to give up their power over the details of these supply bills, but I do believe that without unduly disturbing existing conditions a budget committee as outlined can be formed.

"I am very much obliged to the House for its patience." [Loud applause.]

Under the leave granted me to extend my remarks I also desire to reprint for the benefit of the House an extract from the "Ninth Report of the Select Committee on National Expenditure," of the House of Commons, which is as follows:

The select committee on national expenditure have made progress in the matters to them referred, so far as relates to the procedure of the house in relation to supply and appropriation, and have agreed to the following ninth report:

FINANCIAL PROCEDURE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1. Our terms of reference include a direction "to make recommendations in regard to * * * the procedure of this house in relation to supply and appropriation, so as to secure more effective control by Parliament over public expenditure." We intrusted to a subcommittee appointed for the purpose the duty of ascertaining the opinions of those best qualified to speak upon this subject. The subcommittee decided to proceed by way of written question and answer. They framed a questionnaire, which was sent to Mr. Speaker, the chairman of ways and means and the deputy chairman, to the chancellor of the exchequer and the ex-chancellors, to the financial secretary to the treasury and the ex-financial secretaries, to certain other members of the house representative of parties, to the comptroller and auditor general, to certain government officials, and to a small number of others whose views it was thought desirable to ascertain. We present in the appendix to this report the questions and the replies, together with a synopsis.

Those questions and replies related to the normal conditions of times of peace, and this report relates to them also. There is nothing in existing circumstances, however, which would render our recommendations inapplicable. Their adoption is, in our judgment, at least as necessary during the continuance of war expenditure as it will be on the return of peace.

2. The replies show, with few exceptions, a consensus of opinion that the present system of parliamentary control over expenditure is inadequate. In that view we concur. Indeed, our terms of reference themselves, inviting proposals to render control more effective, indicate that the house is not satisfied with the existing procedure.

3. The committee of the whole house on supply has the name but has none of the methods of a committee. It was established in the days of recurring conflict between Parliament and the Crown as a device to secure freedom of discussion on matters of finance. The debates in the house itself were recorded in the journal, which was sometimes sent for and examined by the King; and they were conducted in the presence of the speaker, who in those days was often the nominee and regarded as the representative of the Sovereign. By going into committee under the chairmanship of a member freely selected the House of Commons secured a greater degree of privacy and independence. But a so-called committee of 670 members can not effectively consider the details of finance. The time at its disposal is closely restricted. It can not examine witnesses. It has no information before it but the bulky volumes of the estimates themselves, the answers of a minister to questions addressed to him in debate, and such facts as some private member may happen to be in a position to impart. A body so large, so limited in its time, so ill-equipped for inquiry, would be a very imperfect instrument for the control of expenditure, even if the discussions in committee of supply were devoted entirely to that end. But those discussions afford the chief, sometimes the only, opportunity in the course of the year for the debate of grievances and of many questions of policy. In the competition for time those matters of greater interest and often of greater importance usually take precedence, and questions of finance are crowded out. And even if all these obstacles are overcome, and some rare occasion arises on which the House of Commons discovers and debates a case where a reduction in an estimate appears desirable, and would be disposed to insist upon its view, the present practice, which regards almost every vote of the house as a vote, not only on the merits of the question but for or against the Government of the day, renders independence of action impossible. Under these conditions it is not surprising that there has not been a single instance in the last 25 years when the House of Commons by its own direct action has reduced on financial grounds any estimate submitted to it.

4. The presentation of estimates to Parliament serves, no doubt, a useful purpose. tI secures publicity for the sums which they include and fixes responsibility for their expenditure. It has an indirect influence also on ministers and departments, since there is always the possibility that any item may be selected and challenged. The debates in committee of supply are indispensable for the discussion of policy and administration. But so far as the direct effective control of proposals for expenditure is concerned, it would be true to say that if the estimates were never presented and the committee of supply never set up, there would be no noticeable difference. Indeed, a large part of the estimates are formally passed year by year under the closure at the end of each session, without even the appearance of discussion; while every item in every estimate, whether closured or not, emerges from the parliamentary process in precisely the same shape as it entered it. Yet it can not be contended that there is never an occasion in any year or under any head on which proposals for expenditure could with advantage be reviewed and amended.

5. The estimates undergo in normal times a close examination by the treasury before they are presented. But the treasury is itself part of the executive. When any departmental minister has secured the personal assent of the chancellor of the exchequer to any proposal which he desires to insert or to retain in his estimates, the treasury is necessarily silent. Treasury control, invaluable as it is up to a point, is not a substitute for parliamentary control.

6. The comptroller and auditor general, on the other hand, is an officer of the House of Commons itself. But his scrutiny of expenditure, though exhaustive and independent, is a scrutiny of accounts and not of estimates, of expenditure which has already been incurred, and not of expenditure which is contemplated. He inquires whether the sums included in the accounts have actually been spent and whether the spending was regular. It is not within his province to consider whether it was desirable or necessary, although it is regarded as his duty by the public accounts committee to draw attention to expenditure which is wasteful or extravagant.

It is recognized on all hands that the work of the comptroller and auditor general and of the public accounts committee, which examines and reports upon the results of his inquiries, is highly efficient and useful, but no one would suggest that it covers, or could be made to cover, the whole field.

7. It is sometimes urged that the only safeguard against extravagance likely to be successful is to be found in the ministers and officials of the spending department themselves; that Parliament should be content to rely upon them; that any attempt at direct control would be ineffective, because it could not be sufficiently painstaking and minute, and harmful, because ministers would feel that the final responsibility had been transferred from their shoulders, and that they were no longer expected to exercise a meticulous care.

We can not subscribe to that doctrine. It would convert the responsibility of ministers into irresponsibility. It contemplates an executive which would be autocratic so far as expenditure is concerned, subject only to audit in order to insure honesty, and to the extreme measure of dismissal in case of gross abuse. If, however, it is answered that it is not intended to push the doctrine so far, and that the present practice provides the right admixture of ministerial responsibility and parliamentary control, we would express the conviction that the House of Commons ought not to accept a system which recognizes its authority, so long as it is never exercised, and concedes the appearance of control on the condition that it is not made a reality.

Nor can we agree that ministers and their officials—on whom, in the first instance, it is true, dependence must be placed for the avoidance of waste—would be likely to become less careful if they knew that their estimates would undergo in Parliament an effective instead of an ineffective review.

To regard the executive, whether it be the Sovereign or whether it be a ministry dependent upon Parliament, as the sole authority to limit the sums which ought to be provided for each branch of the public service is contrary, in our judgment, to the principles on which the constitution is based. We consider that the House of Commons, as the representative of the taxpayer, should reassert, fully and effectively, its right of restricting the amounts to be allotted for each head of the national expenditure, and we recommend the adoption of the measures to that end, which we now proceed to detail.

STANDING COMMITTEES ON ESTIMATES.

8. The great majority of the replies to the questions which were circulated favor the principle that the estimates should be subjected to examination by a select committee. Among those who express that view are all the officers of the house who were consulted—Mr. Speaker, the chairman of ways and means, the deputy chairman, and the clerk of the house. We are unanimously of the same opinion.

We recommend that at the beginning of each session there should be appointed, by the customary procedure, two standing committees on estimates, each consisting of 15 members. After some experience of the working of these committees, it may be found desirable to add a third.

We have considered the alternative of a single committee with a larger membership, which should divide itself into a number of subcommittees, each dealing with one department or group of departments, but we have arrived at the conclusion that for the purpose in view the balance of advantage lies against this method.

We have considered also whether the committees which will deal with estimates should also deal with accounts, the public accounts committee being amalgamated with them. We are of opinion that the two matters should be kept separate, and that the public accounts committee should continue with the same composition and functions as hitherto. It would be advisable, however, for some of its members to be appointed to serve on the estimates committees also, in order that the bodies should be in close touch with each other's work.

9. The annual estimates should, without special motion, be subject to the examination of the estimates committees A and B, the allocation of classes of votes to one or the other being made by the chairman of ways and means.

10. Any supplementary estimates for the current year introduced at the beginning of the session could not as a rule be examined by the estimates committees on account of the shortness of the time usually available before the 31st of March, by which date they must be passed through all their stages. But in special cases, and if time allowed, the house might desire them to be so referred. Supplementary estimates introduced in the latter part of the session should follow the normal course and be referred to the committee. We desire incidentally to emphasize the importance of limiting the use of supplementary estimates to a minimum.

11. It would be the duty of the estimates committees to consider such votes, and in such order as they might think fit, and to present reports upon them from time to time to the house. We are of opinion that special attention should be given to any items which had first been voted in the previous year as supplementary estimates without having been reported upon by one of the committees. The reports should include an account of the action taken on any recommendations in the previous year's report.

12. It should not be within the competence of the committees to make any recommendations inconsistent with the policy implied in the estimates. Policy is a matter for the Government and for the house itself and not for standing committees on estimates. To transgress this rule would be to invite controversy within the committees and to endanger the success of their working.

Although "policy" can not be defined in precise terms, the experience of the estimates committee set up in 1912 and of our own committee—from both of whose references the consideration of matters of policy was specifically excluded—shows that in practice the line is not difficult to draw.

13. The House of Commons itself has foregone the power, and does not now seek the power, to increase the estimates submitted to it on behalf of the Crown. Its committees can not possess a larger authority. The duty of the estimates committees would be to suggest desirable economies, and they should not be authorized to propose increased expenditure. There may no doubt be cases, however, in which it might be proper to indicate that a larger capital expenditure, for example, upon the plant of some Government establishment, would result in an economy through a more than equivalent saving in working expenses.

14. The estimates committee of 1912, 1913, and 1914 was appointed in pursuance of a recommendation of the select committee on national expenditure of 1902–3. It rendered useful service, but its usefulness was impaired by three causes.

First, the task imposed upon it was too large for a single body to perform. It was able to consider each year only a fraction of the estimates; its examination of the votes of any particular department was rather an exceptional incident than a normal part of the financial procedure. The departments knew that once their estimates had been considered it would probably be from 7 to 10 years before they were considered again. Our proposals for two committees—and, if experience shows it to be desirable, for the addition of a third—should go far to remove this drawback, particularly if each of the committees were expected to give as much time as might be necessary to enable it to cover each session a large part of the whole field.

Secondly, the previous committee, in common with the house itself, was handicapped by the form in which the estimates have been framed. As to this we have proposed large changes in a separate report, to which we shall refer later.

The third drawback was not the least serious. The estimates committee of those years had no professional assistance at its command. Its inquiries, necessarily, were to a great extent haphazard. The annual estimates cover the whole sphere of national government; they enter into minute detail; to comprehend them fully is a science in itself. The public accounts committee is aided in its investigations by the reports of the comptroller and auditor general, who in turn is supplied with information by a large staff in close touch with every branch of administration. The previous estimates committee had no such technical advice. We regard it as essential that this deficiency should be made good.

We have considered whether the duty of assisting the estimates committees might not be added to those already performed by the comptroller and auditor general and his staff. This course would have the advantage of making use of existing machinery. But we are clearly of opinion that it is inadvisable, for the reason, among others, that it would introduce undesirable complications into the relations between the comptroller and auditor general and his department on the one hand and the treasury and the spending departments on the other.

We have considered also whether the duty might not be allotted to the treasury itself. To this there is the objection that every estimate before being presented to Parliament has already been submitted to the treasury and passed. Once its sanction has been given the function of the treasury must rather be to meet and answer criticism than to stimulate and direct it. It would be desirable, no doubt, that officers of that department should be ready to attend the meetings of the committees whenever necessary, in order to furnish them with information; but they would be placed in an impossible position if they were expected to suggest the points, which might usefully be considered with a view to amendments, in estimates which had already been approved by the department of which they were members and by the ministers under whom they served.

We therefore recommend that the committees should be assisted by an officer of the house, to be appointed for the purpose, with the title of examiner of estimates. His duty would be to collect from his own study of the estimates, from information obtained officially or semi-officially, from communications received from members of the house or from the public, facts which would indicate to the estimates committees useful lines of inquiry. He would stand in much the same relation to them as the comptroller and auditor general stands to the public accounts committee. His salary would be borne upon the vote for the House of Commons offices. It would not be necessary to attach to him any large specialized staff, but experience might show that it was desirable to furnish him with one or more technical assistants, and the clerical establishment of the house would render such service as might be required.

15. There remains the question of the opportunity to be provided for the consideration by the house of the recommendations of the estimates committees.

It has not been proposed in any quarter, and we do not suggest, that the decisions of the committees should have any binding effect. The House of Commons would not delegate to them any of its powers in matters of finance; their province would be limited to inquiry and report. But no doubt in many cases the departments concerned would accept and act upon the view expressed by the committees, just as the recommendations of the public accounts committee and of our own committee with respect to current expenditure are frequently welcomed by the Government and carried into effect, without it being necessary to occupy the time of the house with their discussion. It is essential, however, if the work of the committees is to be effective, if their influence is to be maintained, and if they are to attract the service of able and active members of the house, that their recommendations, when not agreed to, should be given the publicity, the full consideration, and the opportunity of eliciting a wider support, which can only be obtained by debate in the house itself.

The most suitable occasion for such a purpose is obviously the day when the estimates of the department concerned are taken in committee of supply. Several considerations, however, have to be borne in mind in this connection. Supply days are utilized also for debates on policy and on administration, and opportunities for such debates are indispensable. The department whose estimates are to be taken on a particular supply day is selected in accordance with the desires of the house, so as to enable the matters to be brought forward on which discussion is thought to be specially needed at that time. It is a convenient practice for the consideration of supply to be distributed over the session, and for one day in the week to be devoted as a rule to that purpose. Any arrangements that are made to secure the due consideration of the recommendations of the estimates committees should involve as little disturbance as possible of those arrangements.

16. We propose—

(1) That the estimates should be presented and the estimates committees set up at the earliest practicable date after the beginning of the session.

(2) That the committees should indicate to the chairman of ways and means at an early stage in their proceedings the classes or votes, if any, on which they did not propose to report that session, unless unforeseen considerations should arise which would lead them to do so.

(3) That the committees should consider the estimates of the several departments in such order, so far as possible, as would be most likely to meet the convenience of the house, and should present their report on each as soon as their inquiries with regard to it were completed.

(4) That the selection of the votes to be taken in the house on any particular supply day should be, as a rule, from among those on which the estimates committees had already presented reports or had intimated that they would be unlikely to report that year. This practice should not, however, preclude other votes being selected if there were a strong desire to debate matters of public importance relating to a department on whose vote a report from the estimates committees was expected but had not yet been received.

(5) That in the latter case either—

(a) The vote itself should not be finally passed, but the discussion of it should be deferred. Another day should be given if a report subsequently presented by one of the estimates committees contained recommendations needing discussion. If there were no such report, the vote would be passed under the closure at the end of the session; or

(b) A supplementary estimate for a token vote of £100 should be proposed at a later date in order to afford an opportunity for further debate if a report from an estimates committee made it appear desirable.

It should be the recognized practice of the house that the estimates committees should have the right to require that special opportunity should be afforded for the consideration of any of their reports which had not been discussed in ordinary course, subject to the limit that not more than two days should be asked for in any session for this purpose.

(6) That where recommendations from an estimates committee were before the house in time for the supply day on which the vote was taken to which those recommendations referred, the chairman of ways and means should endeavor so to arrange the course of the debate as to give an opportunity for their discussion. He would bear in mind the relative importance of the financial points raised by the committee and of any other matters which members of the house might desire to discuss on the same day. If it should be found impracticable to afford such an opportunity, the procedure suggested in the previous paragraph to meet the case where the votes were taken before the estimates committee's report was ready should apply.

(7) That it should be the duty of the chairman of an estimates committee, or of some other member nominated for the purpose, to be present in the house when the occasion was offered for the discussion of its recommendations, and to speak in their support, and the duty of the minister in charge of the vote either to accept the recommendations or to give reasons for not doing so.

FREEDOM OF VOTING IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY.

17. We are convinced that these measures, while they would go far to secure the object in view, would not be adequate for their purpose without one further change of fundamental importance in the practice of the house. The spirit in which the proposed committees will carry on their work, the attitude of ministers toward their recommendations, the confidence of the people at large in their activities, will all depend upon the degree of support which they are enabled to receive from the House of Commons itself. But the house will not be free to give them support so long as the present convention continues, which introduces into every division on a proposal of the government of the day, however unimportant, however remote from broad considerations of national policy, the question of confidence or want of confidence in that government. It is plain that if, on a division on some minor economy in a departmental estimate, a majority adverse to the Government is to be regarded as a censure, even as a reason for its resignation, or for subjecting the country to a general election, the smaller issue must be completely eclipsed by the larger, and that a decision on the merits of the particular question must become impossible. Only when the House of Commons is free, not merely in theory and under the forms of the constitution but in fact and in custom, to vote, when the occasion requires, upon the strict merits of proposed economies, uncomplicated by any wider issue, will its control over the national expenditure become a reality.

The estimates committees will be precluded from dealing with policy. That limitation should exclude from their recommendations any proposals which, if carried against the Government, should properly entail either their resignation or a dissolution of Parliament.

We recommend that the House of Commons, if it approves and decides to act upon our proposals for the establishment of estimates committees, should also resolve that any motion carried in committee of supply in pursuance of the recommendations of those committees should not be taken to imply that the government of the day no longer possessed the confidence of the house.

FORM OF THE ESTIMATES AND ACCOUNTS.

18. The form in which the estimates have hitherto been framed is not such as to make them serviceable for the purposes of parliamentary review. We have made inquiry into this branch of the matters referred to us through a subcommittee, on which several of our members served who were also members of the public accounts committee, and to which there were co-opted, under the permission given by our terms of reference, a civil servant of long experience and three gentlemen with expert knowledge of commercial systems of accounting. As the outcome of their exhaustive inquiries we have expressed the opinion in our seventh report of this session that "estimates and accounts prepared on the present basis are of little value for purposes of control, either by departments, the treasury, or Parliament," and we have recommended that they should be remodeled in a form of greater significance and utility.

We regard the adoption of the recommendations in our seventh report as an essential part of our proposals for securing a proper control over expenditure by Parliament.

19. Their adoption will require that in the case of the estimates for the navy, army, and air force a vote on account should be taken at the beginning of the session, as is already the practice in the case of civil-service estimates. But in any event such a vote on account will be necessary to enable the procedure proposed in paragraph 16 to be fully applicable to the estimates for those services.

20. We are of opinion that when an estimate includes an item for the initiation of a new scheme which is likely to throw an increasing charge upon the exchequer in subsequent years a statement should, as a general rule, be added, showing the amount of that increase, as is already the practice with regard to estimates for building services, and as has occasionally been done by a memorandum in some other cases. Reasons of state may sometimes, however, render this course inadvisable, in which event the information should be subsequently furnished to the estimates committee concerned.

21. A useful return was presented to Parliament in 1909, on the motion of Mr. Harold Cox, under the title of "National Income and Outgo." It gave a comprehensive view of both sides of the national account, and included financial information not readily obtainable elsewhere. The new form of the national accounts recommended in our seventh report will cover some of the ground included in that return. We are of opinion that the public accounts committee, when experience has been gained of the new accounts, should be invited to consider whether it might not be desirable to publish annually a return similar to that of 1909.

MONEY RESOLUTIONS FOR BILLS.

22. We have given careful consideration to the standing orders of the house, which require that all bills involving expenditure should be preceded or accompanied by a resolution, to be passed in committee of the whole house and in the house itself on report, authorizing the expenditure. We are of opinion that the rule serves a useful purpose, but that its utility could be further increased. We recommend that the procedure with respect to money resolutions for Government bills involving expenditure should be retained and should be extended as follows:

(1) The terms of the money resolution should be placed on the notice paper of the house. In the case of bills not originating in committee, this should be done before the second reading of the bill.

(2) They should, wherever possible, either comprise a statement of the probable expenditure, whether capital or annual, or be accompanied by a white paper furnishing such a statement.

(3) If cases should occur where the conditions did not allow a forecast to be made, the fact should be stated in a white paper, with a full explanation of the reasons.

(4) Any statement furnished as proposed in the foregoing paragraphs should be referred to one of the estimates committees for examination and report, unless the house, on account of urgency or of the smallness of the sum involved, should by resolution dispense with that procedure in the particular case.

(5) It should be the duty of the committee to elucidate the facts and to examine the basis of any estimate that may have been formed or the reasons advanced for not forming one. The purpose in view would not be the insertion of a definite figure in a bill in all cases, for that would often be impracticable or injurious to good administration. It should be remembered also that any expenditure incurred must always, unless charged upon the consolidated fund, come before the house each year in one of the estimates. The purpose would be to insure that Parliament should not pass legislation involving financial commitments without a clear idea, based on the inquiries of one of its own committees, of the nature and extent of those commitments, so far as they can be ascertained.

(6) The recommendations in this report with respect to the exclusion of questions of policy and to the freedom of voting in the house on the proposals of the estimates committees should apply in the case of money resolutions as in the case of estimates.

In the case of private members' bills involving expenditure, the procedure proposed in this paragraph should apply if and when a money resolution to authorize the expenditure is moved on behalf of the Crown.

OTHER PROPOSALS.

23. We have considered a number of suggestions for eliminating or curtailing various stages of the procedure by which the house deals with financial business, but we do not recommend any of them for adoption.

24. We have no alteration to suggest in the number of days allotted each session to supply.

25. The estimates for which one minister is responsible are frequently distributed between several votes. It would be advisable for the existing classification to be reviewed in the manner proposed by the joint secretaries of the treasury in their reply to our questions. (See appendix, reply No. 20, question 8.)

26. It is the present practice for the comptroller and auditor general to report to the public accounts committee only when the annual accounts of a department are finally closed. His staff conduct a continuous audit, but if any matters needing attention are brought to light in the course of the year he has no authority to report upon them. We are of opinion that it would add greatly to the value of the audit and conduce to good administration if this restriction were removed, and if the attention of the public accounts committee could be called at once to any apparent impropriety before the expenditure is completed. An amendment to the exchequer and audit departments act, 1866, may be needed for the purpose.

27. We consider that the ministry as a whole should be responsible both for making and for declining to make proposals to Parliament for increased expenditure. There have been departures in recent years from the practice by which an individual minister was not considered at liberty to dissociate himself publicly from his colleagues, and, while himself retaining office, to throw upon the treasury the onus of refusing a particular grant affecting his own department. We deprecate these departures, which, if they became the rule, would make the position of a chancellor of the exchequer almost untenable. We recommend that the former practice should be rigidly observed.

28. We believe that the Treasury can not fully exercise its powers of control if it is itself a spending department, and we recommend that the direct responsibility for old-age pensions, which now rests with the board of customs and excise, a subdepartment of the treasury, should be transferred as soon as may be to another department.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.

29. (1) We are of opinion that the existing procedure of the House of Commons is inadequate to secure proper parliamentary control over the national expenditure.

(2) We recommend that there should be appointed each session two standing committees on estimates, each consisting of 15 members, and that a third should be added if experience showed that this was desirable.

(3) It should be the duty of the committees to consider the annual estimates and such supplementary estimates as the conditions allowed, and to report to the house any economies which they regarded as desirable and which did not raise questions of policy.

(4) For the assistance of the committees there should be appointed an officer of the house, with the title of examiner of estimates.

(5) Opportunity should be provided for the consideration by the house of the recommendations of the committees in the manner proposed in paragraph 16.

(6) It should be established as the practice of Parliament that members should vote freely upon motions for reductions made in pursuance of recommendations of the estimates committees, and that the carrying of such a motion against the government of the day should not be taken to imply that it no longer possessed the confidence of the house.

(7) The form in which the estimates are framed should be remodeled in accordance with the recommendations in our seventh report of the present session.

(8) There should be a vote on account for navy, army, and air services at the beginning of each session.

(9) Where an estimate involves a commitment to a larger expenditure in subsequent years, the fact should, subject to the qualification mentioned in paragraph 20, be stated in the estimate.

(10) The terms of money resolutions for bills involving expenditure should be placed upon the notice paper of the house. They should embody or be accompanied by a white paper furnishing a statement of the probable amount. If the conditions did not allow such a statement to be framed, a white paper should be presented giving the reasons.

(11) Any statement furnished in connection with a money resolution should be referred to one of the estimates committees for examination and report, unless the House should dispense with that procedure in any particular case.

(12) The classification of the supply votes should be reviewed.

(13) The comptroller and auditor general should be authorized to report to the public accounts committee on matters needing their attention as and when they are brought to light in the course of his continuous audit.

(14) The committee of public accounts should be invited to consider whether a return on the lines of the national income and outgo return of 1909 should be presented annually to Parliament.

(15) A minister should not be at liberty to dissociate himself publicly from his colleagues in matters of expenditure and to throw upon the treasury alone the onus of refusing a particular grant affecting his department.

(16) The treasury should cease to be itself a spending department.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY:
Page 1, line 3, after the word "Senators," insert the following: "three of whom shall be members of the majority party and three of whom shall be members of the minority party."
Page 1, line 5, after the word "Representatives," insert the following: "three of whom shall be members of the majority party and three of whom shall be members of the minority party."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is altogether desirable to have that amendment to the resolution. It might be well to leave the appointments wholly with the Vice President and the Speaker. Let the responsibility fall upon them. At first blush I was inclined to oppose this resolution and to make a point of order against it, because I believed that would be in order; but after listening to the gentleman from Kentucky I am inclined to think it might be a wise thing to pass the resolution as a step toward retrenchment. Anyone who sits for any length of time on the Ways and Means Committee will realize the very great difficulty of ascertaining facts with regard to our expenditures. I presume the Committee on Appropriations has even more difficulty, but the committee charged with the duty of raising revenue undoubtedly has very little in the way of substantial financial facts to go upon. They call in the Treasury officials and ask them what the state of the finances is, and they are sometimes troubled to give an answer. Ask what our indebtedness is and there is difficulty in ascertaining just exactly what it is at any given time. The Secretary of the Treasury, apparently, does not have sufficient jurisdiction as to other departments to check up the expenditures and requirements of the departments. The War Department has been given large lump-sum appropriations and spends freely, spends in contracts that carry over into the future. The Navy Department does the same thing. So, if you want to check up your accounts, if you want to take account of stock, it is difficult to do it. Great waste undoubtedly results. I believe this Nation to-day is very close to the rocks, financially.

If the $7,000,000,000 loan bill that we passed in this House a few days ago does not pass another body very soon, it may necessarily hasten an extra session in order to raise the revenue to meet the actual obligations of the Government. That is one question involved in the passage of this resolution.

I am not so sure, however, that this whole question has not been investigated heretofore. But we have just gone through a great war; we have incurred the vastest expenditures any nation ever incurred, and our obligations are such as to stagger us when we attempt to analyze them. If this resolution will have the effect of an investigation or an inquiry by Members of Congress that will enable us to systematize the method of collecting the revenue and appropriating it, it might do some good.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Pardon me for just one minute. This administration is spending more money than any other; it is spending it more recklessly, more extravagantly than any other in the history of the world; therefore there may be reason at this particular time to have a commission appointed in order that we may enact some reform. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KING. Why is it necessary to have this lame-duck proposition involved in this amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not so sure, after reading the resolution and considering these vast problems I have tried to describe, that this is necessarily a lame-duck proposition. It may be a very good thing. The departments have made tremendous expenditures. We should stop some of them. All of us are complaining of our lack of knowledge of the manner in which the money has been spent. All of us know that in the matter of aviation, for instance, we spent $640,000,000 and did not get a single combat plane in France. We know that in the Army and in the Navy and elsewhere enormous sums have been spent and enormous sums have been held in reserve. We know we are passing appropriations constantly for sums aggregating as high as a billion and more than a billion of dollars. How are we checking them up? What is to be the salvage? How do we know when the Treasury officials themselves are not able to tell us? Therefore may it not be wise to establish a commission made up of men who are not in the departments, who are separate from the administration, separate from the Executive, who can look into this question and bring us back to a system by which we can make appropriations intelligently and with due regard to our income?

Mr. KING. On that proposition I agree with the gentleman absolutely, but I do not understand this proposition of keeping Members of Congress here on the salary roll after they have been defeated by their constituents.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, I do not think that is necessarily the fact. The resolution provides for a commission which shall be composed of six Senators to be appointed by the Vice President. They are not necessarily going out, and it provides for a like number of Members to be appointed by the Speaker, and they are sitting Members. There is an appropriation to pay the expenses of the commission, but I question whether it is a "lame-duck" proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I drew this resolution, and I drew it with the idea not in the slightest degree to take care of anybody. I stated openly a few moments ago, and I desire to repeat it, that there is no commission that this Congress can create or has created upon which I would accept any sort of position. Whatever work I may be able to give in helping to bring out a good budget system for America will be given gratuitously. I am not hunting a legislative job nor providing for such through legislation.

Mr. KING. I wish to say that I had no reference whatever to the gentleman from Kentucky. If he were going to be one of the commission, I would be very glad to support that particular feature.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I take advantage of those two minutes' extension of time to state my confident belief that the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky is accurate.

I have watched his course in this House for 12 years, the length of time I have been here, and do not believe he has prepared this amendment with the view of taking care of himself. On the other hand, I think it fair to say of the gentleman from Kentucky that he has been a consistent advocate of an improved fiscal policy for the Nation. He has labored for this proposition on the floor; has made speeches indicating that there was extravagance, not necessarily accusing anybody, but that because of the system that prevailed, the duplicated committee system of making appropriations, there has been a loss to the Government that should not exist. His idea, from my point of view, has been honorable and statesmanlike. He has sought to prevent the duplication of appropriations and the waste of them, so far as I have observed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold my motion. The gentleman from Illinois desires recognition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I have given a good deal of consideration myself during my service in the Congress to the subject of appropriations and the methods of making estimates for appropriations, and I have heard a great many men at different times on the floor of the House propose remedies which seemed to me so full of holes that they would be worse than a sieve to hold water.

I am glad the gentleman from Kentucky worked out this proposition. It is a peculiar thing, he having given the study that he has to the subject, and I having given the study I have to the subject, that each has prepared a proposition along practically the same lines. And when I prepared my proposition originally it did not contain the provision which would permit a Member of this Congress not a Member of the next Congress to be appointed on the commission and retain his place. I changed that and provided that the vacancy created by the expiration of the term in Congress of any Member should not create a vacancy on the commission, and I think in that respect the gentleman from Kentucky, in drawing his amendment, follows the language of my resolution without having in view on his part what was in view in my mind when I put that provision in the resolution. It was not in the proposition which I drew originally. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not feel obliged to make any statement just at present about what I am going to say. I put that proposition in my resolution because I thought the gentleman from Kentucky ought to be on the commission [applause], and I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] ought to be on the commission [applause], men who have given great study to a subject of this kind and who would continue the work and would not be hampered by the work which Members of the next Congress would have to perform in their official capacity here on the floor and in their offices. I think a majority of the members of the commission ought to be Members of the next Congress, in a way supervisory. There ought to be somebody on this commission who is familiar with the legislative methods and procedure, to give active attention to the work.

We appointed a good many years ago, as it seems to me—it was quite awhile ago anyhow, and I do not remember what it was called—a commission to investigate the form of appropriations and estimates, and so forth, and they submitted a report. I read their report and talked with various members of that commission, and there was not one of them who had any knowledge or perception whatever of the legislative practice and procedure in Congress.

Such a commission could not make a report that would be of any value, and their report was of no value. I am inclined myself—and I would like to say that much before I take my seat—to think there will never be a wholly satisfactory method provided, though there may be many improvements adopted, until members of the President's Cabinet are selected either from the House of Representatives or the Senate [applause], and thereby become somewhat of a responsible Government. It can not be and it never will be that the executives shall make up a so-called budget and submit it to Congress, and that all Congress can do is to accept it or reject it. We are now under subserviency to the Government, to the Executive, much more than we ought to be. But if all we could do would be to write yes or no upon a proposition submitted by the Executive for the expenditure of money we might as well abolish Congress. [Applause.]

Now, in those countries where they have responsible governments the government makes those suggestions. They prepare a budget; they submit the proposed appropriations to their respective parliaments, and the parliaments must make the appropriations proposed by the government or the government is turned out. But the government can be turned out because the government consists of members of the parliament; and if the parliament does not sustain their position, others come in their place. But that can not be under our form of government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes, although I will not take that much of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois to permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. It is always agreeable to yield to a question which helps to elucidate a matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman think that the budget system which he is now so intelligently discussing would be promoted by giving the Cabinet members seats on the floor of the respective bodies——

Mr. MANN. I do not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to continue the question? Seats on the floor of the respective bodies, with right to follow measures relating to their departments and also the corresponding right on the part of the House to interrogate them, of course, under appropriate rules of procedure?

Mr. MANN. I have a very fixed opinion on that. I do not think it would be of any advantage. [Applause.] I can be very brief; I do not want to take much time——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not mean to lead the gentleman into a discussion. I wanted his opinion categorically.

Mr. MANN. If the Cabinet members now were admitted to the floor of the House on an appropriation bill, this side would be inert. It would be completely dominated by the Cabinet officers.

That side of the House, the minority side of the House, would do nothing to heckle them. [Applause.] If a Cabinet officer came in here to explain a proposition now, under the existing administration, with no power or responsibility, the Republican side of the House would ask them all the questions human ingenuity could devise which they could not answer, and the Democratic side of the House would do whatever they told them to do. [Applause.] If they did not, the Cabinet officers would be discredited but not removed.

The only way to have a responsible government, with an Executive given the power to propose and dominate legislation or appropriations, is to fix it so that if a majority of the House does not agree with them they have got to resign. Let the majority of the House have somebody who will agree with them. I do not know whether that will ever come or not, though I suspect that this thing will go on until some day the President will feel compelled to adopt the theory of a responsible form of government and select his Cabinet officers from men who have the power to make up their proposed appropriations and therefore pass them through Congress, or when defeated resign their Cabinet positions and let somebody else do it.

However, this present proposal is a proposition in the right direction. We can not afford to have the country believe that Congress is grossly extravagant and careless in its appropriations, unmindful of the public needs. There has been a propaganda—and I have just learned what effect a propaganda can have [applause]—against Congress in favor of adopting what is called the "budget system," which nobody can explain, and nobody undertakes to tell what they mean by it. But the propaganda has gone over the country until the country believes that Congress has a very loose and lamentable method of making up its appropriations. I received from my State the other day a copy of the "Budget of Illinois," proposed by the governor or his financial board, to be submitted to the legislature, now in session, for the next two years. They call it a "budget"—a popular name. It does not begin to be one-half as well prepared and considered as the estimates of appropriations submitted to Congress under existing law, although it is a great improvement over what has been done in Illinois in the past. But the country has the notion that Congress acts upon its appropriations without receiving information from the Executive, without any idea of what its revenues are to be, without any notion of what its expenditures are to be, and without any knowledge on the part of the Executive as to what he has asked for; and we have got to make a careful and scientific investigation of the subject, first, to satisfy ourselves and possibly and probably accomplish good, and, second, to satisfy the country that we are not an irresponsible body of looters. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, at one time and another there has been a great deal of talk in the country about a budget system, and a great many people imagine that we can establish under our Government a budget system similar to that of the responsible monarchical and republican governments of Europe. The probability is that that could not be accomplished without a constitutional amendment, at least without very extraordinary and elastic constitutional interpretation.

No one is proposing a change in the form of our Government that would clearly make possible budgets as they are understood in England and Italy and France, but there can be a great improvement, in my opinion, in the manner of presenting and consideration of appropriations. Those who have served on appropriating committees of the House, I think, are all of them of the opinion that there is a lack of careful and correlated consideration of estimates. The annual Book of Estimates comes in, and then from time to time supplemental estimates of all sorts and kinds, apparently frequently hurriedly prepared and ill considered, are sent to Congress.

That is the affair of the Executive. It is not very clear to me how Congress can much improve that situation. The executive branch of the Government can very greatly improve its methods. President Taft was the one President in my recollection who made an earnest and intelligent effort toward the careful, conscientious, and correlated consideration of estimates, and under his administration there was a constant tendency toward economy in the public service. But we have seen nothing of that kind since Mr. Taft's day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was unable in my time to get out this point, and I want the gentleman, who is well posted, to answer, if he will: Suppose the War Department under existing methods asked for $500,000,000 for aviation, and the Navy Department under existing circumstances asked for $500,000,000 for aviation, and one or two others——

Mr. MONDELL. And I would say to my friend that they would be very likely to do that very thing——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And thereby buy a vast number of machines and a vast lot of machinery under both appropriations, when one might have accomplished the purpose. Would not this commission be delegated to look into expenditures of that kind with a view to correcting the system?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not very clear to me, though I do not pretend to have as profound a knowledge of these matters as some Members who have given the matter more study, how the Congress can greatly improve the executive methods in the preparation and submission of estimates. We can suggest, and we may be able to compel more careful consideration of estimates by improving our methods, and along with that improvement calling to the attention of the country the laxity and the carelessness of the executive departments in submitting estimates. In that way indirectly what we do in Congress will, I trust, be reflected on the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I interject a remark about aviation, inasmuch as the gentleman has brought it up?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Some years ago the War Department declined to make a recommendation or estimate for aviation in the Army, and they did not make it. There never had been one, and the Chief Signal Officer hoped he might get an estimate, but the Secretary of War would not send an estimate to the Congress. I offered on the floor of the House an amendment to the Army appropriation bill to make an appropriation for aviation, and through a little skillful maneuvering got it by a point of order. But we had quite a fight over it. It was agreed to.

Now, under the system that many people want adopted, it would not have been possible for Congress to have made the appropriation and started aviation in the Army if the War Department had not asked for it, and they refused to ask for it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has called attention to a situation that might be created if Congress restricted its action to initiate appropriations. Replying further to the inquiry of the genleman from Pennsylvania, I want to emphasize the fact that, in my opinion, we can promote, if not compel, an improvement of executive committees by improvement in our own methods. Certainly no one conversant with the facts will deny that, putting it mildly, the manner of the submission of estimates by certain departments and agencies under this administration has been scandalous and apparently without regard to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Estimates have been submitted without the proper coordinated and correlated consideration by the executive authorities that there should be, this bureau and that bureau and the other bureau, each on its own hook, suggesting estimates in large sums and having its suggestions sent to Congress without very much consideration. We can remedy that situation somewhat if we correct our own methods. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has performed a conspicuous service in remedying that condition, assuming that gentlemen who are to be responsible in the departments act on what he has brought out, for he has developed, more than any man ever did in the House, the carelessness, to put it mildly, with which estimates are submitted to the Congress.

Now, we can improve our methods, and we ought to improve our methods, and possibly one way to do it is through a commission such as is suggested, although it could be accomplished, I think, by the regular committees of the House. If we are to have a commission, one of less numbers than is proposed would be better.

I want to say in connection with this matter that I regret that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has stated that under no circumstances would he serve on such a commission, for I know of no man better qualified to serve on that kind of a commission than he; and if the commission is established, I hope one of those places will be tendered to him, and that he will find he can afford to take it. If he does, of course it will be at a financial loss, because the gentleman from Kentucky can go into private practice and make a very great deal more for himself and his family than he could on any Government salary. But what we need is some one thoroughly conversant with the practice of the House, with the history of appropriations and estimates, on a commission of this sort.

Those who imagine that we are going to ape and adopt European methods will be disappointed in the reports of any commission that we appoint, but there are many things that can be done, and one of them that is right in sight and has appealed to every man who has served on appropriating committees is the establishment of what has sometimes been referred to as an independent audit. It might be brought about by the transfer of the auditing departments of the Government to the Capitol, where they would be more nearly within the reach of Congress and more nearly responsible to Congress, so that the expenditures as they are made might be audited by people in no wise connected with the administrative departments that spend the money. That would be a great reform. I cast no reflection on the auditing agencies of the Government. Those officials have performed their duty with honesty and fidelity, and generally with intelligence and thoroughness, but as a matter of practice the Government audit should be independent of the department that spends the money, and so far as connected with any branch of the Government they should be connected with the branch of the Government that votes the funds. So much for that.

Now, in connection with such an independent audit there ought to be a body of men prepared and qualified to inform the committees of Congress relative to expenditures. Every man who has ever served on an appropriating committee has time after time been brought to realize the helplessness of such a committee, the hopeless helplessness of such a committee at times, in getting at the real essential facts with regard to expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for a further extension of three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. A body of men connected with an independent audit, whose business it was to keep constantly in touch with expenditures, whose duty it was to know the way in which expenditures were being made, and the purposes for which they were being made, could serve the appropriating committees of Congress, and not leave them, as they now are sometimes, the victims of the ex parte testimony which is presented by those who are seeking appropriations, and who, however honest and well meaning they may be, color all their arguments in line with their views of what ought to be done, and in extenuation of all that has been done. Everyone who has served on an appropriating committee has realized that if the chairman of such a committee could have at his elbow men who could prepare data and statements and make suggestions as to expenditures, such assistance would be of tremendous value to him and to the House. I hope we will have a commission. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] will find that he can afford to be the head of such a commission; and I want to second the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois that a splendid member of such a commission would be the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee only a moment longer about this matter, and I hope that in a few moments we can vote on it and go forward with the bill. I appreciate—I would be less than human if I did not appreciate—the very generous things that Members of the House have seen fit to say about me. But the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has many burdens and responsibilities placed upon him, and there is no consideration which could make me feel that I could accept a position upon a commission created by a bill coming from my committee. When the Speaker was good enough to say to me that he would like to appoint me on two other commissions I said to him that I would not accept appointment. I do not like to talk about myself or to have this matter take a personal turn; but I want to make it perfectly plain that while I am glad to give anything of value that I can to my Government in the way of suggestion and information, there is no condition under which I would accept a place upon this commission or employment under it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already pending two amendments to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Then I will offer this as a substitute.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that the other amendments pending may be voted on first.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky. There are two amendments, similar in their terms, and the Chair will have them submitted together.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments to the amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 1, line 3, after the word "Senators," insert "three of whom shall be members of the majority party and three of whom shall be members of the minority party"; page 1, line 5, after the word "Representatives," insert "three of whom shall be members of the majority party and three of whom shall be members of the minority party."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 8, after the word "members," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

"Provided, That the Senators shall be Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress and the Representatives elect shall be Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in the legislative bill, which has not yet been approved, there is a provision for a commission to classify and readjust salaries, and from an intimation given by the Speaker this morning that commission is to be a so-called "lame duck" affair. When the conference report was presented to the House it was read without having been printed, without an opportunity for Members to find out what was in it, and without anybody, as far as I know, except the conferees and possibly one or two others, knowing that changes had been made in the manner in which that commission should be selected.

I submit that we ought to see to it that if we are to authorize the appointment of a commission of this kind and importance it should not be created so as to provide for Members who may have been unsuccessful in the late elections.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] would be a most competent man to serve upon this commission, but he has indicated his preference not to accept an appointment on that commission, and his determination is entitled to highest praise. I submit that we ought to see to it, with respect to this very important commission, that it shall not go out to the country that in the closing hours of this Congress the Democratic majority and the Democratic Speaker are authorized to appoint "lame ducks," so called, to commissions without a protest on the part of somebody.

Why, the commission on classification of salaries, provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, if I may be permitted to say so, as will be named by the Speaker—with no intention of casting any reflection upon the Members suggested or upon our beloved Speaker—will be composed of men who have no particular qualifications whatever to recommend them, as far as intimate knowledge of the classified service is concerned, except it would seem that they will not be Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress. I submit that upon these commissions we ought not to authorize appointments which will carry additional expenditures on account of services rendered, but we ought to have members on it who will be here in the next Congress, and who will be associated with and related to the problems they are considering.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman had something to say a few moments ago with reference to the commission provided for in the legislative appropriation bill, the commission on classification and readjustment of salaries. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when that report was presented the statement was read to the House, and if the gentleman will examine the RECORD he will find that having charge of the report I made an explicit and clear statement of the exact terms of that provision to the House. I do not think the gentleman's criticism is justified, if I understood him correctly.

Mr. WALSH. I meant no personal criticism of the gentleman from Tennessee. He presented the report, as he was at liberty to do, under the rules of the House during the last six days of the session without it being printed, and made a statement which at times could not be heard but by few owing to the confusion, which sometimes occurs when we are dealing with conference reports, and very few could follow intelligently the changes that had been made.

When we were considering the legislative bill originally in the House, I think I made a point of order, or somebody did, and it went to the Senate, where a provision was included providing that the Members of the Senate and the House on that commission should be Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress, but it had another proviso, to the effect that if the Senators or Representatives who will not be Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress were willing to serve on the commission they might be appointed to it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The original provision as reported by the House Committee on Appropriations provided that members of that commission should be Members of the Sixty-sixth or succeeding Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can not agree upon debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. FESS. I want five minutes.

Mr. MAGEE. I want 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the five minutes just given to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, 10 minutes to be given to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, 10 minutes to be given to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I yield further to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The House Committee on Appropriations recommended a provision which provided that the members of the commission should be appointed from the membership of the Sixty-sixth Congress. It went out on a point of order. The Senate adopted the provision, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts just referred, requiring that the commission should be composed of the retiring Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress, in the event any of them were willing to serve. The bill as it came from the conferees was a compromise between the position of the House committee, which was for a commission composed of Members of the next Congress, and the action of the Senate, which provided for the appointment of retiring Members, if they were willing to serve. The commission as reported is to consist of Members of the Congress to be appointed by the presiding officers of each House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the rule with respect to remarks concerning Members of the other body, but I want to compliment the other branch of the legislative department of the Government upon the fact that they have three first-class humorists in their membership, if this is a compromise. I recall, and gentlemen here will recall, that the present minority party some years ago, when it was a majority party, received the condemnation of the press and people of the country for the action it had taken as it was going out of power in making possible the appointment of members of its own party to jobs and places upon commissions carrying salaries, and, if I mistake not, that was the time the phrase "lame duck" originated or when it was revived and brought into popular usage once more. We are embarking upon an unwise policy, and I want to protest, as one member of the minority. If we are going to appoint commissions to study these important questions, they should be made up of Members of the Congress which will begin on the 4th day of March, and not of men who will go out of public office on that day, and who will because of their service upon these commissions require additional expenditure of money to pay for their services.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know of any bigger job that confronts anyone than the question of reclassifying and readjusting the salaries of Government employees, and I want to say to the gentleman that it is going to require the entire time of men who are appointed upon that commission——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech. I want to say, however, that there is one bigger job than that, and that job is to seek to conserve the finances of the Treasury of the United States, and it is about time we began to do it. [Applause.] During the last three days of this session we will be confronted with legislation that will be brought in here under one pretext and another which will require the expenditure of hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars in addition to the expenditures we have already made, and it is time that some of us were struck with a streak of economy, even though we do have to practice it at the expense of most estimable gentlemen who are Members of this Congress, and who would receive the favor, apparently, of the Speaker of the House as the representative of the majority. Speaking for myself personally, and not attempting to represent the minority, I protest against this plan proposed by the Democrats in the closing hours of this Congress, when you are soon to become the minority party, in attempting to put through a plan that will permit the taking care of a dozen or 15 of your own Members on these commissions, to be paid salaries from the Treasury, and I trust that my amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will realize that I have been a party to no such plan. I stated in the beginning that I thought the membership of this commission ought to be composed of Members of the next Congress. My only desire is that if they do become members of this commission, and should for any reason not be Members of the succeeding Congress, their work should go on and should not be interrupted by losing membership on the commission. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment, and I want to repeat that there is nothing that can be done by this Congress in the way of appointment to office that I would accept under any conditions.

Mr. WALSH. I am simply trying to second the sentiments of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, who has stated here that if it were permissible under this amendment he would not accept a position on this commission, but I doubt not that others could be found upon that side who will not be in the next Congress who would be willing to accept such an appointment. I trust my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to get a few facts in relation to a national budget system into the RECORD, and I ask now unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks therein.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that by an act of appropriation of June 25, 1910, there was made available $100,000—to enable the President, by the employment of accountants and experts * * * to more effectively inquire into the methods of transacting the public business * * * with a view of inaugurating new or changing old methods * * * so as to attain greater efficiency and economy therein, and to ascertain and recommend to Congress what changes in law may be necessary to carry into effect such results of his inquiry as can not be carried into effect by Executive action alone.

As I understand it, after that $100,000 had been used up a request was made for an additional appropriation of $250,000, and upon that request Congress appropriated $75,000 more, making a total expenditure in the premises of $175,000.

The commission that was created pursuant to the authority of Congress and during the administration of President Taft was called the Commission on Economy and Efficiency and made extended investigations and a detailed report on "The Need for a National Budget."

The report and recommendations of the commission and the messages of President Taft to the Congress in relation thereto during the second session of the Sixty-second Congress can be found in Document No. 854 of the House of Representatives and in Senate Document No. 1113. These two documents contain nearly 1,000 pages of printed matter.

It has been suggested upon the floor of the House that the members of that commission were not efficient, and that their extended report is not of much value. I have examined the report and, in my judgment, the report is of very material value and shows a vast amount of painstaking investigation and industry upon the part of the members of the commission.

In relation thereto President Taft, in a message to the Congress on June 27, 1912, said, in part:

I send herewith the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency on The Need for a National Budget. The recommendations contained therein are approved by me. I recommend to the Congress the enactment of the legislation necessary to put them into effect.

President Taft further said:

Regular committees on expenditure have been established by the Congress for the purpose of obtaining knowledge of conditions through special investigations. During the last century over 100 special congressional investigations have been authorized to obtain information which should have been regularly submitted, and much money, as well as much time, has been spent by the Congress in its effort to obtain information about matters that should be laid before them as an open book; many statutes have been passed governing the manner in which reports of expenditures shall be made; specific rules have been laid down giving the manner in which estimates shall be submitted to the Congress and considered by it. From time to time special investigations have been made by heads of executive departments. During the last century many such investigations have been carried on, and much money has been spent in the conduct of them, as well as by the Congress, for the purpose of obtaining facts as a basis for intelligent consideration of methods and procedure of doing business with a view to increasing economy and efficiency. From time to time Executive orders have been issued, and reorganizations have taken place.

Generally speaking, however, the only conclusions which may be reached from all of this are that—

No regular or systematic means has been provided for the consideration of the detail and concrete problems of the Government.

A well-defined business or work program for the Government has not been evolved.

The reports of expenditures required by law are unsystematic, lack uniformity of classification, and are incapable of being summarized so as to give to the Congress, to the President, or to the people a picture of what has been done and of cost in terms either of economy of purchase or efficiency of organization in obtaining results.

President Taft, in concluding his message, further said:

The purpose of the report which is submitted is to suggest a method whereby the President, as the constitutional head of the administration, may lay before the Congress, and the Congress may consider and act on, a definite business and financial program; to have the expenditures, appropriations, and estimates so classified and summarized that their broad significance may be readily understood; to provide each Member of Congress, as well as each citizen who is interested, with such data pertaining to each subject of interest that it may be considered in relation to each question of policy which should be gone into before an appropriation for expenditures is made; to have these general summaries supported by such detail information as is necessary to consider the economy and efficiency with which business has been transacted; in short, to suggest a plan whereby the President and the Congress may cooperate—the one in laying before the Congress and the country a clearly expressed administrative program to be acted on; the other in laying before the President a definite enactment to be acted on by him.

Included in this report are summaries of expenditures for the year 1911, summaries of appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and summaries of estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1913. To these summaries your special attention is invited. Attached is also an appendix containing a digest of laws pertaining to appropriations and allotments, to the preparation of estimates, and to forms of reporting expenditures; also the suggested pro forma draft of budget, which has been prepared by the commission and is submitted for your consideration as a matter bearing very directly on the economy and efficiency with which Government business is carried on.

That message was sent to the Congress nearly seven years ago. The Democratic administration that came into power shortly afterwards, as I am informed, starved the Commission on Economy and Efficiency to death. I am strongly in favor of a national budget system. I am in favor of it now, and while I do not wish to question the good faith of any Member of the House or of anybody else, nor to impugn the motive of any Member, yet I say that, after the Democratic administration has let this proposition sleep for seven years, I am not in favor of a proposition now that will put it to sleep for the next quarter of a century.

I want to do something in the public interest. I want drastic retrenchment in public expenditures. I want the Government to do business in a businesslike way. What I say is that we ought to get at this proposition now and show the country that we mean to do something. You can not make me believe that the adoption of a national budget system is too complex a problem for us to solve.

We all know that we can do much to improve the situation. I am not in favor, for instance, of the Committee on Indian Affairs appropriating money; I am not in favor of the Committee on Agriculture appropriating money; we can even through ourselves do much toward bringing about a practical budget system, such as was indicated in the resolution introduced in the House by Representative Fitzgerald, of New York, in September, 1917.

In the public interest and for economy and efficiency we should have, in my judgment, only one committee of the House making appropriations of public funds. Who of my colleagues are in favor of such a proposition? If any of them are, let them speak out. I am gratified to see that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is. I know that he is sincere. I want to help him, but I want to call the bluff that is now under consideration in the form of the pending amendment. I do not like the idea of canning the creation of a national budget system for years to come. I do not like camouflaging the public. We owe it to ourselves to show the public by prompt action that we are in earnest.

We can do something else through ourselves. We have in the House 9 or 10 departmental expenditure committees. I do not speak in a spirit of criticism, but I feel that I must say that they are nothing more or less than ornamental barnacles. Who of my colleagues are in favor of doing away with these department expenditure committees and of creating in their place a great committee on "national expenditures" or on "public accounts," fashioned after the great committee on public accounts in the House of Commons, due to the advocacy of Mr. Gladstone? If any of them are, let them speak out.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

Mr. MAGEE. I have only a few minutes, and I want to get some facts into the RECORD. I will say that I am going to demand of my own party, as I have demanded of the majority party here in the House, that ornamental barnacles be abolished, that the patronage connected therewith be eliminated, and that we go on and do business in the House with some degree of efficiency and economy.

I think that we ought to provide in the pending amendment that the commission to be appointed thereunder shall make a report to the Congress within 60 days after the convening of the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress. I am heart and soul against telling the American people, who are demanding economy in public expenditures, who have been demanding for generations a national budget system, that we are not going to do anything in the matter and that we are going back and begin again where we left off in June, 1912. I feel that we have sufficient ability and intelligence in the Congress to solve the problem. At least we should be given the opportunity, and if it shall develop that we have not brains enough to do it, then will be the time to create another commission and to waste $100,000 more in camouflaging the public. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I should hope that any commission appointed that was really serious in its work, and I hope no other kind will be appointed, will be able to report on a number of matters within 60 days after the next session of Congress meets. Whether they can make a complete report, I question. I think it is desirable that the Congress instead of undertaking to get the result of the report to which the gentleman referred—a proposition so revolutionary we never could deal with it—get from this commission a report as to concrete things from time to time, and that is the reason I provided that it should have the right to report at any time with the idea that it might come in with specific recommendations that could be taken up and put into actual law. I do not want this thing to drift indefinitely. The war prevented me from making a further movement in regard to it because that prevented everything except the prosecution of the war. I made the hardest fight I ever made on the floor in reference to it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAGEE. I am very glad to hear the distinguished gentleman make that statement.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. FESS. I will offer an amendment to the amendment, then.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggest if the amendment is not in order at this time that it be read for information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the Clerk read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the words "at such early date as may be practicable" and insert in lieu thereof the words "by the 4th of March, 1920," so that the line as amended will read:

"The commission shall report by bill or otherwise to the two Houses of Congress with any recommendation it shall choose to make on the 4th day of March, 1920, and shall have the right to report at any time."

Mr. WALSH. Of course that is not in order at this time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, this is not an amendment to the gentleman's amendment, but it is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. This whole proposition is an amendment.

Mr. FESS. Is the whole matter an amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio after the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is voted upon it will be in order for him to offer his amendment.

Mr. FESS. I accept the correction; I was not aware that the whole language was an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio is not now in order.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I agree very greatly with what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has said in regard to the abuses of the appointing power to give places to those who are not to be Members of the next Congress who might be termed "lame ducks." At the same time I doubt very much the wisdom, notwithstanding the force of the argument, drawn from the history of the last few years to put such a matter as law. For that reason I am rather afraid to support his amendment for fear there is more harm in it than good. I just arose to comment briefly on what the gentleman from New York has said, that this commission of economy and efficiency having done a wonderful work in a report of very exhaustive character seems to have gone into decay; nothing has come from the work it did. That leaves him the fear, and I partly share it, that the same thing might occur with this movement. However, if we put the provision in that there shall be a report either in the form of a bill or otherwise not later than a certain date, it seems to me we will keep alive the proposition.

I think there is no movement before the country so important as this one. I know this is a step in the direction that we want to reach ultimately. I remember with great sensitiveness of a colloquy that was held on the floor of the House on February 11, 1915, in which I figured, when I was urging the adoption of a budget system, and which was commented upon with considerable vigor by the gentleman from New York, Mr. Fitzgerald, then the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader. I got at that time the opinion as to the extreme difficulty in making any changes in the machinery of the Government. We hold with much tenacity to a thing that already is, simply because it is, and we proceed with such caution to a suggestion of any change because we do not know just where the change is leading. Whether a budget system like the English system will ever be engrafted upon our Government or not we do not know, and I care very little whether it will be in that form or not, but we certainly must have a system whereby the auditing is not done by the departments that do the spending. I think everybody will agree to that. We need a change here, and whether it will be in this form or that we can not say; but this commission is given the authority to make investigations, and if we will set the time for the report I think we are assured of the adoption of some more modern system. For that reason I sincerely hope that this step, especially from the standpoint of the Republican side of the House, will be taken, with the assurance that more economy can be exercised, that less extravagance will be had, and a better estimate can be made, and a surer responsibility established, because we can not do it when there are 13 committees, each one rivaling the other to get money out of the Treasury of the Government. This move for the establishment of a budget, if a time is fixed when it can report, will certainly result in a good reform. And I hope it will be granted.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is not a question of whether or not we think this reform desirable. In my judgment it is absolutely imperative. Every day that passes in which we do not take some step toward the securing of a reform in our methods of appropriation is a reflection upon this body.

I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I would be glad if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] could be made a member of that commission. I think there is not a man on the floor of this House that would not vote to name him as the chairman of it. I know I would be very glad, indeed, to do so. However, unfortunately for us, he peremptorily declines the consideration of his name.

I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to this fact, that this is in its essence a reform of the rules of the House. The next Congress should do this. It is their business. It is their duty. Among the revisions of the rules that it will present this should be one. And I quite agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE], who says it ought to be done within 60 days after the convening of Congress. And I quite agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who said that at least a preliminary report could be made by that time.

Gentlemen, I presume that we ought not to expect a complete and a revolutionary reform—a system for the purpose of accomplishing the objects that we desire. Probably that could not be done, in the first place, because of the fact that there would be opposition to it in the House; in the second place, because of the fact that we could not, at a blow, strike off the completed system. Perhaps it is better for us that we should take our steps slowly. But there are some things that we can remedy. There are some changes in the rules of the House that we can and ought to make, and ought to make soon. We ought not to allow this next Congress, this next session of this next Congress, to pass without taking some steps in that direction. I am very glad, indeed, to know that men on the Democratic side of the House are as anxious, perhaps, as we are to secure this reform. We realize that during these war days there has been some excuse, perhaps, for not taking some steps. However, that time now has passed when any further excuse can be offered for our not taking some action in regard to this. The gentleman knows that the business interests of this country demand that such action shall be taken. The gentlemen here know that they expect the next Congress to do this. If the Republican Congress shall not do it, it will not be meeting the expectations of the business men of this country. It will not be doing its duty, because these tremendous appropriations that we are called upon to consider and which are presented to us can not be intelligently considered, not through any fault of the appropriation committees, but because of the faults of the system itself. These appropriations can not be correlated. The appropriations being made in three different departments for aeronautics is an example of the defects of the system. These matters ought to be budgeted, perhaps not by an elaborate system such as the English system, but the estimates given by the different members of the Cabinet ought to be revised by some other committee and presented, with their report, to the House for consideration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time allotted for debate on the amendment has expired.

The question now arises on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], which for the information of the committee the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Ohio desires to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] desire to offer his amendment?

Mr. FESS. I do.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FESS: Page 2, line 9, strike out the words "at such early date as may be practicable" and insert in lieu thereof "by the 4th of March, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report to the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TOWNER: Page 2, line 9, of the Sherley amendment, after the word "make," strike out the words "at such early date as may be practicable" and insert the following: "within 60 days after the convening of the Sixty-sixth Congress."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire only to suggest——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, has not the debate been closed?

The CHAIRMAN. By previous order all debate has been closed.

Mr. TOWNER. I beg the pardon of the Chair. That was on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and not all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair was that the request of the gentleman from Kentucky was that debate on all amendments was to be concluded within 25 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the Chair is mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. I think not. The Chair stated plainly that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto was to be closed within 25 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. That was the Sherley amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. On this amendment which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] offered and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 32.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], as amended by the committee.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow of WILLIAM P. BORLAND, late a Representative from the State of Missouri, $7,500.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Have lines 9 to 14 been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I think only the words on line 8 were read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk tells the Chair that the amendment was marked to be presented at the end of line 14, and that all previous lines had been read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 37, after line 17, insert: "To pay ALBERT JOHNSON, for salary, $1,442.98, for clerk hire, $333.32; TOM CONNALLY, for clerk hire, $393.92; CARL HAYDEN, for salary, $1,176.37, for clerk hire, $333.32; FIORELLA H. LAGUARDIA, for salary, $9,486.31, for clerk hire, $1,666.60; VICTOR HEINTZ, for salary, $10,583.90, for clerk hire, $1,992.92; ROYAL C. JOHNSON, for salary, $7,171.23, for clerk hire, $999.92: Provided, That there shall be deducted from such amounts any money received by any of the above named as compensation for service in the Army during the present emergency, and the affidavits of the above-named persons shall be accepted as proof as to whether or not any such payments have been received by them. In all, $35,593.79."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order, I desire simply to say this: I shall not make the point of order because it is a matter that relates to the membership of the House, and so far as the House is concerned the membership of the House ought to have an opportunity to express its desire in connection with the amendment that the gentleman from Illinois has offered.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will withdraw it personally.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment speaks for itself. I think all gentlemen understand what the purpose is. The amounts provided have been carefully checked up by the Sergeant at Arms and the Clerk of the House. They are the amounts which would be due if the certificates of attendance and pay by the Sergeant at Arms, as far as salaries are concerned, had been made out. The Speaker had indicated his willingness to sign the certificates, but there is some question as to asking the Sergeant at Arms to pay the money, he being under bond, and it seemed desirable to make provision for it directly, so that there would be no individual responsible.

Mr. WELLING. Has the gentleman included the names of all of those who entered the military service during the war?

Mr. MANN. I endeavored to.

Mr. WELLING. I understood that Mr. JONES of Texas entered the service. I listened attentively to the reading, but I understood it was not included.

Mr. SANFORD. The gentleman's name was eliminated at his own request.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] prepared this amendment and went over the matter with the Sergeant at Arms and with the Clerk and with the various Members, or most of them, at least, whose names are mentioned. I do not think it is a desirable thing to discuss on the floor of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No. It is a most embarrassing thing to be put up to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement to the official stenographers to committees for moneys actually and necessarily expended by them from July 1, 1918, to March 4, 1919, $650 each, $2,600.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I do so for the purpose of inquiring with reference to the item at the top of page 38, as to this $650 each, paid out by stenographers to committees.

Mr. SHERLEY. The stenographers to committees hire their transcribers, and the Congress reimburses them for their actual expenses which they certify they have paid for transcribing the testimony.

Mr. WALSH. Then the situation is that the persons who transcribe the proceedings of the House as taken by the Official Reporters of debates are on the roll, but the persons who transcribe the hearings before committees are not?

Mr. SHERLEY. I believe that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GALLIVAN having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the heads of the several executive departments and other responsible officials, in expending appropriations contained in this or any other act, so far as possible shall purchase material, supplies, and equipment, when needed and funds are available, from other services of the Government possessing material, supplies, and equipment no longer required because of the cessation of war activities. It shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments and other officials, before purchasing any of the articles described herein, to ascertain from the other services of the Government whether they have articles of the character described that are serviceable. And articles purchased by one service from another, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. The various services of the Government are authorized to sell such articles under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to amend, alter, or repeal the Executive order of December 3, 1918, concerning the transfer of office material, supplies, and equipment in the District of Columbia falling into disuse because of the cessation of war activities.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I offer it as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 49, after line 3, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for any personal services or to pay for any advertisement, telegram, letter, or circular designed to defeat or enact any proposed legislation of Congress, or to influence any Member of Congress to vote on any appropriation unless specifically authorized."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think a great injustice has grown up in some of the executive departments of the Government in sending out telegrams to various organizations throughout the United States requesting them to wire Members of Congress to vote for or against certain measures or to vote certain appropriations. I do not know what the expenditures would amount to for this kind of propaganda, but it runs into thousands of dollars. I know that there has never been any appropriation from which these expenses might legally be paid. I also know that the Committee on Appropriations a few days ago received telegrams by the thousands that were actuated solely by telegrams sent out from the Department of Labor at Government expense. No appropriation has ever been made for such purpose. A few months ago the Members were also deluged with telegrams and letters that had their origin in the Department of Education, all on behalf of certain legislation and increased appropriations. Now, it seems to me that that is not the duty or the part of any Government official, who is appointed to enforce the provisions of the law, so far as they relate to his office, to engage in propaganda of this kind.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I do.

Mr. BAER. There is another department here that is sending men all through the country talking to presidents of colleges and professors, and having meetings, and talking to ministers, and then they are writing back to us sending resolutions. They are lobbying through the whole country and then coming back here to lobby.

Mr. GOOD. This amendment would absolutely put a stop to that practice, so far as the funds carried in this bill are concerned. Of course, they ought not to be permitted to spend the money of the people in this way. Congress ought to say, and it does attempt to specify, the purposes for which appropriations shall be expended, and it ought not to be necessary to pass amendments of this kind. It ought not to be within the power of any official to take money out of the Treasury that Congress has appropriated for legitimate purposes and use it to carry on propaganda of this kind. The real fact is that the amendment ought to apply not only to the moneys carried in this bill but in all other bills. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered. During the past week I have received telegrams and communications from various labor organizations and chambers of commerce in my district urging me to support an amendment which will be offered to the sundry civil bill to continue and make permanent the employment service. The propaganda was so general that I sent an inquiry to my district to find out where it came from and what was its source. Much to my surprise I learned that the editor of the Employment Service Bulletin, published here in Washington, a Government official, had sent out at Government expense telegrams to every labor union and labor organization in my district and to every chamber of commerce in my district, urging them to wire their Senators and their Representative to see that this public-service employment was made permanent. I take it that it is beyond the scope of employment and duty of any Government official here in Washington to take upon himself the distribution of that kind of propaganda to influence legislation.

Mr. GARNER. Especially at Government expense.
